What is regeneration? Regeneration is a new birth—that work of the Holy Spirit by which we experience a change of heart. It is expressed in Scripture by being born again, born from above, being quickened, by Christ being formed in the heart, by our partaking of the divine nature. The efficient cause of regeneration is the Divine Spirit. The instrumental cause is the word of God. The change in regeneration consists in the recovery of the moral image of God upon the heart—that is to say, so as to love him supremely, and serve him ultimately as our highest end, and to delight in him superlatively as our chief good. In a word, it is faith working by love that constitutes the new creature, the regenerate man. And when this great change takes place the man knows that he is "passed from death unto life" as certainly as he knows that he is a living man. But how does he know it? He knows it by the witness of God's Spirit, bearing witness with his spirit that he is born of God; that he is an heir of God, and a joint heir with Jesus Christ to an inheritance that is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, eternal in the heavens, where his forerunner is gone to prepare a place for him; and a knowledge of this, revealed to him by the Holy Ghost, produces a peace with God and peace in his own soul, and love to God and joy in the Holy Ghost, that the natural man knows nothing of. Without this knowledge no man on earth can be a happy man. Believing that there is a God will not make him happy. Believing that the Bible is a revelation of God's will to man will not make him happy. Believing in the Christian religion will not make him happy. Going to church will not make him happy. Joining church will not make him happy. Being baptized will not make him happy. Taking the sacrament of the Lord's Supper will not make him happy. Magnificent churches will not make him happy. Fine preachers and fine preaching will not make him happy. Fine praying and singing, and the finest kind of instrumental music will not make him happy. In a word, all the praise of the world, all the wisdom of the world, all the honor of the world and all the riches of the world cannot make the sinner happy; because the wrath of God abideth on him, and he cannot be happy so long as he is a sinner, and he must have a knowledge of his sins being forgiven before he can be a really happy man. A hope that he has religion will not make him happy, unless that hope is based upon the knowledge of "Christ in him the hope of glory." Without this knowledge his hope of glory is a vain hope, because it does not rest on a knowledge of an indwelling Christ, the only foundation on which the sure and true Christian hope of heaven can rest. Here, we fear, many precious and immortal souls are deceived, and will be lost. They suppose hope and knowledge to mean the same thing, and use them as synonomous terms; and when they are asked if they enjoy religion they answer: "I hope I do." Well, what is hope? It is said to be "the expectation of some good; to live in expectation of some good; to expect with desire." Hence, you see, a thing hoped for is a thing you have not got; it is something in the future you desire and expect, but you are not in possession of it. For illustration, I say to you I will give you a thousand dollars to-morrow at noon; if you will come to my house precisely at that hour. You expect to get the money, because I have promised it, and you know me to be a man of truth. This is faith. You desire to get it because you need it. This is hope. You come at the appointed time and receive it. This is knowledge. You know you have got the money; you are as certain of it as you are that two and two make four. This is demonstration. Faith believes you will get the money; hope desires to get it; knowledge knows you have got it, and this is demonstration. So, likewise, in the case of the penitent sinner—he believes God has promised to pardon his sins; he hopes he will do it, and when he does it the sinner knows it is done; he is as certain of it as he is that he breathes the air. And without this knowledge no man on earth can be happy. Reader, have you got it? If not, you are not a happy man.

WAYNESBORO, Feb. 15, 1872.

"By Their Fruits Shall You Know Them."

How full of meaning these words of our Savior—"By their fruits shall you know them!" Do we consider their full significance? Do we take them into our lives? Are we known by our fruits? How many of us could hold up holy hands? Ah! we depend too much upon the Lord! Lord! We sit down selfishly musing on our "peace that passeth knowledge," instead of diffusing its light and warmth to those around us. Yet we hope we are Christians. We say we have no talents for such things, we will let others work while we pray for their success in secret, as the Father commanded us. Yes, he said that we should pray and do our alms in secret; but he also said: "By your fruits ye shall be known." Are we at a loss to harmonize these seemingly conflicting words? Let us remember that he meant us to be silent, humble workers, not to sit with folded hands and expect work to come to us. We all cherish a desire to leave our "footprints on the sands," but how to go about it is the question. Well, let us consider it a while.

Some of us are too poor to expend sums in charities; but we can all use those sweet little charities that money cannot buy—a kind word, a glance of sympathy, a self-denying action, every opportunity grasped to speak a word for Jesus in the Sunday school, where little minds can be trained to future usefulness. We may be too reserved, too reticent to speak our heart-yearnings. We can make the home circle happy, we can perform cheerfully, contentedly, all its duties, however irksome; we can perform a great many acts of self-denial that the world, perhaps the one we are exerting it for, may never know; but God will, and he will bless our endeavors. For instance, laying aside some pleasant occupation to listen to and sympathize with others' sorrows, or to perform some service for another; this requires self-denial, and a great deal, because no one but ourself knows it, and therefore vanity can have no part in it. Other acts of self overcome could be enumerated, such as some cherished article given up that it may benefit others, the gratification of our desires for something we have wished denied, and others' wishes and needs attended to; giving a soft answer when we feel like indulging in passion. All these, if done for the Savior's sake, that others may be influenced by a consistent example, can make our lives truly noble.

Again, our hearts may be bleeding with sorrow and trial; we may feel like doing nothing but brooding over our troubles. In laying all our distresses on the altar of faith, and giving our attention to all the details of every-day life, however trivial; grasping all its opportunities; in suppressing yearnings for a higher, nobler sphere, because circumstances will not allow them to be cultivated; to turn to the present work with all our energy, be it ever so commonplace, we can bear a life of perfect fruitage to the Savior.

LITTLE BEVERLY.

CHRISTIAN FORTITUDE.

Every vocation in life demands a degree of fortitude commensurate with its mission. The natural frailty and inefficiency of our moral and religious susceptibilities assure us of this fact. Amidst the varied and perplexing duties of life we need the sustaining, strengthening power and influence of Christian philosophy. It is the stay and support of our faith, an essential element, yea, an indispensable ingredient of Christian character, the active governing principle of that pure and elevated piety which softens the callous heart, nerves it against temptation, makes us bold and fearless in the fulfillment of duty, and gives beauty and utility to Christian virtues. As an incentive to duty it nourishes faith, gives impetus and energy to effort with ability to resist and overcome the tendency of those emotions which are superinduced by the seductions of worldly lust, those passions which stultify our reason, entice us from the path of rectitude, and deepen and widen at every step the sluices of iniquity. Is there a Christian who does not witness with pain and displeasure the bitterness of revenge, the unyielding, grasping selfishness of avarice, the gnawings of envy, the wasting of health and happiness from licentiousness, the scorching, withering blasts of anger, the remorseless, unfeeling air of cruelty or unkindness, or, it may be, the pinchings of want, as the result of indolence or prodigality?

May we not ask, What is a profession of Christianity without fortitude? But an empty sound, a sickly dwarf, having neither root nor nourishment, a building without foundation, a tree possessing no fruit, a hope which vanishes with the morning mist, and alas! a victim to the wantonness of fiction, which must sooner or later wither and decay.

LAYMAN.

Bible Anniversary, Livingston, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: I am instructed by the Executive Committee of the Livingston Bible Society to forward the following report to you, with a request for its publication in the ADVOCATE. I hope you will favor us by complying with this request; for while this is not a matter of strictly denominational interest to us as Methodists, yet it is one in which all Methodists and all Christians feel a high degree of interest, and it is a pleasant reflection to us that in the work of distributing the Holy Bible among all classes of the people we are, as a church, not behind the most zealous.

The anniversary meeting of the Livingston Bible Society was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church South on Sunday night, the fourth ultimo. Rev. S. P. Richardson, the energetic general agent of the American Bible Society, was present and addressed the meeting, setting forth the object and design of this organization, and giving some interesting information with regard to the progress of the Bible work in Alabama. The meeting was also ably addressed by Rev. J. S. Frierson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church.

From the report of the treasurer it was shown that during the past year the Livingston Bible Society, in connection with the Gainesville Bible Society, has had a colporteur canvassing the county, and that he had supplied about eight hundred families with the Bible. There is about one-half of this (Sumter) county which has not been canvassed. A collection was taken up to raise funds for carrying on the work, and $134 were raised.

An election for officers being held, resulted as follows: Rev. J. S. Frierson, president; William G. Little, Jr., vice president; S. H. Sprott, secretary; Dr. M. C. Kinnard, treasurer.

A meeting of the Executive Committee was called for ten o'clock A. M. on Monday, and it being late, the anniversary meeting adjourned with prayer by Rev. J. M. Mason.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee it was resolved to canvass the remainder of the county with a view to supplying the destitution of the word of God; and in order to secure the co-operation of the people of the whole county, the following gentlemen were requested to make Bible addresses on the first Sunday in March, at the places opposite their respective names: Hon. J. Cobbs, Cuba; S. H. Sprott, Esq., Chestnut Grove; Rev. B. Hawkins, Coke's chapel; T. Cobbs, Esq., York; W. G. Little, Esq., Brewerville; Major J. G. Harris, Belmont; Dr. M. C. Kinnard, Payneville; Rev. J. Henry Hendon, Sumterville.

Rev. J. S. Frierson was requested to make a Bible address at Elizabeth church, Rev. J. M. Mason at Lewis' school house, and Rev. A. R. Scarbrough at Mount Hermon and New Prospect, at an early day.

It affords me pleasure to inform you that Christians of every denomination, and many well-disposed persons not connected with the church, are co-operating in this good work. May we soon see the fruit of our labors in a diminution of crime and lawlessness, and a revival of spiritual grace and power in the church.

Truly yours, J. M. MASON.

P. S.—My charge is in very good condition. My predecessor, Rev. C. B. DuBose, finished his work up well, and transferred the charge to me in healthy condition and good working order. For their kindness to me and my family we are much indebted to the members of the church and other friends, who have put the parsonage in good repair and supplied all our wants. We have some indications, in the prayer and class meetings, which lead us to anticipate a revival whenever we are prepared to put forth the effort.

Yours, etc., J. M. M.

To the Society of Alumni of the Southern University.

GENTLEMEN: Some of you who were present at our commencement last July will remember that at a meeting then held we determined to establish an alumni professorship as soon as possible, with the view of ultimately endowing the same. The intention is to place a professor in some chair of the University, and for the present to pay his salary. When we are more able we expect to raise the endowment fund.

My object in calling your attention to the above resolution is to enlist your sympathies in the undertaking, and prepare you for a further consideration of the subject at our annual session next July.

The importance of a full attendance is apparent. We need your counsel, your votes, and especially your money. It will not at all be a burden upon the members, as some might suppose. There are a sufficient number of us to render it an easy matter for us to raise $1,200. Some of us can easily give $50 annually, and perhaps more. Of these we have only to ask: Will you give it? For others who cannot give anything, or little, we ask: Can you not raise something? Many will help us. Two gentlemen promised the writer to give $25 annually. It is easy for others to do likewise. If the alumni will each assume an indebtedness of $20 or $25—making this the average—we will have little difficulty in raising the necessary amount.

Now that the University has an increasing patronage, and prospects so flattering, let us, her sons, contribute our share in securing to our younger brothers the greatest possible advantage. It is scarcely necessary to argue as to the great importance of some such provision, and to liberal minds its feasibility is apparent. The very liberal and generous provision made by the University for young ministers, and for the sons of ministers, increases the burden of the professors now engaged there. When the patronage increases so as to demand another professor, they will probably not be able to give him sufficient salary unless the endowment proportionally increases, because of the large proportion of students attending lectures who pay no tuition. As there are a number of us who have been thus fostered, we owe a debt of gratitude to the mother that nourished us which we cannot repay in kind, and of which we can scarcely show our appreciation by strengthening her for enlarged usefulness. Let us discharge this debt in a creditable manner. Let every one be present at the next commencement. ALUMNUS.

GOOD DEEDS.—Good deeds are very fruitful; for out of one good action of ours, God produces a thousand, the harvest whereof is perpetual. Even the faithful actions of the old patriarchs, the constant suffering of ancient martyrs, live still, and do good to all successions of ages by their example; for public actions of virtue, beside that they are presently comfortable to the doer, are also exemplary to others; and as they are more beneficial to others, are more crowned in us. If good deeds were utterly barren and incommodious, I would seek after them for the consciousness of their own goodness; how much more shall I now be encouraged to perform them, for that they are so profitable to myself and others, and to myself in others.

LOCAL PREACHERS.

The London Watchman (Wesleyan) gives a full report of Rev. Mr. Arthur's late address to the Methodist local preachers. Here is an extract:

"Local preaching we look upon not merely as an outgrowth of spiritual life, but also as the great and the only legitimate training-ground for the ministry. Of all preposterous things—using that word in the strict sense of putting the after thing before, and the before thing after—nothing can be more preposterous than putting ordination first; and the trial—whether a man can do the work of the ministry—second. But I see no hope for any alternative in any church where you have not faith in a spiritual laity—faith in the presence of the converting power of the Holy Ghost to raise up, in succession, spiritual men to do God's work. If you are first to have the proof that a man is fit to be a minister, and then ordain him, you must have lay laborers. * * * Many persons, who are very willing that the laity should have a great deal to do with the secularities of the church—to do anything they can in church building, or in raising money, or in relieving the poor—say: 'I cannot understand how a layman is to give you spiritual advice, and how a layman is really to undertake to pray with you if you are in distress, and point you to Christ, or give you counsel in finding absolution from sin, or in any of those other great and deep questions of the soul.' Now I believe if there is anything miserable in the thought of being a Christian minister, it ought to be in the conception of the office as involving a monopoly of spiritual gifts—to stand alone invested with spiritual power, and looking out upon the whole of the people, to say they are merely to be recipients, and not to be fellow-helpers one with another. That to me is a most miserable and lean conception of the office of the Christian minister. How infinitely better that there should be men and women anointed with the spirit of prayer, gifted with the gift of faith, blessed with power to work, and speak, and think for God! * * * Speaking of the inherent energy of the church, and of the future that is before the church, where a number of men are found under the influence and teaching of the Spirit, each one endeavoring to do what he can in the name of the Lord, there will come out the remark of the old woman, 'The Lord is working for that man,' while the old men say, 'If that lad keeps humble, he will have a bright crown.' For my own part, I would give a great deal more for that spirit-talk than for any academicals. * * * It is in the conversion of souls that we find the credentials—the credentials that a man has the gifts of the Spirit, and that God works with him. The Methodist plan is the scriptural plan—training for the work is training in the work."

COURAGE AT THE LAST.

The excellent Sir William Forbes, the biographer of Beattie, uttered this: "Tell those," said he, "that are drawing down to the bed of death, from my experience, that it has no terrors; that in the hour when it is most wanted, there is mercy with the Most High; and that some change takes place which fits the soul to meet its God." When the loyal Earl of Derby came to his execution, although he had said, in previous times, that he could die in fight, but knew not how it might be on the scaffold, he now said that he could lay his head on the block as cheerfully as on his pillow. "Let my people know," said the pious Archdeacon Aylmor, "that their pastor died undaunted, and not afraid of death. I bless my God that I have no fear, no doubt, no reluctation, but an assured confidence in the sin-overcoming merits of Jesus Christ." So said President Finley: "Give my love to the people of Princeton; tell them that I am going to die, and that I am not afraid of death." "Oh, do not fear to die," said Mrs. East, in dying; "you will find the word of God sure; all will be fulfilled, and you will find it so." These were the words of Haliburton: "I, a poor, weak, timorous man, once as much afraid of death as any—I, that have been many years under the terror of death—come now, in the mercy of God, and by the power of his grace, composedly and with joy to look death in the face." It often appears that exactly those from whom constitutional courage or philosophic firmness could least be expected, go down to the valley of death with most complete triumph over their past apprehensions. In the recollections of many, some such example of a dying friend will occur with convincing power and tenderness. They tell us that this absence of fear is no fruit of nature, of habit, or of strenuous effort; but the gift of him who gave to death its terrors when he made it the door of sin, and who takes those terrors away when sin is blotted out through the blood of the Lamb.—George Burgess.

For the Advocate.

"THE heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handy work. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."—Psalms xix, 1, 2.

The glowing sun, the king of day,
Sends forth his beams of light,
Gladdens the earth with brilliant ray,
Dispels the gloom of night;
With silent speech, in language clear,
He utters forth his voice
In lines of praise that all may hear;
Let all the world rejoice.

The moon comes forth with silver light,
Cheering the earth with borrowed rays
In silence reigns as queen of night,
But loudly utters forth His praise.
The stars, with myriad sparkling eyes,
Look down on all below,
Illume the night from distant skies,
Their Maker's glory show.

The spangled heavens, in union sweet,
In glorious concert move;
In all the earth the words repeat:
"The Maker, God, is love." J. W. H.

THE MISSIONARIES OF TURKEY.

The Hon. Wayne McVeigh, late United States minister resident at Constantinople, in a public address at Westchester, Pennsylvania, recently paid the following tribute to the character of the missionaries from this country who have been laboring in the Turkish empire. We find his remarks reported in the Presbyterian:

"I must confess to you that the only source of hope, 'pure and undefiled,' which I found in the East, was in the contemplation of the noble work which is being done by the little band of our own Protestant missionaries in the Ottoman empire. Their endeavors to convert the adult population are, of course, praiseworthy in every sense; but I was compelled to attach far more importance to their efforts to secure control of the young by means of schools of all kinds, and colleges for more extended instruction, and stated gatherings for moral and religious teaching. All over that vast empire, from the Adriatic to the Euphrates, from the Danube to the Red sea, men and women of our blood are living heroic lives of denial and of sacrifice in order to win the children to Christ; and thus they are sowing everywhere the seed which he has graciously promised shall bear fruit, and ripen into the golden harvest of regenerated lives.

"I may not mention the names of these good people, but it was our privilege to see much of them, and to understand the purity of their purpose, and the generous zeal which characterizes their daily labors. It was very refreshing to find so many American men and women forgetting themselves, and putting all base and selfish aims beneath their feet, rising to the height of their great opportunity to regenerate the Orient by creating little centers from which will radiate, alike by precept and example, all good and saving influences, until, in the fullness of time, the kingdoms of this world shall, in truth, become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.

THE "BEST BRANDY."—It is a venerable story, but it may as well be told again. Somebody in Connecticut sold a bottle of the best brandy, and Prof. Silliman, of Yale College, having analyzed the same, finds in it alum, iron, sulphuric acid, essential oil of some kind, tannic acid, Guinea pepper, burnt sugar, lead and copper, with a basis of whisky. This is the delicious though somewhat miscellaneous mixture which, by the aid of a pretty label and a little sealing wax on the cork, passes for Old Hennessy, London Dock, Martel or Seignette brandy. The marvel is that it does not kill instantaneously the first deluded wretch who swallows a mouthful of it, and in some cases perhaps it would be better if it did. It seems to be about as well established as most things in this world, that nobody drinking spirits or wines can be sure of their purity. The imbiber opens his mouth and shuts his eyes, as the children do in the nursery play.

THE prehistoric remains of Sinai, Mr. Palmer's book informs us, resemble those of some regions in Europe—huge stone circles, like the "Druidical" circles of Britain, skeletons, charcoal, etc., indicating, he thinks, the "permanent camps of an ancient pastoral people." His pictures of the convent life are vivid, from the entrance—which was through a side door, and not, as formerly, by a rope let down from the window—to the closing lunch, when the vegetarian monks were beguiled by the persuasive odor of a "Liebig" soup. Notwithstanding his interest in ancient manuscripts, Mr. Palmer did not make any important discoveries in the library of the convent. Indeed, he thinks that the monks have become shy of unfolding their treasures since the Tischendorf Codex has attracted so much attention.

THEY that will not hear Christ say, "Come to me," in a day of grace, shall hear him say, "Depart from me," in the day of judgment.

AT THE FALLS.

BY CARL SPENCER.

All day through the cloven mountains,
Up a miracle-aisle we passed,
And we saw the stream transfigured
In the forest-shrine at last.
Down where the glen sinks deepest
Into the mountain's breast,
We looked up and beheld it,
High on the round world's crest—
When a vision white and whiter
Sprang over the arched steep;
It was spirit, it was not water,
Rose up from that fearful leap.
The pure spray bathed our faces,
And the tears for joy did well;
If in or out of the body,
I saw it, I cannot tell;
But I saw a clear soul leaping,
Shouting its last brave breath,
Dashed into glory and lightness,
On the sharp black rocks of death,
Lifting white hands of rapture,
Showering rainbow rays,
And making the Lord God gladder
With a great amen of praise!

FATHER TAYLOR.

The following characteristic anecdotes of the great sailor-preacher of Boston are culled from the "Incidents and Anecdotes" lately published:

Soon after he commenced his sermon, on a very hot day, two or three of the landsmen got up and went out. He paused, folded his arms, and said: "If any others wish to go out, let them go now, while I wait a moment." No one went, and he resumed his sermon. About ten minutes after a sailor rose up with his jacket on his arm (the most of the sailors were sitting in their shirt sleeves) and said: "Please, sir, I must go now; I wanted to stay as long as I could; my ship is all ready for sea, and I must be on board at the hour." Father Taylor, with the elbow of his right arm resting in the palm of his left hand, with his finger on his lip, said, as the sailor turned to leave the house: "That's right, my son! you have done just right; you are the man for me; you are a minute-man. Go, and the God of the sea go with you." And he continued his preaching with redoubled power. And, at the close, such a prayer was made for that sailor and that ship, and all sailors and all ships, that it seemed as if it would convert the abundance of the sea to God—and it will yet.

Andrew Newlands was a Swede, converted under Father Taylor at Bristol, and a member at the Bethel. He said: "I went to hear Brudder Taylor preach, and de Lord got hold of me. Brudder Thomas, he was from France, and I was from Sweden, and we diden get no relief dere, and we come home, and we went to pray; Brudder Thomas went at it in French, and I went at it in Swedish, and de Lord converted us both on the spot." "Well done, Old North of Europe!" breaks out Father Taylor; and that was his name unto this day. Telling this on another occasion, and saying, "The Lord heard us both," "Just like him," cries out the captain from his deck.

Father Taylor's ejaculations in prayer meeting were not always so flattering. Every one has heard of the wealthy gentleman, who, in the midst of a very warm meeting, made a speech, telling the sailors how much had been done for them, and how grateful they ought to be to the liberal merchants for all their goodness. As he sat down, with a feeling that the church would run itself for the year on this condescension, he was surprised by the inquiry: "Is there any other old sinner from up in town who would like to say a word before we go on with the meeting?"

Sometimes Father Taylor's mirthfulness led him to use expressions that seem out of place when repeated in cold blood, and especially when printed. But, in the warmth of a good prayer meeting, nothing seemed out of place that was seasoned with the love of man. Smiles and tears were wonderfully mingled at that altar. When the daughter of his esteemed friend, Mr. Pigeon, came forward for prayers, Father Taylor cried out: "Lord, sweep every squab off the roost."

A Mr. Snow, (not David Snow, Esq.,) not being very warm in his talk, the old father groans out: "O Lord! melt that Snow."

A colored brother, who was speaking ardently, drew out of him the response: "There is rain in that cloud."

After a brother from Plymouth, who was blessed with a red head, had made a very warm talk, the response came from the altar: "Well, I was not aware that that soil bore such red cedar."

A man by the name of Wood, who was not noted for his warmth in his talks, drew from Father Taylor the brief prayer: "O Lord! set fire to that Wood."

An old German saying he no more doubted his acceptance with God than that the sun shone at noonday on a cloudless sky, the old veteran exclaims: "Bring your Harvard learned ones to this man, and let them learn true theology."

At a Springfield Conference there had been a warm discussion on the propriety of publishing in "the minutes" the names of the donors to the missionary fund, together with the amount contributed by each. It had been advocated on the ground that it would increase our contributions, as all would wish to see their names in the list, and every name would have an influence for the following year. It was opposed, on the contrary, that those who could give but little would not like to see so small a sum attached to their names in print, and might be deterred from giving at all. Father Taylor had made one of his characteristic, pointed speeches upon ostentatious giving, closing with the injunction: "Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth." In reply, it was urged by Dr. Butler that it would be in opposition neither to the spirit nor the letter of Scripture to publish the names of these donors; citing, as an illustration in proof of this position, that Christ himself had made laudatory mention of the poor widow who had cast two mites into the treasury, saying she had done more than they all, for it was all her living; and that the gift of this woman had been published wherever the gospel had been preached, exerting in every land incalculable influence for generous and self-denying beneficence. The speaker, who had been really eloquent, had scarcely finished—he had not taken his seat—when Father Taylor, half rising and leaning forward, with a shrill voice, not loud, but perfectly audible in every part of the house, called out: "Will Dr. Butler please give us the name of that poor widow."

After a student had preached and had "a poor time," Father Taylor prayed, thanking the Lord for every sort of blessing, which he carefully enumerated, and concluding with: "And now, Lord, if it please thee, don't send us any more Wilbraham students!"

When the Ballardvale church was dedicated, Rev. Gershom F. Cox preached the sermon, on the subject, "One God and one Mediator." Father Taylor followed in prayer, thanking God for the second part of the sermon. "The first part," he said, "is unnecessary; for all know that there is a God. May God bless the second part to the congregation!"

"One Sunday he preached upon the atonement. His text was: 'Dead in trespasses and sins.' 'Dead!' he exclaimed; 'not only dead, but buried; and you can't get out! A big-bowldar lays on the main hatch, keeping it down over your heads. You may go to work with all your purchases—bars, handspikes, winch and double tackles; but you can't make it budge an inch. The beef isn't in you! But hark! who is it that has the watch on deck! Jesus Christ. Now, sing out to him, and sing out loud. Ah! he hears you; and he claps his shoulders against this rock of sin, casts it off the hatch, the bars fly open, and out you come.'"

Mr. Taylor was a keen politician—in his younger days, a Jeffersonian Democrat, made so by his ardent patriotism and by his experiences of a British jail; in later days he was a devoted Whig, an earnest admirer of Daniel Webster and his associates. When George N. Briggs was elected Governor, to succeed Marcus Morton, it became Father Taylor's duty to read Governor Morton's thanksgiving proclamation. As he read the concluding words, "God save the commonwealth of Massachusetts," he paused, and added: "He did that last Monday."

As a venerable and especially beloved friend, who relieved the vacant hours of a superannuated ministry with the cultivation of grapes, announced as his text, "I am the true vine," and began by saying, "There are some vines that will not bear good grapes," "That's so!" breaks in Father Taylor; "you sold me one of that sort."

Luther Translating the Bible.

A rare old picture bearing this inscription has just come under our notice, and it is so suggestive of the labor and conscientious care bestowed by Luther on his great life-work, that we feel disposed to linger and ponder over it.

It will be remembered that until the days of the great Reformer the Bible was a sealed book to the masses, as it was only couched in learned tongues. If the people heard even the least of it, this meager portion was read or chanted to them in Latin, of which they understood nothing. He was a man of the people, and saw that his work would be unfinished unless the seals were removed from the word of God. This labor he determined to perform, not even himself aware of the magnitude and the difficulty of the task.

The German language itself was then so crude, and subjected to so many dialects, that it was not equal to the great responsibility of conveying the holy writ to the people, and Luther needed at first to purge and enlarge it in order to raise it up to the measure of his wants. In this way he may be almost said to have created the high German tongue, as his work has ever since been the acknowledged standard of that idiom.

His first great trouble was to render thousands of peculiar and technical expressions of the Bible into the ordinary speech of the people, needing thus multitudes of words which he did not know himself in his native tongue. And in this task he went to work in a manner so practical as to astonish the common people and amuse his friends. One of the latter, calling on him one day, found him in his yard with his sleeves rolled up and his hands and arms all bloody. Beside him stood a butcher over a slaughtered sheep, dissecting it and telling him all the names of the different organs of the entrails and limbs. These were written down in Latin and German at Luther's dictation, and thus he procured his vocabulary for those portions of the Bible treating of the sacrifices.

"This," said Luther to his friends, "is the way in which I learn how the people talk, and I use this knowledge in my translation of the Bible. Thus I go into all the workshops, into the streets, and among the peasants, that I may beg my learning from the common people, and thus force the apostles and the prophets to speak such German that Huns or Gretchen may understand them." Luther generally spent his mornings in this way, studying up among the masses whatever subject he happened to be specially engaged in, and in the afternoon he held his "Learned Sanhedrim," as he jestingly called it.

This body met regularly in his study in the old St. Augustine church in Wittenberg, and this sacred chamber is still kept as nearly as possible in the same condition as it was then. As we wandered through it we thought almost to catch the Greek, Latin and Hebrew accents of the learned men there assembled in pious discussion over the meaning and mysteries of sacred writ. Its shelves were at that time covered with all sorts of implements and articles which Luther found it necessary to possess and study in connection with his co-workers, with a view to obtaining the appropriate names. When he came to the breastplate of the high priest, and the city of the New Jerusalem, he was greatly troubled to express the names of the precious stones. His friend, the elector of Saxony, helped him out of this embarrassment by lending him a valuable collection of jewels from his treasury, which were sent under guard on account of their value. When they arrived Luther sent for a Jew dealer in precious stones to give him the names in Hebrew and German.

The picture we allude to is a view of his "Sanhedrim" in session. A number of venerable men are gathered around a heavy oaken table, which is piled full of books. In the center sits Luther over his own translation, and Melancthon is looking over his shoulder, making some suggestion. At the end of the table sits Dr. Jonas, a learned theologian, and beside him a venerable Jewish rabbi, with long gray beard and cap. Leaning on Luther's arm, and gazing at the book, is the court preacher; at his side is Rorer, the erudite librarian of Jena; opposite him Aurogallus, professor of Hebrew at Wittenberg, and at the extreme end of the table, in a window-niche, for the sake of light, is another rabbi, with long white hair and beard, peering at his Hebrew text through an eye-glass.

Luther's own work is all covered with marginal notes; on one side of him is the Latin text on which Bugenhagen keeps his eye; on the other side is an open Hebrew Bible. Melancthon holds the Greek text in his hand. Luther reads a verse of his own work, and then the question goes round to each one of the learned critics as to his opinion regarding the quality of the native tongue, and the exposition of the ancient doctors. This gives rise to learned and interesting discussions, the substance of which is noted down by Dr. Rorer, who afterward publishes them as expositions to the text.

Sometimes a single verse would consume hours, and Luther, speaking of the difficult passages in Job and the Prophets, declares that a single verse of these absorbed, in a few cases, no less than three or four weeks. The picture represents the doctors over the sacrifices in the books of Moses, and Luther has notes, taken over the slaughtered sheep from the butcher's mouth, and some of these discussions as to the propriety of German names gave rise to queer and quaint remarks on the part of the dignified scholars, which Luther, at his table, was in the habit of elucidating and expanding—sometimes with infinite wit and humor.

And Luther's table was often a rare place after these meetings, for as night came on he would close his book, and thanking the learned men for their zeal and fidelity, would frequently ask them to stay to supper with him and his Catharina, whose qualities as a consummate housekeeper he was sure to boast of on these occasions. The rabbis, of course, always thanked him, and declined, for the law would not allow them to partake of food dressed in his style; but the others seldom disregarded an invitation to remain with him. These interviews were nearly always enlivened with music, of which Luther was passionately fond. He used to say that it always brought blessing into the house, and, after God's word, was the dearest thing on earth.

And thus with patient labor, year after year, did Luther perfect his work, correcting successive editions, as he found a passage that did not suit him. The demand for this new Bible was so great that it took a long while to supply orders in the slow style of manufacture of those days. Even princes would pay months or years in advance to be sure of their copies. And Luther would never receive a cent from the booksellers for his labor. He used to say that God had intrusted him with the task for his people, and that he would reward him in heaven. Who feels that the grand old hero has trusted God in vain?—Prof. William Wells, in Western Christian Advocate.

THE REFINER OF SILVER.

Some months ago a few ladies who met together in Dublin to read the Scriptures, and make them the subject of conversation, were reading the third chapter of Malachi. One of the ladies gave it as her opinion that the fuller's soap and the refiner of silver were the same image, both intended to convey the same view of the sanctifying influence of the grace of Christ; while another observed, there is something remarkable in the expression of the third verse:

"He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver."

They agreed that possibly it might be so; and one of the ladies promised to call on a silversmith and report to them what he said on the subject. She went accordingly, and, without telling the object of her errand, begged to know from him the process of refining silver, which he fully described to her.

"But, sir," said she, "do you sit while the work of refining is going on?"

"Oh! yes, madam," replied the silversmith, "I must sit with my eyes steadily fixed on the furnace, for if the time necessary for refining be exceeded in the slightest degree, the silver is sure to be injured."

At once she saw the beauty, and the comfort too, of this expression: "He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver."

Christ sees it needful to put his children into the furnace, but he is seated by the side of it; his eye is steadily intent on the work of purifying, and his wisdom and love are both engaged in the best manner for them. Their trials do not come at random; the very hairs of their head are all numbered. As the lady was leaving the shop the silversmith called her back, and said he had still further to mention that he only knew when the process of purifying was complete by seeing his own image reflected in the silver.

Beautiful figure! When Christ sees his own image in his people, his work of purifying is accomplished.

HELP ONE ANOTHER.—A poor lame boy was walking along one of the muddy and filthy streets of the city, trying to find a suitable place to cross. The heavy rains had fallen, and the streets were very deep with mud and water.

While waiting, another lad saw him and cried out: "Stop! stop! I'll carry you over!"

In a moment he gently took the little cripple in his arms, and carried him over to the other side of the street. In doing so he got wet and muddy; but he did not mind that, for he felt amply repaid by the inward reward which his heart gave him. The lame boy smiled gratefully and thanked him kindly. How many tempted ones there are in your path you can carry over to the solid ground of total abstinence, if you but extend the fraternal hand of sympathy and love, helping them over the difficult highways of temptation to the ways of pleasantness and paths of peace! He that "giveth a cup of cold water only" shall in no wise lose his reward.

ILLUSTRATIVE of the ups and downs of this life in general, and politics in particular, Thurlow Weed tells how some New Yorkers raised a fund to defeat Fillmore in 1856, which was given to him for "judicious distribution." He placed $10,000 in bank to the credit of his partner, to be drawn out as it was needed. A few days after the latter dropped dead in the street. The bank paid over the money, in due process of law, to the widow. A year or two passed, and Mr. Fillmore met and married the widow—and the $10,000!

HE THAT through custom makes little account of his promise, may swear often, but shall seldom be believed.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC MONASTERY at Yonkers, above New York city, maintains a school for young ladies, which numbers over two hundred and fifty pupils, of whom two-thirds are daughters of Protestant parents! A writer in the Christian Press states that a few weeks since he was in company with a young lady of that school, and heard her say that her family were all bigoted Presbyterians, but she thanked God her eyes had been opened!

A LETTER from Rome states that on the fourteenth ultimo the Pope gave audience to fifteen hundred women belonging to the Catholic Interests Society or marshaled by it. On the fifteenth he received one hundred and sixty-two female servants and cooks, conducted by the Marquise Serlupi. In replying to their address, the Pope said they ought to imitate the handmaids of Judith, who assisted their mistress to rid the country of its oppressors.

THE Nawab of Rampore, whose father remained faithful to the British during the revolt, has recently given his estate at Bareilly for a Woman's Hospital and Medical School. It is especially adapted for that purpose, as it adjoins the mission premises, and consists of forty-two acres of land, a large brick house, two old wells and a garden. It is valued at $15,000. This young Mohammedan king had previously visited the medical school, and given it a thousand rupees.

WESTERN AFRICA—Gaboon.—The last Bible Society Record contains a letter of interest from Rev. Albert Bushnell, dated Gaboon, in which he says: "The word of the Lord is having free course and glorified at Gaboon. About thirty are indulging a hope of having recently passed from death unto life, one-half of whom were received into the church at our last communion season, and the other half will soon follow. Our chapel is crowded, and two evenings in the week I devote to the guiding of inquiring souls to the 'Lamb of God!'"

THE ministers of the Congregational, Baptist, Universalist, Methodist and Disciples churches in Danbury, Connecticut, have published a statement in the local papers to the effect that, while neither of them wishes to be held as indorsing the opinions of the others, they desire cordially to unite in Christian work, so far as they may. A union prayer meeting is held every Monday evening, in which all the churches named participate; and they also unite in their thanksgiving and fast-day services. This has been going on now for several months, and at the last advices nobody had been hurt.

ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT.—Rev. Mr. Dewar gives some most valuable information respecting the state of religious influence in Alexandria. He says: "Notwithstanding the continuous tide of iniquity, many Christian influences are here at work. Among the first which claimed my attention was the Greek school, the average attendance of which is about two hundred. I received a most cordial and gentlemanly reception, both from the director and all the teachers, through whose kindness I visited in order the various departments, where, besides the ordinary educational branches, are taught Greek, Arabic and French. The general method of the school is most admirable. The same may be alike said of the girl's department, under the management of a warm-hearted Christian lady."

TURNING THE TABLES UPON THE POPE.—A dispatch from Berlin, dated February 8, states that the Bishop of Strasbourg having notified the cabinet here that the Holy See no longer recognizes the Concordat as applying to Alsace and Lorraine, Prince Bismarck replied that the Emperor of Germany will undertake, independently of such a measure, the church government of those provinces. A later dispatch, received from Berlin on Saturday, states that on Friday in the Diet, during the debate on an education bill, Prince Bismarck said the government was disposed to propitiate the Roman Catholics, but its patience was exhausted. He announced it as the policy of Prussia hereafter to Germanize the Polish schools, as France had Gallicized those of Alsace and Lorraine.—New York Christian Advocate.

AMONG the three thousand Jews in the city, the London and German Missionary Societies, with the Church of Scotland, are doing a good work. The Rev. Mr. Hofheinz is laboring most successfully in this field. "With this brother," says Mr. Dewar, "I visited the Catacombs, the so-called Needles of Cleopatra, Pompey's Pillar," etc. The American Board are doing a great work among the Copts. The Prussian hospital is a power for good, which is open to all nationalities, and is under the management of the German Protestant Sisters, who, out of Christian love, devote themselves to attending and soothing the sick and afflicted. In addition, the British and Foreign Bible Society has opened a depot for the sale of the Scriptures in several languages, chiefly in Greek and Arabic, the sales of which, for a few months, have amounted to one thousand copies. These and other Christian influences, which might be named, are being sensibly felt on the masses of this ancient city.

IN ENGLAND Church Defense Associations are springing up in all the dioceses. This bids fair to be the principal work in which the clergy are to engage for some time. One association has been formed at Cambridge, at which the Bishop of Ely presided. His lordship said that the activity of the opponents of the State church called for immediate and general organization in defense of that institution. The workingman must be shown that the church was not supported out of the funds of the State, but from the endowments of the dead. He also remarked on the democratic character of the church, and, in support of this view, said that the son of a poor man might become Archbishop of Canterbury. It was generally admitted, in the course of the proceedings, that very great reform must be made in the church itself, in order to adapt it to the spirit of the age.

THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES.—It has been decided to cut the thirty-nine articles from the course of theological studies at the University of Oxford, England. The London Telegraph says: "The vote of the Oxford Convocation betokens the change that is passing over the church. It is full of importance as the feather which betrays the direction of the theological breeze. It asserts, with all the intellectual and theological force of the learned body, that so much of our religious forms and institutions as are 'established by law' may be repealed, revised and readjusted by the legislative authority which passed the original statutes. It also declares that the time has arrived when, in the cause of religion itself, it may be desirable to widen the portals of the National Church." The Daily News regards Prof. Rawlinson's objection to the amendment as the strongest argument which was attempted in its favor. He said that henceforth it would be impossible to distinguish between Churchmen and Dissenters. Can any consummation be more desirable?

THE House of Evangelists, New York city, is under the care and responsible supervision of the Church of the Holy Trinity, of which the Rev. S. H. Tyng, Jr., is the founder and pastor. But it is entirely catholic and undenominational. Mr. Tyng calls it "a short cut to the ministry." The students represent several denominations, and no pledges are exacted, except for Christian work in the city, and no denominational tenets are taught. The institution has some $60,000 in its own right, and affords board, lodging and instruction to students without charge. It is full, and is a success. The night college connected with it is a peculiar feature. Popular lectures are given in the chapel of the church, to which Sunday school teachers and others are admitted by ticket. Some four thousand tickets have been applied for. We notice the names of Drs. Crosby, Tyng, Duryea and Hastings, and Rev. Messrs. Mingins and Vincent, and also Ralph Wells, J. Bennett Tyler, R. R. McBurney and Prof. Merrill among those engaged to lecture. Undenominational in purpose, plan and agencies, it is consecrated, simply, only and always, to more Christian work, and better Christian work, in the city of New York.

MISS CLARA A. SWAIN, the first lady physician sent to India, was sent by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Hindoo women, who, in their sorest need, cannot be seen by a male physician, who is only allowed in another room to judge of their pulse by a thread passed around the wrists, welcome Miss Swain in these expressive words: "As if all good came down from heaven with her." In the first year she prescribed for one thousand two hundred and twenty-five patients at the mission house, besides visiting two hundred and fifty in their homes, and instructing a medical class of fourteen in the orphanage. The society, only in the third year of its existence, sustains nine missionaries in India and China, and three girls' orphanages, in which large numbers of girls, many of them saved from famine and from lives of shame and misery, are being trained to become the future teachers of their country-women. Between forty and fifty girls' schools are also supported. These are in some places held in a regular school house, but more frequently in the privacy of the zonana, where the missionary and the Bible women, forty of whom are employed, can meet the female members of several families and give them instruction.

HE who is unwilling to take the blame justly belonging to him is willing to lay it on an innocent party.

DOCTRINAL INSTRUCTION.

There are certain leading truths of the gospel which the wisdom of ages has thrown into a connected system. These are the main points of belief and experience, and are regarded as the fundamental matters taught in the Bible. Such are the depravity of man, the atonement, future rewards and punishment, repentance, justification by faith, regeneration and sanctification. They have been gathered up as the substance of the inspired volume, and presented as a connected whole, for purposes of clearness, and as helpful to the edification and salvation of the people. Hence doctrinal teaching is the more direct presentation of these great staple subjects in a topical and somewhat abstract form, and with reference to the relations which they sustain to each other. They are precipitates and crystallizations rather than solutions. They are the framework of religion, and embrace its entire life as fully as physiology and anatomy embrace the living structure and working of the bodily organs.

The religious teaching of the day is less doctrinal than formerly. The articles of religion stand on their appointed pages, and are rarely disturbed by the lay reader. Systematic theology, however studied by preachers, is rarely brought into the pulpit in a systematic way, and the catechisms, with their simple and comprehensive exhibitions of doctrine, are, we fear, going out of popular use. A correspondent, whose opinions we value and respect, tells us that the people in his section are anxiously seeking for light in reference to regeneration and sanctification. What are the preachers doing? and what are the Sunday schools teaching? We believe this neglect of doctrinal teaching is becoming general, and that it is fraught with many serious evils. Parents, teachers and preachers should be aroused to the importance of a more careful exhibition of religious doctrine. Natural history, science, geography and popular information are all very well; but both young and old must be fed with the sincere milk of the word, and with the nourishing and invigorating meat of the gospel. Our modern Sunday school appliances and methods should by no means supplant the old-time course of lessons, in which the doctrines of the Bible were clearly set forth with reference to proof-texts. Maps, diagrams, blackboards and object-teaching have their advantages, but let us have with them the thorough teaching of sound doctrine.

The modern type of sensational preaching may be abused more than it deserves. There is a good sensationalism, and a bad. The tendency, however, of the best is to treat doctrinal subjects incidentally, and to assume the hearer's acquaintance with them. These themes lack the novelty which is calculated to arrest the attention of the multitude, and their treatment in an ornate and taking manner is supposed to be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible. Then, again, doctrinal preaching is thought to lack adaptation to the condition and circumstances of the hour, and not in sympathy with the spirit and needs of a restless, progressive and enlightened age. What is flippantly called a live man would hardly think of announcing justification by faith, or repentance, as his subject for the coming Sunday morning. What would there be in such trite and fossiliferous terms to draw the crowd? Even if the thing is intended, it must be invested with a new name, modernized and adapted to the ear of the times. Doctrines, topically and connectedly stated, are avoided, because of the lack of variety, and the inevitable repetition which the practice involves.

We doubt whether any of these objections have much real force; but if all were true we should still insist upon doctrinal teaching in the family, in the Sunday school and in the pulpit. Better sacrifice something in the way of popular and sensational effect in order to secure a well-instructed and thoroughly indoctrinated church. In the long run such a course will do more good and bring in a more abundant harvest. There are always souls hungering for this kind of meat, and many others perishing because it is not given them. If we were to point out the great defect in the religious teaching of the present era, we should indicate this absence of doctrinal statement. A glance at the religious literature, the published sermons fresh from the pulpit, the libraries and text books of families and schools, justifies our conclusion. We want more preaching on the old themes of depravity, conviction, repentance, the new birth and holiness, and this in the plain, four-square style of the olden time. Not otherwise can we come up to Paul's idea of "warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." A revival of doctrinal teaching in every department of religious instruction, from the domestic hearth up through all the means of teaching, so as to embrace our church literature and the pulpit, would inaugurate a deep and lasting revival throughout the Christian world.

"Robinson's Arch."—An Error Corrected.

BY REV. J. HAMILTON, D. D.

In various articles relative to Jerusalem, I have recently seen repeated mention made of "Robinson's Arch." The reference is to certain stones projecting from the west wall of the "Haram," or inclosure on which the temple stood. These stones, it is agreed by the learned, were placed there by Solomon to form the abutment of an arch which formerly spanned the valley between Mount Meriah and Mount Zion, known as the Tyropeen, upon which Solomon built a bridge from the one to the other, that he might pass directly from his house on Mount Zion to the temple.

To these stones Dr. Ed. Robinson paid considerable attention while in Jerusalem, and when he subsequently published his "Biblical Researches" he claimed to be the discoverer of the stones, and the originator of the idea that they were the abutment of an arch. Dr. Olin visited Jerusalem subsequently, and carefully surveyed the whole ground, communicated with the resident missionaries, and perhaps with others, upon the subject, and when he published his Travels, without being aware, I think, of the character of Robinson's claims, set forth the facts as he learned them on the spot. In doing so he did not give Dr. Robinson the credit of the discovery. This was too much; for he belonged to a little coterie in and about New York who at that time—backed by the New York Observer—claimed a monopoly of the Oriental learning in the country, and they could tolerate no contradiction or published difference of opinion. Accordingly Dr. Olin was furiously attacked by Dr. Robinson, or some of his friends, in a most bitter article in a review published by them, in which he was charged with misstating the facts, and attempting to rob the great explorer of his well-earned fame, etc.

To these charges Dr. Olin replied in the C. A. and Journal, and defended himself vigorously, giving a statement of facts as they came to his knowledge while in Jerusalem, etc., and made out a strong case; still he could not, under the circumstances, silence his opponents, and they assailed him repeatedly with great bitterness.

Here the matter rested for several months—until the periodical containing the articles crossed the Atlantic and reached Constantinople. There it was read by a missionary of the American Board, whose wife was an early acquaintance and warm friend of Dr. Olin, and in whose family the doctor had spent a week or two while visiting that city. On reading the articles, that gentleman immediately wrote Dr. Olin that he had done so, and that his knowledge of the facts, his sense of justice, and, above all, his high regard for him, would not permit him to remain silent. He then proceeded to state that he was residing in Jerusalem at the time Dr. Robinson visited there; that he acted as his guide on various occasions; that Dr. Robinson knew nothing of this abutment until he took him there and pointed it out to him, and stated to him his conjecture that it was the base of an arch, etc. This idea the doctor eagerly took up, and hence the publication and claim in his "Researches."

On receiving this communication Dr. Olin published it in New York, and, as might be supposed, it proved a "clincher." Neither Dr. Robinson nor any of his friends ever attempted any reply. Never was defeat more complete. I insist, therefore, that the truth of history, and justice to the memory of Dr. Olin, forbid that we should continue to speak of "Robinson's Arch;" and I hope that Methodist papers will, as an act of justice, give publicity to the facts in this case. I think I could procure a copy of the article alluded to from New York.

Rebuilding the Publishing House.

The following statements and appeal from Bishop McTyeire will, we believe, be read and responded to by hundreds if not thousands of our people. The suggestions as to the manner of raising the money are judicious, and we most heartily second his appeal for immediate help. Every Methodist should have some stock in the new house, and every congregation should have the opportunity of contributing.

REBUILDING THE PUBLISHING HOUSE. Three Hundred Subscribers Wanted. The church at large has been advised of the loss by fire which befell our Publishing House on February 15. It is proposed to repair this damage, and take advantage of it for a permanent improvement.

The citizens of Nashville have been forward in the matter. Considering that the sum of $17,000 was formerly paid by them, in the beginning of the enterprise here, we may not expect the donations of Nashville and vicinity to run above $30,000 on the present subscription. This would be very liberal. I do not think that more can be realized.

At least $15,000 must be raised among our congregations and friends abroad, in order to enable the Book Committee and agent to build and equip such a Publishing House as the wants of Southern Methodism demand. This, with the $5,000 insurance, will make up the requisite amount of $50,000.

The present building has always been unsightly and, for the most part, ill-adapted to its uses; and besides the immediate effects of the late fire, it is generally dilapidated. The site is very valuable, and has proved to be convenient. A building is needed there, four stories high and of modern construction, thus affording twice the present room on the same ground, and better accommodations and facilities.

Let us follow up this liberal, local movement promptly, with aid enough to insure large success. Then the work is done without adding any debt to our Publishing House, or any tax on its literature. The church at large is the owner of the property; the need is urgent; the cause is worthy; the object is connectional. Let the most distant member and friend take a share of the burden as well as of the benefit.

I propose that this $15,000 be raised in subscriptions of $50; and beg to be permitted to put my name to the list for $50—paid.

Where are the two hundred and ninety and nine? Let them respond at once with cash subscriptions.

Individuals may respond—of these it is hoped there will be many.

Pastors are requested to call on their congregations to make up at least $50, and send it forward. Some congregations, as well as persons, will doubtless take several shares of this good stock—two, five, ten, twenty, according to means.

Please address your responses to the book agent, Dr. Redford, who, through the church papers, will keep the subscribers and the church advised of the progress of the work.

H. N. McTYEIRE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 26.

THE OLD DEBT PAID.

The following letter from Dr. Redford to Dr. Carlton announces a most gratifying fact:

NASHVILLE, TENN., Feb. 2, 1872.

REV. THOMAS CARLTON, D. D.—Dear Brother: It affords me great pleasure to inform you that I paid this morning the balance due you by the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for money paid by you for our mission in China several years since. It is a matter of deep regret that we have not been able at an earlier date to meet this obligation; but the entire prostration of our Missionary Society, together with all our financial affairs as a church, placed it beyond our power to do so. There could have been no obligation we could have felt more acutely than this, and its prompt payment was the wish of our entire church; and but for the impoverished condition in which we were left in 1866, we would have had no difficulty in meeting this debt at once. I cannot, however, close this letter without returning you our sincere thanks not only for your great kindness in protecting our China mission at a time when it was beyond our power to do so, but also for the long and patient forbearance you have shown in reference to the refunding the money on our part. Unable to compensate you for what you have done, we will invoke the blessing of our heavenly Father upon you for your happiness in this life, and for your salvation in heaven. Affectionately your brother in Christ,

A. H. REDFORD, Treasurer

RESPONSE NO. 6.

MR. EDITOR: I find that collecting money is a weariseme business. O that the days would return when brethren would be "willing of themselves—praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints." Will that day ever come again? Let us hope that we may live to see it. I do now occasionally meet with one who gives without being asked—who is so anxious to be a faithful steward that he solicits aid, and is glad to have a good object pointed out where he may bestow his goods.

From such an one I have to report for Centenary College	$100 00
J. L. Dunnica	100 00

Lest the amounts which I am reporting from week to week may lead some to think that affairs are getting on well enough without their help, I add that I have spent and am paying out faster than I am receiving, and have heavy demands to meet every week from the contractor for the repairs going on.

J. C. KEENER.

MARCH 1, 1872.

DEATH OF MRS. JOSEPH H. STONE.—Mrs. Jennie Mariau Stone, daughter of Gayoso L. Lovelace and Elenor O. Harding, and wife of Rev. Joseph H. Stone, of the Louisiana Conference, died at her residence, on Sicily Island, Louisiana, February 6, 1872. About ten years ago Sister Stone professed religion, and was received as a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South under the ministry of Rev. Lewis A. Reed. She was an exemplary and conscientious Christian, and took a deep interest in the church, and in the ministry to which her husband was called. In her last illness her sufferings were protracted and severe, but she was graciously sustained through all, and died in great peace. Sister Stone was well qualified for usefulness in the church, and adorned the doctrines of religion in all the relations of life. Her husband and kindred have our sincere sympathies in the great sorrow which they have been called to experience.

THE Rev. W. W. Gillespie, Clarendon station, White River Conference, died Feb. 20, of pneumonia.

The National Publishing Company's Bible.

MR. EDITOR: There lies before me a copy of this book, which has been pretty industriously sold by agents in different parts of the country during the last twelve months. The work may be criticised the more freely since it claims no local paternity. The names of what purport to be its publishers are printed on the title page, but as no local habitation is claimed by them, the public have no right to suppose that the authors of the work wish to be known as living anywhere. Among many other things, besides the word of God, contained in this Bible, is what purports to be a "history of the religious denominations of the world," embracing only seventeen quarto pages. A pretentious title, that, for what could by the possibilities of space be only a very brief account of some of the principal denominations of the world. But hear what this book tells us of the Methodist churches: "The Methodist Episcopal Church was divided in 1844, by the slavery question, into two branches—the Methodist Episcopal Church North, and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Since the close of the war, however, the Southern Church has dropped the word 'South,' and calls itself the Methodist Episcopal Church." There is in this brief quotation at least one blunder, one folly and one slander. It is a blunder in writing a history to call a church by any other than its real name. The word North does not belong to the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It is a folly, in writing a history, to say the war, when no war has been previously mentioned in the same connection. Imagine, if you please, a youth seventy-five or a hundred years hence reading in his grandfather's Bible an account of religious denominations, and there finding that such and such things took place after the close of the war. How could he know what war was meant? Is the civil war which occurred in the United States between the years 1860 and 1866 to go down to posterity under the name of the war? The colloquial phrase, the war, seems to have been a favorite one with the author of this history, as he uses it on several other occasions besides the one here quoted.

But passing by these as minor errors, to say that the Methodist Episcopal Church South "has dropped the word South from her name, and now calls herself the Methodist Episcopal Church," is a gross slander, which, if it springs not from malice, could arise from nothing less than inexcusable ignorance in one who professes to publish a history. Other churches, in this history, are called by names which they do not acknowledge. In view of such errors as these, how is one to know how much confidence to place in any statement found in this "history?"

It may appear to some that we have attached unnecessary importance to these errors; but when it is remembered that these, and we know not how many other, misstatements go down to posterity bound up in the same volume with the holy oracles of God, there is no calculating how much harm they may do in the future.

We have written this solely in the interests of truth. We wish the people to know what they are buying. If the National Publishing Company would render their Bible salable, by illustrations and other additions, let them take at least reasonable pains to have their historical statements bear some tolerable degree of conformity to truth.

THE FIREMEN'S ANNIVERSARY, which took place in this city on the fourth instant, was, as usual, a splendid pageant. The procession was long and brilliant, and our entire population were out to honor the brave men who so efficiently protect our homes from the devouring flames. We believe no city in the United States has so effective and well-organized a fire department as New Orleans. The display on Monday was an impressive exhibition of the strength and discipline of the organization.

ABSENCE destroys small passions and increases great ones, as the wind extinguishes tapers and kindles fires.

A MODEL SUNDAY SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: Not long since, through the columns of your paper, you requested Bro. Baker, superintendent of the St. Francis Street Methodist Sunday school, Mobile, Alabama, to give you for publication an account of the same—statistics, methods of conducting exercises, and other information relating to Sunday school matters. As he has not complied with your request, I have concluded to write a few lines pertaining to our school.

The school has increased under the wise administration of our worthy superintendent, Bro. William D. Baker, until we number about 400, aggregate; average attendance, about 330; present last Sabbath, 343. The only officers of the school are superintendent, secretary and librarian. Number of teachers, 34; all earnest, faithful workers. No teacher is ever absent without a good excuse, generally made known to the superintendent. It is a very common occurrence, at the opening of the school, for the superintendent to announce the presence of every teacher. So regular and prompt has become their attendance that the necessity of roll-calling has ceased to exist; and even the inclement weather of last month did not cause the teachers' chairs to be vacant, some of them living from one to three miles distant.

Of course we use the uniform lesson system, published at Nashville, and we sing from the Amaranth. Our library is meager, but it is supplemented by two hundred Visitors—a charming and interesting paper for the young.

We have weekly teachers' meetings to prepare the lesson, which are well attended and of great profit. We not only study the lesson, but generally also talk over and discuss the best modes of teaching and impressing upon the scholars the truths it contains. In this way the more experienced and better informed materially help those younger and less experienced. Bro. A. W. Lampkin generally conducts these meetings, and does so acceptably and profitably to his co-laborers.

We have no fixed schedule for opening and closing the school, the superintendent varying the exercises as he deems best. We always read the lesson of the day, sometimes alternately, sometimes elliptically; we sing a song or songs bearing upon the lesson; and the prayer by minister, superintendent or teacher is always to the "golden text" or "central thought" of the lesson. From forty to fifty minutes are allowed for recitation; after which the superintendent addresses the school, impressing the main points of the lesson. The blackboard is generally used by Bro. Baker to fix attention and drive home to the hearts of the scholars, and rivet there, the practical truths drawn from the lesson of the day. It is not by beautiful pictures or fantastic crayon-work that this is done, but a single word, acrostic or short sentence adds impressiveness to the words uttered. Bishop Keener once visited our school, and said it was one of the most attentive audiences he had ever addressed; it had been made so, in no small degree, by these blackboard exercises. On last Sabbath the lesson was the Parables of the Treasure and Goodly Pearl, showing the value of religion, and how to possess it. On the board were the words Seek it, which were made the nucleus of an impressive exhortation.

One characteristic of our school is the large number of adult members. We have more than a hundred mature persons as scholars in our school; and the young, growing up, are not disposed to leave us. A goodly number of married people are in classes; one, composed of young married ladies, is taught by the wife of our minister (Bro. Shapard.) The utmost harmony exists in the school—no jarring between superintendent, teachers and scholars; attributable, we think, in great degree, to our having but one officer, to whom the entire control and management is left.

We have a missionary society, the funds collected being used to clothe and care for the needy of our school; and in this way several hundred dollars are spent annually.

When at our Conference you saw our beautiful room—pleasant, cheerful, attractive.

Our superintendent visits largely, and there is not a family connected with our school at whose house he has not been. The teachers visit their scholars as a general thing—love and visit each other. The social element of our school is developing finely, and is a power of great good to and with our young people.

We have a large number of visitors—some every Sabbath—who not unfrequently express themselves well pleased with the tone and spirit that pervade the exercises.

To teach the religion of Christ, and to save souls, seems to be the burden of every song, word and prayer.

Hoping that God's blessing may rest upon this important branch of our church throughout its entire connection, I am, as ever, your friend in Christ, A.

MOBILE, February 20, 1872.

A GOOD REPORT.—Dr. J. B. Walker, of Galveston, makes the following satisfactory report of last year's work:

For various collections of missionaries, Bishops, Conference collection and poor, $932.50; pastor's salary and house, $4,000; presiding elder, $600; sexton, furniture, $250; for building church, paid, $9,338.52; for two lots—site for church—Bro. Ayres, (gold,) $1,900; Sunday school purposes, $1,853; German church, say $800. Total, $20,074.02. Began the year with 250 members—have about 320 now.

THE REV. JOHN G. RUSH, of the Alabama Conference, died on February 28. A note from the Rev. H. Urquhart, announcing the sad intelligence, reaches us just as we are going to press. Bro. Rush died in great peace and triumph.

OUR THANKS are due to the contributor who gives an account of a model Sunday school. We know not which most to admire—the school or the clear and tasteful description of it. The article will richly repay careful perusal.

Missionary Drafts---Alabama Conference.

In the hurry of closing up our late very short session of Conference, the missionary drafts drawn in favor of the presiding elders were left in my hands. I will retain them in custody or forward them to any point designated by the parties to whom they belong.

J. BARKER, Treasurer.

GREENVILLE, ALA., Feb. 27, 1872.

Bishop Kavanaugh's Appointments.

I propose to devote twelve weeks to four Conferences, and hence can give but three Sabbaths to each Conference, and they will be as follows:

Mississippi Conference.—Brookhaven district, April 5 to 7; Jackson district, April 12 to 14; Vicksburg district, April 19 to 21.

North Mississippi Conference.—Grenada district, April 26 to 28; Columbus district, May 17 to 19; Macon district, May 24 to 26.

Memphis Conference.—Jackson district, May 31 to June 2; at Brownsville, Tennessee; Humboldt district, June 7 to 9; Paducah district, June 14 to 16.

Illinois Conference.—Carbondale district, Thomas L. Foster, presiding elder, at Carbondale, Illinois, June 28 to 30; Salem district, at Salem, Illinois, July 5 to 7; Springfield district, July 12 to 14.

N. B.—If the presiding elders will not find it convenient to have the conferences at the times designated in this notice, they will please inform me in time, that I may give the appointment to some other district. They will also please furnish the places at which the conferences are to be held, to the editor, where I have not given them or failed to give them correctly.

H. H. KAVANAUGH.

PATIENCE is always crowned with success. This rule is without exception. It may not be a splendid success, but patience never takes anything in hand that she does not succeed with it in some form.

DRUNKENNESS is the great evil of the world. You will never remove it until you have organized better pleasures for the poor, especially those pleasures which should make drunkenness a slower affair.

ON EARTH we have nothing to do with successes or with results, but only being true to God and for God; for it is sincerity and not success which is the sweet savor before God.—Robertson.

AGENT'S NOTICE.—The burning of our house at Nashville, makes it necessary that we should insist on the prompt payment of amounts due the house in New Orleans. Our friends owing us will please remit at once.

ROBT. J. HARP, Agent.

RHEUMATISM AND PARALYSIS.—Dr. Hadfield's advertisement of his Equalizer, for the cure of rheumatism and paralysis, in another part of the paper, is worthy of attention.

TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS IN PREMIUMS.—The Sixth Grand State Fair is to be held during the last week in April. Exhibitors will take due notice of the advertisement in another column.

CLOTHING.—Our friends visiting the city of Mobile should not fail to call at the extensive establishment of Messrs. Saunders, Garner & Co., manufacturers and jobbers in men's clothing, No. 25 St. Francis street. See their advertisement in our paper.

DRY GOODS.—We call the attention of our readers interested in the purchase and sale of dry goods to the imported and domestic fabrics of Mr. John P. Kennedy, corner of Dauphin and Water streets, Mobile, Alabama. See advertisement in another column.

GUANO.—As this is the season for providing for the coming crop, we know of nothing more likely to be of practical interest to our country readers than the advertisement of the valuable fertilizer on sale by Mr. W. F. Kelly, No. 14 Union street, New Orleans.

DRUGS, GLASS, PAINTS, OILS, ETC.—Messrs. Blackwood, Carter & Co., No. 16 St. Francis street, Mobile, Alabama, advertise in this issue the varied and ample assortment of articles in their line. We hope our readers will peruse their card in another column, and give them a call.

COAL AND WOOD.—No dealers in coal and wood have a better reputation for good measure and fair dealing with their customers than J. D. & L. C. Maclin, the successors of their late honored father, R. D. Maclin. Our readers are referred to their advertisement for further information.

ROPER HOUSE, MOBILE, ALABAMA.—We know nothing personally of the Roper House, but we have friends who for years have stopped invariably with Mrs. Roper, and their representations have been uniformly favorable; but the best recommendation is that they continue their patronage. See the advertisement in another column.

BATTLE HOUSE, MOBILE, ALABAMA.—We know of no hotel proprietor more assiduous in his efforts to contribute to the comfort of his guests than Mr. Thrall, of the Battle House. This excellent house was leased by Mr. Thrall from the first of November last. With the advantage of his extensive experience as a caterer, and the prompt and polite attentions of his competent assistants, Messrs. Eagan and Williams, this house will lose none of its former reputation as a first-class hotel.

STOVES AND TINWARE.—We call particular attention to the advertisement of our friend, George W. W. Goodwyn, known to us for many years as an honest, industrious and worthy dealer in stoves and tinware. Our friends in the country may order from him with assurance of being faithfully served, and purchasers in the city will do well to call at 52 Gravier street and price his wares.

The friends of Rev. Philo M. Goodwyn, so long and favorably known in this State, will see from the note appended to the advertisement that he is associated with the above house, and we bespeak for them both a share of the patronage of their numerous friends.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of the Mobile Life Insurance Company, of Mobile, Alabama. During our recent visit to Mobile we heard much of the company, its popularity and success. The life endowment plan, of which the company makes a specialty, is well received by the people, and they are issuing policies on that plan to many of the best citizens of Alabama and Mississippi. W. L. Baker, son of our honored and lamented brother, R. A. Baker, is president of the company. He is a worthy son of his noble father, and in addition to his commercial positions, is superintendent of the St. Francis Street Methodist Sunday school, one of the most useful and flourishing in the South. It is a Southern company, well managed, safe and solvent, and we heartily commend it to our readers.

THE SODA FOUNTAIN AT HOME.—Now that the warm weather is close at hand, we take pleasure in calling the attention of the public generally, and especially of our lady readers, to the newly-introduced effervescing beverage, called Belfast Ginger Ale, manufactured by Messrs. Cantrell & Cochrane, Belfast, Ireland. During the hot summer months the want of a refreshing beverage, which would always be at hand in the house, has long been felt. We trust that ginger ale will be found what was wanted in this respect. It is refreshing, extremely agreeable, and, what is considered its greatest merit, healthful. It comes in bottles containing about a pint, convenient to keep all the time. During the warm weather a half dozen in the ice box will be found to yield a delicious beverage, and has only to be tried to be appreciated. We are informed that from the fact of ginger ale being thought very highly of by physicians as a healthy and safe drink for hot climates, the English government contracted for an immense quantity to be supplied to the Abyssinian Expedition, and that it was found to be of very great service. Mr. R. L. Neill, 198 Gravier street, New Orleans, is agent for the manufacturers.

Obituaries.

MRS. ELIZABETH HOLDER, widow of Mr. Willis Holder, was born in Lawrence district, South Carolina, November 5, 1790. She was married to Willis Holder about the year 1805, and removed with her husband to Mississippi about 1810. She became religious and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1820, in which she lived a faithful, happy and consistent life until January 20, 1872, when she died, happy in the love of that God whom she had served so faithfully and so long. She died at the residence of her son, in Jasper county, Mississippi. Her age was eighty-one years, two months and fifteen days. She lived in the full enjoyment of heartfelt religion for over sixty years. She raised a large family of children, mostly boys, all of whom are respectable and religious citizens. One of them followed her to the Christian's home just six days after her death. Mother Holder's house was for years the home of Methodist preachers. She was an old-fashioned class-meeting Methodist. She lived right at home, and was seldom absent from church on meeting days. She could not be contented with a formal portion of duties, but often rejoiced in the love of God. F. W. SHARBROUGH.

JOHN W. HOLDER, son of Mrs. Elizabeth Holder, was born in Jackson county, Mississippi, May 23, 1826, and died in Jasper county, Mississippi, January 26, 1872, following his sainted mother to the pilgrim's home in just six days. Bro. Holder was forty-five years, eight months and three days old. He has been married twice. As to the maiden name of his first wife I am not informed. She died about four years ago, leaving him with four motherless children. Necessity drove him to seek another companion, which he found in the person of Miss Jane Guthrie about three years ago. He leaves a heart-stricken widow, six children and many friends and relatives to mourn his loss, but not as those who have no hope. Bro. Holder has been a professor of religion and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for several years. He lived the life of a Christian and died the death of the righteous. May the God of love and goodness be a father to the orphans and a friend to the bereaved widow.

E. W. SHARBROUGH.

MRS. VIRGINIA A. BOON was born in Hinds county, Mississippi, September 23, 1852, and died in Lawrence county, Mississippi, December 17, 1871. Sister Boon was the eldest child of W. R. and Catherine Selman. She was married to Mr. J. R. Boon December 23, 1869, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South July, 1870, and embraced religion in October, 1871. The writer conducted the meeting where she was converted, and never saw a brighter conversion. During her sickness of one week's duration she was blessed with a clear mind, and was enabled to come with boldness to the throne of grace and claim the peace of God which passeth all understanding. Her sickness and death exhibited in a remarkable degree the beauty and power of the Christian's faith. She leaves father, mother, husband, child and many friends, all of whom she committed to the God she had served. When the hour of death came, it was received by her as the happy period which was to introduce her into the glories of the heavenly world.

"Why should we start or fear to die?
What thigorous worms we mortals are;
Death, 'tis the gate to endless joy,
And yet we dread to enter there."

JUDGE JOHN R. ENOCHS was born in the State of North Carolina on the twenty-second day of January, A. D. 1791, and departed this life, in great peace, at the residence of his son, Captain James B. Enochs, in Copiah county, Mississippi, on the seventh day of February, 1872, aged eighty-one years and fourteen days.

When Judge Enochs was a mere boy his parents moved from North Carolina to the central district of Tennessee, and settled on Mulberry Creek. During the winter of 1811 or 1812 he was married to Miss Mary Ann Steen, whose mother had also moved from North Carolina. When married he belonged to a volunteer company, and soon after his marriage he was called upon to take a farewell of his beautiful young bride, for a season, to try the fortunes of war. Immediately after the fall of Fort Mims he was ordered to the front by General Jackson, and spent the ensuing twelve months soldiering in Alabama and Georgia, in Colonel Ferguson's regiment of cavalry, immediately under the supervision of Jackson. At the expiration of the year he was discharged, and after remaining at home but a few months re-entered the service of his country, and remained actively engaged until the conclusion of the war of 1812.

His mother was a Hays, and a relative of the old hero of New Orleans, whose name history has rendered illustrious.

Bro. Enochs came to Mississippi in the year 1818, and settled on White Sand, in the county of Lawrence, where he resided until February, 1827, after which he moved to the old homestead in Rankin county, Mississippi, where I first knew him. There he buried the wife of his manhood on the first day of January, 1849, who had borne him five sons and six daughters. On the third day of August, 1850, he was again married, to Mrs. Bart, who died on the third day of August, 1865, having been married precisely fifteen years.

Politically he was an old-line Whig of the strictest sect; however, he had no taste for politics or public life, although he had consented in the early organization of Rankin county to serve the people in the capacity of probate judge. His high sense of honor and justice, and the fidelity with which he discharged the functions of office, won for him the highest appreciation and respect of all with whom he transacted business. After this he was induced to serve his county in the Legislature of the State for four years. Here he continued to win the esteem and good opinion of his constituency. It was in the social relations of life his virtues shone so brilliantly. In the development of public spirit, and the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom, his noblest energies were principally employed. The first Methodist church ever formed in Lawrence county, Mississippi, was organized in his house by Rev. Hardy Mullins, one of the early pioneers of the country, who now sleeps in Jesus. The second, if not the first, in Rankin county was organized on his premises, where his body now sleeps, awaiting the resurrection of the last day, when mortality shall put on immortality, and when death shall proclaim him conqueror.

The Christian character of Judge Enochs was unfurnished. His confidence in God was unwavering; his faith grew stronger, and his hope and comfort firmer as he approached the margin of the fatal river. His pathway, like that of the just, shined forth in all its effulgence. He was frequently heard to say: "I have never doubted for a moment my conversion to God." His acceptance with God seemed at all times clear and bright; no clouds intervening to intercept the glory which was continually beaming forth from the face of Jesus Christ. He doubtless lived by faith in the Son of God. His confidence and faith in God may be seen in the following: When Captain James B. Enochs was shot twice through the lungs at the battle of Shiloh, and his surgeon dispatched the fact, also giving his opinion as to the result of the wounds—that he would die—Judge Enochs said: "No; I have asked God to return my boy to his home, and he will do it. I have the witness." He had four sons who were captains in the Confederate army, and such was his faith that he fully believed that each one of them would live to see the conclusion of the war. In answer to his faithful prayers these four sons survived the wreck of war, and are still surviving him. May they emulate the pious example of the father, and finally join him in the better land, where no sods are broken for the dead, where there is no shadow on the light, no curse among the blessed, no death among the living, but where all things shall be theirs.

God bless the sorrowing, bereaved ones, and sanctify this Providence to the good of the living.

"Friend after friend departs:
Who hath not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts
That finds not here an end."

The Great Vegetable Restorative.—"History," said Lord Bacon, "is philosophy teaching by example," and the records of the cures effected by PRICE'S CELEBRATED AROMATIC STOMACH BITTERS is nothing more or less than history. There is, however, this difference: all incidents and events are perpetuated by being incorporated in tomes; the ancients preserved their archives in appropriate depositories, but the cases actually relieved by Price's Bitters will live

"Within the book and volume of the brain, Unmixed with baser matter."

They are memories that cannot die, for the patient who finds his strength recuperated, his vigor restored, his functions operating with accustomed regularity, and his whole physical nature renewed with fresh vitality, as if he had quaffed the elixir that is said to rejuvenate, cannot forget the agency that rid him of his ills, or the instrumentality by which his ailments were alleviated. Such indeed is Price's Aromatic Stomach Bitters; no quack concoction, drugged with palatable poisons, but pure vegetable matter, culled by the cunning hand of science, in the fresh prolific fields that heaven sows for the use and behoof of mankind. A splendid tonic, and a cheering stimulant, it falls with the gentle grace of a benefaction on suffering humanity.

THE STAR.

BY S. JENNIE JONES.

Come, stand at my knee, little children;
I'll tell you a story to night.
While the stars in the heavens above us
Are shedding their silvery light.
I'll tell you of one, little children,
That shone in the long, long ago,
And when you have heard, you will call it
A beautiful story, I know.

It was night, and the sky was illumined
With many a bright-shining star,
But one in the eastern horizon
Shone clearer and brighter by far.
There were watchers who gazed on its brightness,
And followed its beautiful rays
With hearts overflowing with gladness,
With songs of thanksgiving and praise.

For it showed them the way—listen, children—
It showed them the way to their King,
And they joyfully followed its guiding,
Their love-laden offerings to bring.
They followed, nor thought to grow weary,
Their bosoms with joy were aglow,
And they found Him—draw nearer, dear children,
For I would speak softly and low—

They found Him a babe in a manger;
This story you've often been told,
And yet it is new, little children;
'Twill never, no, never, grow old.
They found Him a babe in a manger,
Our Jesus, our Savior, our King!
The sadly sweet story for ever
Through heaven's high arches will ring.

'Twas for you and for me, little children,
He laid all his glory aside,
And left his bright home to be homeless,
And sorrowed and suffered and died.
Then oh! let us come with our offerings,
Our hearts and our praises to-day;
Then strive to be stars, brightly shining,
To show unto others the way.

The Children's Hour.

THE BOY DESIGNER.

BY MARY B. WILLARD.

I want you to imagine a dingy little shop in London—a shop where plaster images were sold a little more than one hundred years ago.

After your imagination has compassed this, fixed the dark old room with its busts and figures firmly in your mind, I want you to take note of a dwarfed and puny human figure sitting propped up with pillows behind the counter. A large-headed, small-framed boy crowding, as well as the crutches and pillows will let him, close to the one diamond-paned window. Let imagination go now, for I am going to tell you facts, not fancies.

The boy's name is John Flaxman; the shop is his father's, and he is trying to catch the last gleam of light for his Cornelius Nepos. Think of it, boys! You who quarrel with ten lines of Virgil; think of this tiny fellow eagerly devouring such stupid Latin as Cornelius Nepos.

One day, when everything was just as I have told you, in came the good Dominie Mathews, and finding him struggling with his book, looked to see what it was. Off he went in a hurry, as soon as he found out, determined that a boy who wanted knowledge as badly as that should have it in more palatable shape. I've no doubt he thought somewhat disgustedly of his own wayward, roystering little fellows, who went to the best school in Covent Garden, and yet had to have their Latin fairly hammered into them, and wondered at the difference in boys.

By and by he came back with delightful translations of Don Quixote and Homer's Iliad. That day little John Flaxman began a new existence. Don't forget that it was more than one hundred years ago. The Iliad charmed him most, and he soon had sketched in black chalk the Ajax, Hector and Achilles of his poetic imagination. Then he tried wax and plaster, and took the impression, in one of these materials, of every metal or seal that pleased him.

Not long after, I suppose because his heart was growing happier in this new work, his body grew stronger; the pillows were taken away, and then the crutches, and you can imagine his happiness when he found that his limbs would carry him.

The good clergyman's wife took him home with her very often and explained to him both Homer and Milton. She watched him, too, as he worked up his rough charcoal pictures of the scenes to which she introduced him. One of these, a picture of a human eye, he one day showed to a great artist. I think he couldn't have been so very great either, for he ill-naturedly asked: "Is it an oyster?"

Little John, however, was great enough not to mind it or be discouraged by it, and he kept on all the while improving, until a little while after his kind friend, Mrs. Mathews, obtained for him his first order—six original drawings in black chalk from Homer. For these he got well paid and well praised.

When he was fifteen years old he became a student at the Royal Academy, and the same year took the silver prize. The next year, failing to get the gold medal, though he had worked hard for it and believed he deserved it, he said to his father: "Give me time and I'll give the academy something to be proud of yet."

All this time that he was studying so diligently he was working hard at home, making casts and images of plaster that brought in a few pennies each and helped to keep the wolf from the door.

While he was drudging and plodding the great event of his boyhood was coming to him.

If you will turn over your plate at dinner some day, as likely as not you will see the name "Wedgwood" printed down deep in the ware. It is not that Mr. Wedgwood made that particular plate, but because he was the inventor of English earthenware. His name was Josiah Wedgwood, and he lived in John Flaxman's time. Discovering a process for making white porcelain, he determined that such beautiful ware should have only beautiful shapes, and hunting up our little friend, said:

"Well, my lad, I have heard that you are a good draughtsman and clever designer. I'm a manufacturer of pots—name Wedgwood. Now I want you to design some models for me; nothing fantastic, but simple and tasteful. I'll pay you well. Do you think the work too poor?"

"Oh, no, sir," said John; "give me a few days and I'll see what I can do."

"Very right, very right, my lad. Mind, I'm in need of them this minute. They are for pots of all kinds—teapots, cups, etc. But what's more, I want a design for the royal table service. Think of that, my boy; for the Queen's table."

John did his best, and it pleased Kind Mr. Wedgwood, who gave him constant employment. He made the loveliest patterns, after Greek and Egyptian models, and Queen Charlotte did actually have a dinner service of his design: it was the first ever made in England for kingly or queenly use, and to this day our best crockery is called "queens ware" for this very reason.

Mr. Wedgwood did as he agreed: he paid John well, and for several years he worked on in this way, occasionally modeling a plaster monument or statue, for he was too poor to buy marble.

Perhaps some of us, in these more hurrying years, and with his genius, might not be content with this humble work, but patient John Flaxman counted himself happy to go into every house in England with his tastefully-formed teacup and cream jug, furnishing even the children—especially and always the children—a higher ideal of beauty and art.

I don't know as I can rightfully tell you any more about Flaxman, for here his boyhood ends, and it is as a boy designer that I recommend him to you. But I am sure you will be glad to know a little more about his most successful career.

I think you will like to know what a brave, noble woman he married; how, one day, the president of the academy, Sir Joshua Reynolds, hearing of his marriage, said to him: "Now, sir, you are ruined for an artist;" how John went home, sat down by his wife, and said: "Ann, I am ruined for an artist." "How so, John?" said she; "how has it happened, and who has done it?" "It happened," said he, laughing, "in the church, and Ann Denham has done it." Then he told her how the great president had said that if a man would be a great artist he must go to Rome and study the great masters. "And you shall go to Rome," said Ann, "and be a great artist. I'll never have it said that Ann Denham spoiled John Flaxman for an artist. We will work and economize."

And so they did, and before long John went to Rome and Ann went with him, and there, beside a great deal of studying and accomplishing many other beautiful works, he made the statue of a great lord in England, that was sent home and placed in Westminster Abbey, and made the greatest sculptor of those times say: "This little man cuts us all out."

Coming home to England he found his old prediction true—the Royal Academy was proud of him, and showed it by making him its professor of sculpture.

Last and best of all, John Flaxman was a Christian artist, and in all of his works there is a Christian lesson.—Little Corporal.

CORAL ISLANDS.

It was formerly supposed that the coralines built up from the very bottom of the ocean, but careful investigation has shown that they cannot live at a greater depth than about thirty fathoms, and consequently that their deposits are first made on submarine rocks or mountains. There in these ocean depths, hidden away from the sight of man, the little insect toils on for its brief life, faithful to the purpose for which it was created, and, dying, leaves its work to its successor. By and by, by whole ages of steady perseverance on the part of the tiny architects, the reef shows itself above water; then they cease building, and sand, which being easily thrown up by the action of the sea, rises to the top, mingles with sea shells, floating leaves and branches, and the feathers and guano of sea birds, till a soil is gradually formed. Seeds, dropped perhaps by some little bird on its winged passage across the waters, or wafted thither by the passing breeze, spring up, and soon the little isle is covered with verdure, adding yet another to these beautiful oases of the deep blue sea—another fair, peaceful Eden, soon, perhaps, to be polluted by the crimes and cruelty of human savages.

In the formation of a single coral reef, several species of the polypes are engaged, each seemingly content with the sphere to which he is best adapted, and tranquilly plying his silent trade in ceaseless oblivion of the busy world beyond.

These coral banks are found in all stages; some in deep water, entirely submerged beneath the blue waves; some sending forth a stray branch here and there, or showing a few bare rocks above the surface without the least appearance of vegetation; while others are covered with soil, stray seeds and fruits, as of the cocoanut, bread-fruit and pandanus, and others have taken root, and the whole island is crowned with verdure.

The specimens we see in this country, in cabinets of curiosities, or used in the manufacture of ornaments, are broken off by divers from the submerged ledges.—Little Corporal.

GOOD FRIENDS.

"I wish that I had some good friends to help me on in life!" cried idle Dennis, with a yawn.

"Good friends! why, you have ten!" replied his master.

"I'm sure I haven't half so many, and those I have are too poor to help me."

"Count your fingers, my boy," said his master.

Dennis looked at his large, strong hands.

"Count thumbs and all," added the master.

"I have; there are ten," said the lad.

"Then never say you have not got ten good friends able to help you on in life. Try what those true friends can do before you begin grumbling and fretting because you do not get help from others.

"If you are not your own friend, it is foolish to expect others to befriend you. Providence only helps those who help themselves.

The Farm and Garden.

GARDEN SEEDS.

HOW TO PLANT THEM.

Asparagus.—Sow in February or March, in drills one foot apart; cover one inch in depth, pressing the earth upon the seed; thin out to six inches apart.

Bean, Snap.—Plant as soon as danger from frost is over, in drills two feet apart, the seeds two inches apart in the row; cover an inch and a half. Later plantings may be covered a little deeper.

Bean, Lima.—Plant when the weather has become warm in spring, in hills four feet apart, setting the poles before planting; cover one inch, thin out to three plants in each hill.

Beet.—For the principal summer crop sow when the peach trees are in bloom. In this latitude you may sow also in August, September and October. Plant in drills from one foot to fifteen inches apart, and cover from one inch to one inch and a half in depth, according to the season and the condition of the soil.

Cabbage.—Sow in a rich seed-bed, in drills three or four inches apart, and cover lightly, watering if necessary. Cauliflower, broccoli and khol-rabi are to be treated in the same way; or the latter may be sown in drills, where the plants are to grow, like the turnips.

Cardoon.—Sow in drills five feet apart as soon as spring frosts are over; cover one inch in depth, gradually thin out to eighteen inches apart, in the row.

Carrot.—Plant like the beet, except in depth, which for the carrot should not be over half an inch.

Pea.—Plant from November to March, in drills from fifteen inches to four feet apart, depending upon the height to which the variety is expected to grow. Where sticks are to be used it is best to plant in double rows, nine inches apart, the pairs of rows being, as directed above, at least as many inches or feet apart as the peas are expected to grow in height. Set the sticks between the pairs of rows.

Pepper.—The directions are the same as for egg-plant.

Salsify.—Plant the same as parsnip.

Spinach.—Sow in October and November, and in early spring, in drills an inch deep and fifteen inches apart, and gradually thin out the plants to from six to nine inches apart.

Celery.—Sow early in spring in a rich seed-bed, in drills three inches apart, covering very slightly. Later sowings, if a "stand" can be got, make quite as good plants.

Corn.—Plant for the first crop of sugar corn when the peach is in bloom, in hills three feet apart; cover an inch and a half in depth.

Cucumber.—Plant when danger from frost is believed to be over, in hills six feet apart, ten or twelve seeds in a hill, and cover with one inch of soil; thin out to three plants in each hill.

Egg-Plant (Guinea squash.)—If plants be not grown in a hot-bed or in a cold-frame, plant in the open air, as soon as settled warm weather can be counted upon, in a rich seed-bed, in drills three or four inches apart, and cover lightly.

Khol-Rabi.—See cabbage and turnip.

Lettuce.—Lettuce may be sown at almost any time during the fall, winter and spring, either in seed-beds to be transplanted, or in drills twelve inches apart, where it is to grow, covering, in either case, very lightly.

Melon.—Plant like the cucumber,

Okra.—Plant when frosts are over, or at the same time with snap beans, in drills three or four feet apart; drop several seeds together two feet apart; cover an inch and a half in depth; thin out to one stalk at each place.

Parsley.—Sow early in the spring in drills one foot apart; cover half an inch deep; gradually thin out the plants to from six to nine inches apart.

Parsnip.—Plant the same as beet, except do not cover quite so deep.

Squash.—Plant the same as cucumber.

Radish.—Plant in drills from eight to ten inches apart, and one inch deep, any time in autumn, winter and spring.

Tomato.—See directions for egg-plant.

Turnip.—Sow in August, September and October, and again in the last part of January and in February, in drills one inch deep, and from fifteen inches to two feet apart, thinning out the plants to from five to six inches apart in the row.—Rural Carolinian.

THE IMPORTANCE OF MULCHING.

A sagacious fruit grower, near New Brunswick, New Jersey, mulches his place heavily, and never removes it from one year's end to another. His soil is always cool and mellow, and his trees and vines never suffer from heat; his fruit is large, fair and delicious, and his produce is extraordinary in quantity. For all newly-planted trees in the spring of the year mulching is the only safe guarantee of their success; without mulching many will fail; with it not one should be lost. The practice is also a saving of labor, and if the mulch is applied two or three inches deep it will keep down all weeds. Mulching can also be used to retard the ripening of fruit from three to ten days. Upon light, sandy soil currants cannot be grown without it. Pears dropping from the trees are safe from bruises. Tomatoes well mulched will double their produce. We scarcely know of a single objection to mulching, and in our experience it has proved to be one of the most economical aids to fruit culture ever brought to the notice of the public. Try it, farmers, all of you, and see what the result will be.—Horticulturist.

ADULTERATION OF LARD.

A writer in the Pharmaceutical Journal says that he lately obtained a quantity of lard from a respectable pork dealer. It was beautifully white; indeed, he had never seen an article that looked better. His first trial of it was in preparing ointment of nitrate of mercury. The color, when the mercurial solution was added, was the reverse of citrine, indeed decidedly saturnine, developing in a short time to a full slate color. Surprised at this unprecedented result, the usual precautions having been taken as to temperature, etc., the lard was suspected, and on examination was found to contain a large proportion of lime. Some time after, being in conversation with a lard renderer, a hint was dropped as to the relation of lime to color, when the information was confidently imparted that a common practice among lard dealers was to mix from two to five per cent. of milk of lime with the melted lard. A saponaceous compound is formed, which is not only pearly white, but will allow of the stirring in, during cooling, of twenty-five per cent. of water. So much for appearances.

Wool-Growing In Southern Mississippi.

That sheep husbandry will become an important feature in our future industries, no one who has given the subject careful consideration will deny. With our climate, abundant native grasses, and an increased acreage of clover and grains, our flocks should be increased, especially as a means of improving worn-out lands. When our people have fairly embarked in the business, we will find the powers of the government evoked for protection of this industry against dogs of all kinds.

To show what one man has done, we refer to the success of Mr. A. E. Lewis, of Jackson county, who now has about four thousand head of sheep, which he keeps in different flocks, and is improving by the introduction of thorough-bred merino bucks. In 1870 he sold twelve thousand pounds of wool at forty cents per pound. Other parties in the same section, being encouraged by past success, are going into the business, so that our coast region will ere long become noted for its wool product.—Field and Factory.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

VELVET CAKES.—Make a batter of one quart of milk and one quart of flour, one gill of yeast, three eggs, a small piece of butter. When light, bake in muffin rings.

WHEN a carpet is taken up to be cleaned, the floor beneath it is generally very much covered with dust. This dust is very fine and dry, and poisonous to the lungs. Before removing it sprinkle the floor with very dilute carbolic acid, to kill any poisonous germs that may be present, and to thoroughly disinfect the floor and render it sweet.

PEACH LEATHER.—Take fine large free-stone peaches; pare, core and mash them to a smooth mass, then strain through a colander or coarse sieve; then to each five pounds of fruit put one of white sugar; set the kettle on the fire and let it boil half an hour or longer, according to the quantity in the kettle. Stir constantly; remove from the fire and spread it on plates in the sun; when sufficiently dried, sprinkle white sugar over it, and roll. Place it in wooden boxes between sheets of white paper. Fig leather can be made in the same way, omitting the straining of the pulp.

DRIED FIGS.—Take perfectly ripe figs, dip them into soda water and wipe them dry. Make a sirup of half pound of sugar to one of fruit; when boiling, drop the figs in and boil half an hour; take them out carefully on to earthen plates; let them stand in the sun two hours, then return them to the sirup and boil another half hour; place them on the plates with the stems up, and with the bottom of another plate press them gradually to a flat shape. Set the dish in the sun, turning the figs frequently with a knife. When dry, pack in wooden boxes lined with white paper; sprinkle sugar between the layers of figs. The same sirup will do to scald more figs so long as there is any left.

Scientific.

A CORRESPONDENT of the British Journal of Photography predicts that owing to the fact that micro-photography was brought to such a degree of perfection by the exigencies of the siege of Paris, the time may not be far distant when our daily paper will be about the size of a postage stamp, and we may have our favorite authors printed on our vest-buttons.

ASTRONOMERS are agreed that Encke's comet is a glowing mass of carbon vapor. Its spectrum consists of three bands, the middle one of which is much brighter than the other two, all apparently identical with the middle lines of carbon. In shape the comet resembles a shuttle, whose longer axis is directed toward the sun, carrying two wings of fainter light on either side near the head.

ON THE seventeenth of September the installation of the Academy of Natural Science took place at Bogota, in Columbia or New Granada, with much ceremony. As yet not much can be expected from it, but it is another sign of the progress taking place in the country. The orator gratefully commemorated what had been done for Columbia by Humboldt, Boussingault and Acosta in geology, and by Mutis and Caldes in botany.

NO BONES IN THE OCEAN.—Mr. Jeffrey has established the fact that bones disappear in the ocean. By dredging it is common to bring up teeth, but rarely ever a bone of any kind; these, however compact, dissolve if exposed to the action of the water but a little time. On the contrary, teeth—which are not bones any more than whales are fish—resist the destroying action of the seawater indefinitely. It is, therefore, a powerful solvent. Still, the popular opinion is that it is a brine. If such were the case, the bottom of all the seas would long ago have been shallowed by immense accumulation of carcases and products of the vegetable kingdom constantly floating into them.

Dentine, the peculiar material of which teeth are formed, and the enamel covering them, offer extraordinary resistance to these chemical agencies, which resolve other animal remains into nothingness. Monads in the West, tumuli in Europe and Asia, which are believed to antedate sacred history for thousands of years, yield up perfectly sound teeth, on which time appears to have made no impression whatever.—Educational Monthly.

AT A MEETING of the Philosophical Society of Christ Church, New Zealand, in August last, the president, Dr. Haast, made a few observations on some moa-eggs recently received from the Colonial Museum in comparison with those of living birds. The various models of eggs were displayed on the table. The president said that the first egg to which he would desire to draw their attention was one the pieces of which had been discovered by the Hon. Walter Mantell, and by him reunited after much labor. The original egg, from which a model had been taken by Dr. Hector, was in the British Museum. The second model was that of the largest egg found. It had been discovered in the Kaikoras Peninsula, between the legs of a human skeleton, which had been buried in a sitting position, and, from the fact of it having been so found, he argued that the man was of great antiquity, as there was no mention in the very earliest Maori traditions of such a mode of burial being adopted. The egg was afterward exhibited at the Otago Exhibition, and the model had been made by Dr. Hector from measurements taken by him. The third and last model was that of a small egg now in the Colonial Museum, which had been found in Otago, and which had in it the bones of a moa chick. Nature.

MUSIC OF ROLLING SAND.—At the late meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, Captain H. S. Palmer contributed an interesting paper on "An Acoustic Phenomenon at Jebel Nagus, in the Peninsula of Mount Sinai." Jebel Nagus is a peculiar sand slope, from which loud and mysterious noises are frequently heard to proceed, exciting the superstitions of the Bedouin and the wonder of travelers. The slope is about two thousand feet in height. The sand, which is of a pale yellowish brown color, appears to be that of the neighboring desert. Its grains are large, and consist entirely of quartz. The sand of the slope is so pure and fine, and in its usual condition, so perfectly dry, and lies at so high an angle (nearly three hundred and eight) with the horizon, as to be set in motion by the slightest cause. When any considerable quantity is thus in motion, rolling slowly down the slope like some viscous fluid, then is heard—at first a deep, swelling, vibratory moan, rising gradually to a dull roar, loud enough when at its height to be almost startling, and then as gradually dying away till the sand ceases to roll. Captain Palmer said that this sound is difficult to describe exactly; it is not metallic, not like the sound of a bell, nor yet like that of a nagus. Perhaps the very hoarsest note of an Eolian harp, or the sound produced by rubbing the wet rim of a deep-toned finger-glass, most closely resembles it, save that there is less music in the sound of this rolling sand. It may also be likened to the noise produced by air rushing into the mouth of an empty metal flask or bottle; sometimes it almost approaches the roar of thunder, and sometimes it resembles the deeper notes of a violoncello or the hum of a humming-top.

SAVE YOUR CLOTHING! SAVE YOUR LABOR!

ITEMS OF IMPORTANCE TO EVERY HOUSEKEEPER.

THE WOMAN'S FRIEND

WASHING MACHINE!

Only four months since it was first introduced to the New Orleans public, and large numbers have been sold.

It washes by beating instead of rubbing—the only true principle as time has demonstrated.

A Home-manufactured Article.

THE UNDERSIGNED offers this Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating instead of rubbing. It will wash 16 shirts or 25 ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly Wash, Rinse and Blue 100 pieces of ordinary clothing in FORTY-FIVE MINUTES, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread. The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it.

WITHOUT THE LEAST INJURY.

It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and cost less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every machine will do what is represented if the directions are followed.

To verify what is stated, I have obtained a few certificates from responsible parties, which are annexed hereto.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

EDWARD THOMPSON, Manufacturer and Proprietor,
fe22 1m 181 PETERS STREET, NEAR JULIA, NEW ORLEANS.

GREENSBURG, LA., November 1, 1871.

"I hereby certify that I have one of the "Rocker or Woman's Friend Washing Machines," and have found it the Machine for country use, as it will wash dirty clothes, such as farm laborers wear rolling logs, etc. Any machine will wash clothes that are slightly soiled. A. W. CARRUTH.

Mr. Carruth, in a letter accompanying this certificate, makes the following statement: "My wife, who understands fully the principles and process of washing, says it is useless to wash ordinarily soiled clothes through more than one hot water, but I could not well embody this in a certificate."

NEW ORLEANS, November 8, 1871.

I take pleasure in stating that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson in September last, gives me excellent satisfaction. I have used it personally, and can say that it will wash the dirtiest clothes and give them a grass-bleached whiteness. I have washed Swiss muslin dresses with it without the least injury. I have washed blankets with it and found (as stated in the circulars) that it gives them a new appearance and feeling. One week, during a temporary illness, my little girl twelve and a-half years of age done the entire washing—I simply put in the water and soap. I will give any further information I may possess to those interested, by calling at my residence. MRS. A. BOUCHEREAU,
232½ Eighth street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 18, 1871.

MR. E. THOMPSON—Dear Sir: I have used your Washer for the last three months, and as a practical man (scouring daily) I pronounce it the best in the market; I could not spare it. I will explain its merits to any one by applying to P. VOLNEY,
Dyer and Scourer, 89 Bienville street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 7, 1871.

I certify that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson last June, has done the entire washing of my hotel, from the largest quilt and blanket to the smallest collar, ever since, to my entire satisfaction. It will wash clean the dirtiest pieces, and will not damage the most delicate. It has saved me a great amount of labor. Any one can see it in operation at my hotel on Monday of each week.

Proprietor Verandah Hotel, New Orleans.

SYLVESTER-LARNED INSTITUTE
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
402 and 404 Carondelet street,
New Orleans, November 15, 1871.

MR. E. THOMPSON—Dear Sir: Having used for over two months your "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," and tested it most thoroughly under my own eye, I am prepared to say with confidence that it does all you claim for it, if the simple and plain directions are followed. The Wringer especially is a great success. Altogether the Machine and Wringer are wonderful labor-saving machines, and the machine is very properly called "Woman's Friend."

Without it, not less than double our present number of servants would be required to do our work—hence the economy of it is evident. Every family should have one. Yours truly, J. S. PAGAUD.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the several Southern States, feel-ing the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern mind, the facts of history and science—of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are now issuing, a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars and the most eminent citizens of the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodor M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by the fifteen teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The general market has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation. Sugar and molasses have been quiet, with light receipts, only a moderate demand, and prices showing no marked variation. The higher grades of flour, from treble extra up, have continued in moderate supply and commanded full prices, but double extra and the lower grades have ruled in favor of buyers. Corn has continued in active demand, and mixed and yellow have further advanced 7@7½c. ₱ bushel, and white about 2½c.

The river is 11 feet 8 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the first instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales	10,380
Lake	19
Mobile	678
Arkansas	1,682
Florida	15
Texas	179
Total	12,953

On Saturday the demand was confined to a few buyers who came forward with materially lower offers, and factors who were compelled to realize, or desired to sell from apprehending a further reduction, were under the necessity of making further concessions. Good ordinary sold at 20c., low middling at 20¾c., low middling with staple at 21c., strict low middling at 21c., and middling at 21¼@21½c. Most factors, however, refused to offer their stocks and the sales were confined to 1,150 bales. On Monday, under favorable dispatches from Liverpool and New York, factors materially raised their pretensions. The demand, nevertheless, was quite active, especially toward the close, and fully 7,950 bales changed hands at an irregular advance of ⅛@¼c. on the prices accepted on Saturday, good ordinary closing at 20½@20¾c., low middling at 21¼@21¾c. (with very little to be had under 21¾c.) and middling at 22@22¼c. On Tuesday the demand, being stimulated by still more favorable dispatches from Liverpool and a further advance of ¼c. at New York, was still more active, and 9,700 bales changed hands at an additional improvement of ⅜c. in good ordinary and about ¼c. in low middling and middling. This shows a total advance since Friday evening of ½@⅝c. in good ordinary, ⅝c. in low middling, ½c. in middling and strict middling, and ⅜c. in good middling. Toward the close strict low middling sold at 22¼c., which is ⅛c. above our outside figures for that grade.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 787,050 bales, against 1,047,990 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 679,402 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 133,612 to France, and a decrease of 478,568 to Great Britain, and of 134,513 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	19½ @ 20½
Good ordinary	20½ @ 21
Low middling	21½ @ 22
Middling	22½ @ 22½
Strict middling	22½ @ 22½

SUGAR.—The market is dull, and prices have weakened, although the receipts are light. There is some demand for open kettle, but little or none for clarified. The sales on Saturday and Monday were at 8c. for common, 8⅞@9⅛c. for good fair, 9¼@9½c. for fully fair, 9⅞c. for prime, 9@9⅞c. for seconds, 10½c. for centrifugal, and 11⅛c. for yellow clarified.

MOLASSES.—On Monday the sales were at 40@45c. for common and centrifugal, fermenting, 50c. for fair fermenting, 52c. for good fermenting, and 60c. for prime not fermenting. Some half bbls. strictly prime sold at 63c. ₱ gallon.

CORN.—On Tuesday the demand was active, and the supplies were sold, prices showing an advance of 2½c. ₱ bushel. The sales embraced 11,000 sacks at 82½c. for mixed, 85c. for yellow, and 85@87½c. for white.

OATS.—On Tuesday prices were higher, with a light supply and good demand. 2,000 sacks sold at 53@55c. for Ohio river, and 56c. for choice Western.

BRAN.—The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 1,200 sacks, in lots, at $1.60 ₱ 100 lbs. On Tuesday 600 sacks sold at $1.60 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday 175 bbls. mess sold, in two lots, at $14, and 50 at $13.87½ ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $14.25.

BACON.—On Tuesday clear sides were in demand and higher, but shoulders and clear rib sides were dull and unchanged. Some 100 casks were sold, in lots, at 6½c. for shoulders, 7¼c. for clear rib sides, and 8½@8¼c ₱ lb. for clear sides. Shoulders are quoted at 6@6½c.

HAMS.—20 tierces sugar-cured sold on Saturday at 11½c. and 6 tierces on Monday at 11¾c. ₱ lb. They are quoted at 11½@12c. On Tuesday 10 tierces sugar-cured sold at 12c.

DRY SALT MEAT.—50 casks shoulders sold at 4⅞c., and 20 casks rib sides at 6½c.; 43 casks shoulders at 5c., 50,000 lbs. rib sides at 6c., and 50,000 lbs. at 4⅞c. for shoulders, 6½c. for rib sides, and 7c. for hams.

LARD.—On Tuesday 25 and 30 tierces packers' sold at 9½c., 50 tierces refined at 9½c., 25 tierces do. at 9⅝c., and 136 kegs kettle-rendered on private terms.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 110@110¼, (against 110⅛ at New York,) and closed at 110¼, (against 110⅛ at New York.)

American half dollars are quoted at 108@108½, and Mexican dollars at 3@3½ per cent. premium in gold.

The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1872. NO. 11.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Denver, Col., March 6.—The Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Company has finished grading and bridging the second division, from Colorado Springs to Pueblo, Colorado. Track laying will be commenced immediately, and by the middle of April regular trains will be running from Denver to Pueblo, one hundred and eighteen miles.

Washington, March 11.—Ten candidates for the ministry were ordained yesterday by Bishop Paine. The services were very impressive. In the Conference to-day ten young men were admitted on probation to the ministry.

The Rev. Dr. Finney, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, addressed the Conference on behalf of the Southwestern Publishing House of St. Louis.

Rev. Dr. Young, of Nashville, Tennessee, succeeds Rev. Dr. Huston as pastor of Trinity church, in Baltimore.

Rev. Dr. Cowles, presiding elder of Lynchburg district, who broke his leg a few days ago, is recovering rapidly.

Washington, March 12, 8 P. M. Private dispatches indicate that New Hampshire has gone Radical by a very small majority. Nothing decisive yet received through regular channels.

Jackson, Miss., March 12.—The railroad subsidy has been extended to all railroads to be built in the State, with provisions that one and a half per cent. of the gross earnings be paid into the treasury two years after receiving the subsidy.

All new railroads in Mississippi are to get $4,000 per mile as a subsidy, and shall pay into the State treasury one and a half per cent. of the gross receipts for thirty-five years, commencing two years after receiving the subsidy.

FOREIGN.

Vienna, March 6.—It has been ascertained from official sources that Austria has not offered an asylum to the Pope.

Rome, March 6.—At a recent meeting of the Italian Society for the Diffusion of the Bible, Pere Hyacinthe said that while he could not become a member of the society, he willingly gave it his approval and concurrence.

Berlin, March 6.—The Upper House of the Prussian Diet has under consideration the school of instruction bill. During the debate to-day Bismarck made a significant speech. He expressed his fear of the disloyal influences of the Catholic clergy, and insisted on a clause providing for the introduction of the German language into the Polish schools. He assured the Conservatives that the government did not intend to break with their party, but it would not submit to pressure.

The donations granted by the Emperor on the anniversary of the entry of the Germans into Paris have given rise to much comment, on account of the largeness of the sums disposed of; it is said Prince Frederick Charles, Generals Von Moltke, Von Roon, Manteufel and the Duke of Bavaria received each three hundred thousand thalers, General Goeben and Minister Delbruck two hundred thousand, and twelve others one hundred thousand thalers each, and that Generals Fabrick, Bernthal and others were proportionately remembered.

Shocks of an earthquake were felt this afternoon, simultaneously, in Dresden, Pierna, Shandon, Chemnitz, Badenback, Weimar and Rudalstadt. The movement was not violent, but was more or less perceptible at intervals for over an hour.

London, March 7.—The French Atlantic Cable Company have resolved to lay another cable.

Dispatches from Melbourne report that the British sloop-of-war Rosario, Commander Palmer, shelled and destroyed the village inhabited by the murderers of Bishop Patterson.

The London Times, in its article on the Alabama claims to-day, infers from the admission made by the press of the United States that Americans now acknowledge the extravagance of the demand for indirect damages, although they show no disposition to withdraw from the case.

The Times says that if the fifth claim for losses, by the transfer of American commercial marine to the British flag, is not abandoned, England will declare reference to the Geneva tribunal inadmissible, which course is approved by English statesmen and jurists.

Matamoras, Mexico, March 9.—Armed bands, supposed to be commanded by General Cortinas, crossed the river at Santa Maria Ranche, thirty miles from here, capturing several residents, including two customs inspectors, whom they held until one thousand head of cattle were stolen and crossed, when the prisoners were released and the band returned to the Mexican side.

A. Gomez Portugal was compelled to evacuate Aguas Calientes.

The rebel chiefs Donalo, Guerrero and Martinez are quarreling with Trevino, Naranjo and others. Their commands have separated. Diaz has arrived at the northern frontier and assumed command.

Juarez has two millions in the treasury, which insures his probable success, as the rebels have nothing.

Felix Diaz was killed with clubs by a mob in the State of Oaxaca.

An order from Washington forbidding clearances to all ports held by the rebels causes much excitement among the revolutionists, as it stops coast trade.

Havana, March 9.—Latest Vera Cruz advices state that General Rocha sends false news of his movements to the government.

The removal of the seat of government to Vera Cruz is discussed. The government there, it is contended, will be in better position to receive assistance from the United States in case of necessity.

Alexis goes to Rio Janeiro, direct from Havana, and thence to China via the Cape of Good Hope.

London, March 10.—The Observer states that Fish's reply to Granville's note concerning the claim for indirect damages has been read. It expresses the desire of the American government for a final and amicable settlement of the whole question. The Observer adds: Neither the British nor the American governments favor reopening the proceedings of the joint high commission.

Paris, March 11.—The government insists on retaining in its bill for control of the press the declaration of the forfeiture of sovereign power by the imperial dynasty.

WESTERN CONFERENCE.

Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D. D., Sec'y B. M.—Dear Brother: As I failed to report to you last quarter, I will now give a report of labors since Conference. I lack only one appointment of completing my second round on the Council Grove district. Family sickness caused me to miss one quarterly meeting, and only one. I have traveled 1,500 miles on horseback; preached 75 sermons; organized 4 new Quarterly Conferences; baptized 10 infants and 12 adults; added 48 to the church; visited 100 families; and preached at 23 different places—most of these places I have visited twice; sold books to the value of $20; the increase in members, since Conference, is over 190. We have almost doubled our members since Conference, and still God is blessing us. I have had one horse stolen from me, and my saddle-bags, and books, and clothing, worth not less than $100. I will now report each mission separately:

Council Grove has no appropriation, but is in my district; J. O. Forsman is the preacher. He is working mightily, and is succeeding gloriously; 52 additions, and revival still progressing in town.

Waterville: I. Drake is the preacher; he is getting old, and has given up to the winter; increase in members up to last account, 17. I think there are more now.

Wamego: R. K. Higgins; he is at work in earnest, and is having good success; increase, 9.

Marion Center: O. P. Noble; he is doing well; work prospering; increase in members, 45.

Clark's Creek: O. Smithson; increase, 12.

Augusta: W. W. Jared; increase in members, 2.

Independence: R. H. Grinstead; he is a model young man, and doing well; increase, 33.

Fall River: J. J. Snodgrass; he is rather feeble, and cannot stand the winter very well; increase, 15.

I know the brethren have baptized quite a number, both of infants and adults, but cannot give numbers.

Emporia: W. B. Maxey; he is a good man, but has not yet taken hold of this work.

Humboldt: No supply; nothing done.

We need at least four more missions, and men for them, in this district. Next year they would pay largely for the investment.

Remember us in your prayers. Yours in the gospel,

Jacob McEwen, P. E.

Roman Catholic Movements in Europe.

We are indebted to the Christian Union for the following interesting items:

M. Michaud and the Pope.—The Old Catholic war has broken out with new vigor in Paris, under the lead of M. Michaud, Vicar of the Madeline, and an honorary canon of Chalons. The occasion of the conflict is the rigor of the demands of Hippolyte of Tours, the new Archbishop of Paris. Under his predecessor, Michaud was allowed private liberty of conscience as to the decree of the Pope's infallibility, which he rejected, though he was outwardly to submit to it. On the accession of the new archbishop M. Michaud inquired of him first whether he would allow priests under him to give absolution to those who reject the Vatican Council and its decree of infallibility? Secondly, whether he would allow priests to celebrate mass who do not in their hearts accept the council as ecumenical, and its decree as Catholic and valid?

To both these questions the archbishop gave a decided negative.

The Abbe Michaud severely rebuked him for his apostasy from his own former doctrines and threw off his authority, and resigned his preferments, intending still to preach and officiate as a priest of the Old Catholic Church. His rebukes of the archbishop are very severe, as given by the correspondent of the London Daily News:

"You, Mouseigneur, at one time, when you were Bishop of Viviers, declared that the Ultramontane party was anti-Catholic; but now you treat as heretics and schismatics the Catholics who persevere in rejecting Ultramontanism. You formerly defined Catholic truth to be that universal truth which, in the words of Vincent de Lerins, had 'always been believed everywhere and by everybody'—quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus creditum est; but now this Catholic truth has degenerated in your mind to Roman truth. Formerly the Catholic Church was the agglomeration of all the particular churches, but now in your eyes and those of your adepts the church is nothing else but Rome and the Pope. The universality of the Church of Jesus Christ is degraded to the individualism of one man. You, in fact, ignore Jesus Christ, and care only for his vicar, whom you make his master; for with you the gospel is subordinate to the interpretation which the Pope may choose to put upon it—the gospel is no longer that of Jesus Christ, but the bull which it may be the good pleasure of any present or future Borgia to issue.'

This is bold speech, and indicates a full counting of the cost. Nor does it involve him alone, for he states in his letter to the archbishop that he is acting for a party in the church who "will not allow the Pope to supplant Christ by the Syllabus."

Recently a committee met at his house, at which German, English, Italian, Spanish and Russian committees were present, and they avow the purpose, as soon as funds can be collected, of opening churches independent of the Ultramontane episcopacy.

The basis of this movement is essentially the same as that of Dollinger, but there seems to be more tone in it, and it takes a wider range. The leader, the man of energy and enthusiasm may be at last found in M. Michaud.

The importance of this movement cannot be overestimated.

Father Hyacinthe.—The new paper of Hyacinthe, the organ of the Old Catholic movement at Rome, has made its appearance. It is called L'Esperance de Rome. It coincides with the movement of Michaud. His position may be understood by this platform:

"If, with all the deference that is due to the church, we dare to require reforms, let it be fully understood that we do not thereby renounce our title as Catholics. We do not seek to incite pulpit against pulpit; we only ask for the reform of the church in the church; and if we often frankly condemn the abuses committed by those who pretend to be its sole representatives, we shall often also console ourselves with the recollection of its good acts and its greatness."

If now all who stand on this platform are excommunicated at Rome, the result will be, however it may be named, a second Reformation, in the name of the true and real church, and in opposition to papal despotism.

Bismarck and the Pope.—It seems to be the purpose of the Pope, through his Catholic subjects, to attack the German empire as defending the Old Catholics against his excommunications and as predominantly Protestant. A correspondent of the London Times represents a member of the Prussian Landtag, speaking in the name of the papal party, as avowing opposition to the present national union, and preferring a looser connection between the German States as more congenial to the habits and traditional tendencies of the people. This means that the Pope is not willing that the Catholic portions of Germany should be swamped in a powerful Protestant empire, and would like to dissolve the Union.

To this attack Bismarck made a telling and bold reply. He deprecated the formation of a political party on this narrow papal basis; but seeing it to be a fact, he took up the gauntlet thrown down, and yet made pacific overtures in the form of offering the Pope a permanent representative in a Nuncio at Berlin. As to the complaint that the empire resists the execution of the Pope's excommunications, he says:

"All we have done is this: We have prevented Catholic bishops from deposing, or causing to be deposed, teachers and professors, masters in our public schools and servants of the government. In resisting this interference with administrative affairs, we are borne out by the letter and spirit of the law; and if it is alleged that these gentlemen ought to be dismissed because, while they profess to inculcate the Catholic religion, they in reality have ceased to be Catholics, all I can say is, that this is a contested question under existing statutes, and that the enactment of fresh laws will be required to solve the doubt. The preparation of bills for this purpose, the new Minister for Church and Educational Affairs will, I believe, regard as one of his primary duties. The Prussian government respect the religious convictions of all the various churches represented in the State; but they object to execute the decrees of the ecclesiastical authorities, and to establish, as it were, five or six State churches in one and the same monarchy."

The Freeman gives as Bismarck's concluding words the following passage, which it says is good for other nations as well as Germany, and which some English statesmen, calling themselves liberal, would do well to study.

"We must do all we can so to arrange matters as to have the least possible concern with religion in our parliamentary proceedings. It is the earnest wish of the government that each religion, and above all, the Catholic, which is so much respected, and professed by so large a portion of the people, should have perfect freedom of action in the Prussian State. The government has nothing to do with dogmatic discussions; every dogma, whether we believe in it or not, which is adopted by so many millions of our countrymen must be sacred to the government and the rest of the population. But we cannot admit the claim of any ecclesiastical authorities to have a share in the power of the State, and we consider it necessary, in the interest of peace, to restrict them within their proper province. A government which adheres to the principle of religious equality must not be asked to adopt a sectarian policy; we have no special State religion in this country."

The correspondent of the London Times thinks that the papal party will not recede from its attack on the empire, for they fear its influence.

"It is the reunion of Germany into an organized whole which is thought to threaten the interests of the party temporarily paramount in the church; it is not the action of the imperial government, who would wish to be friends with the Pope, but their very existence which gives offense. If the pontiff and his council were men of temperate views, they would have tried to make the best they could of a bad bargain, and have allied themselves to any government disposed to countenance established religion, no matter whether Catholic or Protestant; but they object to a Protestant empire—nay, they object even to Catholic cabinets, unless they consent to uphold the Syllabus and its supplementary decrees."

The movement is designed to create religious enthusiasm for the Pope in the masses, and it will do it; but it is repugnant to the immense majority of educated people.

Obviously the forces are gathering for a tremendous conflict. Who can forefell the future? But if the Pope is no wiser in the future than in the past, he will but lead his forces to final defeat.

The Christian World, in view of the facts, says:

"What with the Old Catholic movement in Germany, and the threatened rising of the Gallican clergy, it seems as if we were on the eve of a revolution in the Church of Rome. Prudence, however, requires that we suspend our judgment. Prince Bismarck does not forget the part played by the Romish clergy in Germany, in the late war, in endeavoring to incite the people against the Prussians; and as he perceives that the claims they are now putting forth are incompatible with constitutional government, he has just given public expression to his sentiments in a debate arising out of the votes of supply for the department of public worship and education. He calls the Catholic party "an army on a war footing for fighting the Prussian monarchy." It appears that the Ultramontanists are threatening to go to the constituencies with the cry of "Save the church!" Bismarck is said to have come out of the debate more popular than ever. Even in free America the Romanists are adopting a thoroughly reactionary policy; and in the matter of education now declare that, although all direct and indirect religious instruction be excluded from the public schools, that would not render them a whit less objectionable, for they object not less to purely secular than they do to sectarian schools. They are the modern impersonation of the horse-leech, crying, 'Give, give'—never satisfied."

Rebuilding the Southern Methodist Publishing House.

AN APPEAL TO THE CHURCH.

The intelligence of the misfortune which befell our Publishing House by fire, on the morning of the fifteenth of February, has reached every part of our connection, and the amount of our loss has been reported with as much accuracy as has been possible.

That portion of the building which was destroyed was not equal to our wants, while the front building is not only in a dilapidated condition, but has never been adequate to the demands of the church.

Under these circumstances, the city of Nashville, without respect to denominational feelings, meeting the expressed desire of the church coming to us from every quarter, proposes to contribute $30,000 (nearly all of which is already subscribed) toward the erection of a new house, such as will meet the wishes of the church, if a sufficient amount can be raised elsewhere to complete the edifice. This liberality on the part of the city of Nashville is highly to be commended, especially when we remember that nearly $20,000 was contributed by the city when the house was established here in 1851.

To erect buildings such as will meet the approval of the church, and afford to us all the facilities that our rapidly growing business demands, will cost not less, after practicing the most rigid economy, than $50,000. The question for the church to consider is, whether on the very eve of success, and the accomplishment of an object dear to the heart of every Southern Methodist, we shall fail for want of the co-operation of the church.

The Nashville subscription is conditional, and will be void unless the new building is erected. Shall we lose this opportunity?

If we fail to build, the Publishing House nevertheless will necessarily have to undergo thorough repairs, which will cost us nearly the amount of difference between the Nashville subscription and the amount which we ask the church to contribute. These repairs will be necessary for the preservation of the property, as well as of our book-stock on hand.

We are already receiving generous aid from abroad—Cincinnati, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Louisville, and different portions of Tennessee have sent us contributions. A prompt and united effort within the next two weeks will accomplish this work. We appeal to brethren everywhere to assist us. Let the preachers take up collections in all their congregations immediately, while generous and liberal-minded friends remit to us according to their sympathy for our misfortune, and their anxiety to see erected a Publishing House worthy of Southern Methodism.

ORPHAN SCHOOLS IN CHINA.

Shanghai, China, Jan. 11, 1872.

Mr. Editor: I send by this mail an account of the funds received and expended for the two orphan schools, one under my charge and the other under the supervision of Mrs. Lambuth. There are eleven boys in the male school, who are cared for, and taught to love and serve God. There are, beside these, some four or five boys who come during the day and receive instruction.

In the girls' school there are eight orphans who are cared for, and are daily taught the blessed truths of the Bible. There are also some four or five day scholars who come and receive instruction. We have received a great deal of encouragement in these schools, and though they have not been in existence any very great length of time, yet much good has been already the result. We look for greater results if we can only keep them in operation. The foundation is being laid for a greater work, and we do hope to see young Christian men and women go out from these schools in after years. We are having a week of prayer among all foreign Christians just now, and we are having the same among our native Christians. We are looking for and expecting a blessing upon us during this season of prayer. The native Christians are being warmed up and influenced by the gracious influences of the Spirit of God, and we hope and pray that this year may be so blessed with an outpouring of the Spirit of God in this heathen land that it may long be remembered as a time of refreshing from the Lord. I am happy to say that I have been privileged to baptize twelve persons during the past year, and received some six others on probation, one of whom is a priest of the Buddhist religion, who says he is anxious to become a Christian. Surely this should encourage us to labor on in the work of the Lord in a heathen land, and I trust the people of God in Christian lands will not cease to pray for us and the work. And may God revive his work in our hearts, and hasten his kingdom, when the peaceful reign of our blessed Lord and Savior shall overspread all nations, and fill every heart, is my sincere prayer.

THE OLD MISSION DEBT.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South still owes to sundry persons about $9,000, on account of the old mission debt. This amount has been provided for by the Annual Conferences. So soon as the Conferences now deficit pay their subscriptions, we shall be entirely relieved of this incubus.

THE FIRST FRUITS.

BY REV. WILLIAM J. R. TAYLOR, D. D.

Deut. xxvi. 2, 10; First Cor. xv. 23.

Just as the Hebrew priest received
The first sheaf from the reaper's hand,
And to the Lord, whom they believed,
Offered the harvest of the land,

So Jesus risen from the tomb,
Where love had laid him gently down,
Came to the altar, in the bloom
Of that new life which won his crown.

"Christ, the first fruits;" the first ripe sheaf
Of the wide world's great harvest-field;
The perfect pattern, type and chief
Of all the treasures death shall yield.

So let the precious seed be sown
In every furrow of the earth,
Beneath the seas, in graves unknown,
Till Christ shall send the reapers forth.

Lord of the living and the dead,
Who art alive for evermore,
Thy sleeping saints await their Head,
Like Mary at the open door!

They shall come with thee in that hour
When, without sin, thou com'st to save;
They shall be like thee, by thy power
To conquer death and spoil the grave.

Break, break, O morning fair and bright!
Wake all the sleepers of the tomb;
O Sun of Glory! with thy light
Flood the dark vale, dispel the gloom.

Wave thy ripe sheaf, O Prince of Life!
In the great house not made with hands:
And at thine altar end the strife
With death and sorrow in all lands.

"Christ, the first fruits;" "and afterward"
They that are Christ's, when he shall come;
The best sheaf lifted heavenward,
Then the full-garnered harvest-home.

Then shall our harvest joy arise,
When all thy sheaves are safe at home,
Singing the hymn of Paradise!
"Thy will be done!" "Thy kingdom come!"

REGENERATION.—NO. 2.

After a sinner is justified, regenerated, adopted, and has a knowledge of his acceptance with God by the Holy Ghost bearing witness with his spirit that he is a child of God, is he pardoned and cleansed from all sin, or does sin still remain in him? We answer: we believe that when a sinner is justified, regenerated and adopted, that all his sins are pardoned, and all his pollutions are washed away, and he is cleansed from all sin by the blood of Jesus Christ, both inward and outward sin, because he is now in Christ Jesus. "And if any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature. Old things are passed away; behold! all things are become new." There is a new creation in the soul of that man. "Old things are passed away." All the old sinful principles that were in his soul before he was born of God are passed away; and all the old sinful practices in his life before he was regenerated are also passed away. "Behold! all things are become new." He has a new and clean heart, and he lives a new and spiritual life. He has new spiritual senses, new faculties, new desires and designs, new hopes and fears, new joys and sorrows, new passions and appetites. His whole tenor of action is new, and he lives, as it were, in a new world. God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, angels, men, sinners, saints, and the whole creation—heaven, earth, and all therein—appear in a new light, and stand related to him in a new manner, since he was created anew in Christ Jesus. Now let us suppose him to die in this condition. What would become of him? Would he not go to heaven? We think all that believe that there is a heaven will answer, Yes. But could he go to heaven with sin in him? All will answer, He could not. Well, then, if he is a fit subject for heaven there is no sin in him—he is cleansed from all sin. "But hold," says an objector; "I have been taught to believe that inbred sin remains, but does not reign, in the heart of a child of God after he is regenerated and made a new creature. Therefore I cannot believe your new doctrine." Well, then, if sin remains in him, though it does not reign in him, is not sin still in him? And if he was to die with sin in him, could he be saved in heaven? Can sin enter heaven? You answer, No. Well, then, if sin cannot enter heaven, and sin remains in the soul of the man after he is regenerated, if he was to die in that moment what would become of him? He cannot enter heaven with sin in him; therefore he must be lost. We see but one possible way to save him, and that is to suppose him to be cleansed from all sin when he was regenerated and made a new creature. This doctrine is not a new one. It is as old as the New Testament. We read in it that the thief was pardoned on the cross, and went to heaven from the cross in a very short time after he was forgiven. He was cleansed from all sin, or he could not the same day have been with Christ in paradise. Therefore we conclude that when a sinner is pardoned and regenerated, he is cleansed from all sin, and is a fit subject for the kingdom of heaven. But where will you find it written in the oracles of God that Christ or any of his apostles taught that sin remained in the regenerated soul? We answer, we have not been able to find one text of Scripture to prove that sin remains in the soul of the regenerated man. But Christ and all his apostles, and the whole tenor of Scripture, speak of him as a proper subject for the kingdom of heaven. Therefore we conclude that the doctrine of sins remaining in the regenerated soul is not a doctrine of the Bible. Again, it is said the doctrine we contend for is a dangerous doctrine to preach. Not so, if Christ and his apostles preached it. Again, it is said it is not the doctrine of the primitive church. We know it is not the doctrine of the primitive Church of Rome, nor of the primitive Calvinistic Church, nor of the primitive High Church of England; but it is the doctrine of the primitive church of Jesus Christ and his apostles. Once more, it is said our doctrine conflicts with Christian experience. If so, the Bible also conflicts with Christian experience, because the doctrine we contend for is the doctrine of the Bible.

OLD AND NEW.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of February 8 an article headed "Future Life, an Old Testament Doctrine." The article seems to be copied, but it is not stated where from. The argument to prove the proposition is unanswerable; if it were not it would not be a very able one. I like not only the argument, but the short, conclusive reductio ad absurdum form of it. But why should it be considered necessary to make an argument to prove that the future life is a doctrine of the Old Testament!

Are there any doctrines of the New Testament which are not also doctrines of the Old? Surely not. This would be a strange feature of revelation. If the New Testament contained only doctrine of religion which was new—new to revelation—not contained in the Old Testament, that would be, in my opinion, the best evidence the nature of the case could admit of that it was a spurious revelation. I certainly could not receive such a New Testament.

I attach great importance to this point. It is vital to systematic theology, in my humble view. I understand that one of the very first and most fundamental lessons in biblical, in ecclesiastical and theological science lies right here. Here is the great starting point in the philosophy or the conceivableness of salvation. Remove that, and you open the floodgates of rationalism, of Socinian inquiry, of skepticism and outright infidelity; and I, for one, should not know how to close them. Polemical infidelity has secured ten-fold more foothold right here than in all other places. The New Testament is a new religious system! Then you must either discard both, or content yourself with a very limping, crippled-up theology. And as to the church—there is none! Romanism has a little the best show for it, but that is a very poor one.

Romanism and all other forms of high churchism have absolutely nothing to build upon, and never pretended to have, but the notion of a new religious system, and a new church introduced in the New Testament. I am persuaded it is only needful to suggest to you the long, labored, limping arguments of many Christian writers, in attempting to answer infidels after admitting "Christianity" to be a new system of salvation, that the New Testament contains new doctrines not before revealed. With that admission an intelligent infidel writer, before an impartial tribunal, will always have the advantage.

The New Testament elaborates the Old. It expounds, explains and enforces the doctrines written by the prophets, but makes not the slightest change or addition.

Short-sighted and shallow-thinkers might suppose that this simple question of religious doctrines in the New Testament, and not in the Old, was not matter of great importance; but he needs to hold still long enough to be told that the truth in these premises permeates every doctrine of the divine Christ-ship, supports every principle of biblical hermeneutics, and stands ready to answer every important question in ecclesiastical science. This one single error, and nothing else, to-day gives to the entire squad and brotherhood of high churchists, from foot-washing down through "divine" episcopacy to infallibility, every inch of even plausible support it has or claims to have.

I think I know what I write. And while I would not be dogmatical, but, in good faith and honest sincerity, would gladly sit at the feet of any Christian man and learn, I cannot forget—nor have I any objections that others should know—that I have spent some portion of a somewhat protracted life in and around this portion of my Father's vineyard. In this I have studied more than a thousand authors, and consulted many more; and I have reason to believe that herein my labors have not been entirely in vain in the Lord.

I may be told there are respectable authors against me in this thing. If there are, I have not met with one who has studied the question, or who claims to have done so. Again, I may be told that standard authors write differently. This I unqualifiedly deny. There is not one that has published a word differently. Fortunately this is a question easily determined. The standard authors are all published in one volume, and are therefore easily consulted. I will be sincerely obliged to any man who will show me anything from these writers conflicting with anything I have written or preached on this subject in the last ten years. My writings before about that time—say before the publication of my Church and Ministry—certain, as I deeply regret, occasional blunders along here. I am thankful that I have lived to correct them.

R. ABBEY.

STEWARDS.

MR. EDITOR: There is perhaps not another office in our church, to which laymen are eligible, as important as this. The trustee, the Sunday school superintendent and the class-leader are each important; but the steward, the fiscal agent of the church, how can we get along without him?

Every pastoral charge is entitled to one steward for every thirty members, or one for each society, or seven in all. Stewards are to be elected annually by the Quarterly Conference, the preacher in charge having the right of nomination. They are to be men of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline, and of good natural and acquired abilities to transact the temporal business of the church.

It is the duty of stewards to provide for the support of the ministry, to seek the needy and distressed in order to relieve and comfort them, and to provide the elements for the Lord's Supper. Hence Bishop McTyeire, in the Manual of the Discipline, says: "Stewards serve three tables—the table of the Lord, the table of the ministry and the table of the poor." It is also the duty of stewards to inform the preachers of any sick or disorderly persons, to tell the preachers what they think wrong in them, and to give advice, if asked, in planning the circuit.

This suggests the importance of selecting the right men for the office of steward; and no man should accept this office who does not intend, by the grace of God, to discharge these duties. Stewards should read the Discipline, and acquaint themselves with their duties, and discharge them with fidelity or resign. Better have no steward at all than one who neither knows his duty nor cares to perform it.

We again quote from the Manual of the Discipline: "A careless or inefficient steward may, without positive opposition, starve out the ministry in the midst of plenty and a willing people; for no other member feels it liberty to act in his place without appointment. He stands between the pastor and his support. * * * On the contrary, where energetic and liberal stewards are employed, the church partakes of their spirit, the congregation devises liberal things, poverty vies with wealth, and comparatively small and feeble societies amply sustain the institutions of the church." How true is all this! How unfortunate the church that has "a careless and inefficient" steward! How fortunate the church that has an "energetic and liberal" steward!

There is no capacity in which a man stands more in need of the love of Christ to constrain him than in the capacity of a steward. A steward engages in a work, often unpleasant and unacceptable, without fee or reward so far as temporal things are concerned; yet his duties are so important that they cannot be neglected without great injury to the church. Will not God richly reward the faithful steward? And what is there to inspire him in the discharge of his onerous duties but the love of Christ and of his church, and the hope of reward in heaven? Yet what a field for usefulness is here! How the church prospers when all her institutions are sustained—how she wanes when they are neglected! When the grand results of associated Christian effort are achieved, in the resplendent glory of millennial bliss, what a source of happiness will be the thought: "I had some hand in that. By my efforts I contributed to those great results!"

FAYETTE, Mississippi.

HAVE THEY THE RIGHT?

MR. EDITOR: During the present season I have been called on to officiate at quite a number of marriage festivals, and in almost every instance the occasion has been one of "mixed dances." At first I was only a little annoyed, but saw no way to avoid the annoyance but by refusing to officiate where there was a probability of a dance. Here, too, I found some difficulty, for "Will they dance?" was a question which no mortal could answer till the character of the company was seen. Then the question, "Have they the right?" presented itself, to which I, of course, very promptly answered, "No." I remembered the curse pronounced on Babylon by Isaiah, (xiii, 21,) that in the midst of her ruin "owls shall dwell there and satyrs shall dance there." I remembered also that "they (the wicked) send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance," (Job xxi, 11;) and what authority for such a conclusion is found in the conduct of the Israelites in mixing "dancing" in with the sin of idolatry? (Exodus xxxii, 10.) Then I remembered what Abraham said to that lover of worldly amusements when suffering in "the torments of hell," and concluded, as "the father of the faithful" did, that "they have Moses and the prophets, and if they believe not them, neither would they believe though one arose from the dead."

Then I asked again, "Have people a right to make a Christian minister a party to a thing condemned by his Bible, his conscience and his church, by asking him to become a party to one thing, and after they have fastened him there, change the programme or run it further than he calculated on, thus changing it into something else?" And this I answered "No." Just see the advantage taken, and the want of respect shown. You preach on Sunday against "fashionable amusements." On Monday one of your friends (?) invites you to officiate at his nuptial altar on Tuesday evening, and when you get to the house of the bride you see fiddles in every corner. You are victimized; and then in the public assembly you must sit, a silent looker-on, for four or five hours, to the very sins which but two days before you so strongly denounced. True, when in the hardness of their hearts men can insult God, preachers may expect but little in such quarters; but still I ask, in the light of etiquette, "Have they the right?"

EL DORADO, Arkansas.

REV. ISAAC WALL.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Died, Tuesday, February 13, at his residence, in Clinton, Louisiana, the Rev. Isaac Wall, aged seventy-three years, six months and thirteen days.

The subject of this notice was born near Bordentown, New Jersey. His mother and the most of his relatives were members of the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers. For the memory of his mother Isaac Wall ever cherished the fondest regard. She left him, when quite young, to battle with life. In his mother he recognized the type of all gentle and noble womanhood. Toward all womanly women Mr. Wall was chivalrous, thoughtful and reverential. He was twice married, and was singularly favored by gaining in his mothers-in-law warm friends, wise counselors and affectionate mothers. Mrs. Margaret Flynn and Mrs. Martha Winans were exceptionally good women—quiet, helpful, Christian ladies—and Mr. Wall loved them with an honest, earnest love.

After learning his trade, which he did thoroughly, Mr. Wall came to Louisiana, with the determination to win fortune and esteem. The latter he gained as soon as he was known. Fortune did not favor him; though he made a great deal of money, he was never rich. Forty-five years ago a mechanic was received with coldness in good society. This was, in part, the result of the reckless and dissipated habits of young men of that class. While the neglect, not to say contempt, with which working young men were treated acted on them to make them reckless, their recklessness reacted on the community to cause more slights. But Isaac Wall, by his upright, manly, honorable conduct, soon secured his place in the best society, among good people. The Rev. James Smiley, a Presbyterian minister, was one of his earliest and best friends, who encouraged him in his efforts at self-improvement. The Smiley family were numbered among Mr. Wall's life-long friends. Several other families of influence adopted the industrious, upright young Wall as an honored friend and relative, some claiming him as a son, and another calling him cousin. Integrity, truth and purity of character are appreciated even in this world of ours.

In 1828 Mr. Wall was married to Miss Sarah Flynn, of East Feliciana, with whom he lived nearly five years. They buried two children during Mrs. Wall's lifetime. In 18— she died, leaving him a widower, with one lovely little boy, who followed his mother to the goodly land within a few months.

It was the triumphant death of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Flynn, which caused Mr. Wall to seek the "like precious faith" with hers, which faith caused her to see convoys of blest spirits waiting around to bear her to the heavenly city. He cast aside all self-righteousness, and did not remit his efforts after reconciliation with God till he felt assured of pardon, and acceptance through the merits of our Savior Jesus Christ. For more than forty years he claimed no other ground of hope, no other trust than this: "Jesus died for me." Mr. Wall went mourning for some weeks, when God spoke peace to his soul, at Old Bethel camp ground. We had a hard struggle with the enemy of souls before he gained the victory; and even after he was justified he feared to claim to be a child of God. One day, at the meeting, he went to the woods, on the skirts of the encampment, with Uncle Isaac Taylor, to pray. After their praying Mr. Wall began to tell his feelings and the exercises of his mind. He commenced by saying that he felt no joy, but only peace. "It is peace!" he said; "it is peace!" he exclaimed; "it is peace!" he shouted, till the grand old woods rang with that word that is the sign of what Jesus left us—"Peace I leave with you." From that hour the course of Isaac Wall was "onward and upward," toward the mark set before him, which he considered to be a perfect conformity to God's will. Mr. Wall was not perfect. Naturally, he had besetments against which he strove. He fought the good fight, and trampled Satan and sin under his feet. After starting out on a religious life Mr. Wall was much exercised as to what branch of the church he should join. There was no organization near him of the society to which his mother belonged. He was partial to the Presbyterians, because Mrs. Flynn, his mother-in-law, had been a member of that church, and because of the love he bore to his friend, Parson Smiley. But on examining the Confession of Faith he found he could not subscribe to all its teachings. At last he made up his mind fully that the Methodist Church was the church that suited him best, and was baptized at Bethel, October, 1828, by the Rev. William Winans. No man was ever a firmer Methodist than Mr. Wall ever remained; yet he loved every one who loved the Lord Jesus, and he could worship with the Episcopalians, Baptists or Presbyterians in the true spirit of a loving friend and brother. He would work for the Lord with any one who was trying to advance Christ's kingdom.

In the fall of 1833 Mr. Wall was licensed to preach. In 1837 he was ordained deacon, at Natchez, Mississippi, by Bishop Andrews. In December, 1843, he was ordained elder, by Bishop Soule, at Woodville, Mississippi.

In 1834 Isaac Wall was married to Mary Susannah, daughter of Dr. Winans, of the Mississippi Conference. With her he shared life's joys and sorrows till he was taken away from us to his country and kindred, over the Jordan.

The hand of affliction fell very heavily on them during these later years. The children of their love and hopes were taken away "at a stroke." His spirit, under all, was: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." In spite of bereavements and privations, Mr. Wall was cheerful and happy. He grew in gracious tempers under the discipline of his Heavenly Father.

For many years Mr. Wall was a faithful local preacher. In summer's heat and winter's cold he went to fill his appointments. Though upward of threescore and ten, he rarely missed a Sabbath from preaching. He would ride six, eight or ten miles every week to preach and pray with some of the people who were without an appointment for that day. His death was caused, humanly speaking, by going to bury a sister, through very inclement weather. Nothing short of impossibilities ever prevented him from filling an appointment.

Mr. Wall has many dear friends who read the ADVOCATE. This notice is written chiefly for them. Let them be assured that their friend and brother proved "faithful until death"—that he grew in every gracious temper. He ripened for heaven rapidly within the past five years. Oh! how he loved everybody! He felt an infinite yearning over sinners, and prayed without ceasing for them. He loved little children with the tenderest love. In writing this brief notice the trouble is not what to say, but what must be left unsaid.

In his last illness Mr. Wall's mind was flighty. But when spoken to about Jesus he know what was meant, and would smile.

His wife said: "You will soon see papa and mamma, Uncle Drake, little Liza and many other dear friends; but, best of all, you will see the blessed Jesus." He looked her full in the face and assented, with a quiet laugh. One of their sons said: "Papa, I will take care of mamma." He did not look perfectly satisfied. She said: "You leave me in God's hands, don't you?" He assented, and seemed perfectly satisfied that she knew where his trust was.

Though raised in a church that does not have the outward sacraments, Mr. Wall was very particular in celebrating them, and also all the ordinances of the church. He tried to make his family understand that he wished to partake of the Lord's Supper, but they could not think what he wanted. Bro. Godfrey found out what he wanted by the signs he made, prepared the elements, and gave him the Lord's Supper. He was never restless after that. Toward the last all pain ceased, and Isaac Wall fell asleep in Jesus, without one struggle or groan, without even a twitch of the muscles.

Around his dying bed, with weeping eyes, stood the Methodist, the Baptist and the Episcopal ministers of the town. Their hearts' cry seemed to be, My father! the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof!

The greatest kindness and sympathy were shown by all to the departed. Sinful and rough men wept like children at his bedside and at his funeral. May his prayers for the sinners of Clinton be answered!

ITS OF THINGS.

Now, the sowing and the reaping,
Working hard and waiting long;
Afterward the golden reaping,
Harvest-home and grateful song.

Now the pruning, sharp, dispiriting,
Scattered blossom, bleeding shoot;
Afterward the plenteous bearing
Of the Master's pleasant fruit.

Now the long and tollsome duty,
Stone by stone to carve and bring;
Afterward the perfect beauty
Of the palace of the King.

Now the training strange and lowly,
Unexplained and tedious now;
Afterward the service holy,
And the Master's "Enter thou!"

CLINGING.

Is my foolish mind
To the world inclined?
Strengthen it no more to waver;
But to seek alone thy favor.
Wealth in thee to find;
Grant me, Lord, thy mind.

Let my soul be strong,
Bold to suffer wrong
For thy sake, though I should perish;
Life nor earthly wealth to cherish,
All to thee belong;
Only make me strong.

And when I must die,
Let me feel thee nigh;
Through the valley walk beside me,
To the heavenly glory guide me.
Till I feel me nigh
To thy throne on high.

A TRUE STORY.

BY MARION HARLAND.

"I will just go up stairs and tell God all about it!" said Ruth Carey, shutting the doors upon the empty shelves of the cupboard.

And what she said she meant. Nobody doubted that who looked into her honest eyes. She was a dumpling of a woman, short in stature, round in form and face, and comely to the eyes of those who knew her, although her fresh color, and frank, sweet expression were her only claim to beauty. She had a fair knowledge of the ordinary branches of what was considered at that date (five and forty years ago) a young woman's education. But it was certainly not for her intellectual gifts that the Rev. Erasmus Carey had wooed and wedded her. He was "a promising young clergyman," said his brethren in the profession, and was held in such high esteem by the small flock to which he preached, that they had strained every nerve to build a neat church and parsonage for his use. They were fond of him and his wife; but they were as yet but "a feeble folk." A mission church it would be called now-a-days, this fledgling sent off from the well-lined nest in the more fashionable quarter of the city. Brave of heart, it is true, yet holding shiveringly to the bare, outermost bough upon which it had been cast.

The pastor's salary was pitiably meager. Nobody but Ruth, the watchful busy-bee of the bee-hive, knew how the two lived. Erasmus was more ignorant of her ways and means than anybody else.

"I might go in and talk with him about it," thought Ruth, pausing outside the study door. "But where would be the use? He would have no more idea how the difficulty is to be met than Elijah had in what direction to look for the ravens."

"Yet the ravens brought daily food!" said a voice in her heart.

"And the brook Cherith dried up, by and by!" whispered another.

"Get thee behind me!", said the sturdy little woman aloud to the last. "Do you think I have forgotten the barrel of meal and cruse of oil?"

She held on her upward course, past the chambers on the second floor, to a room under the sloping cottage roof. There was a pile of packing boxes in one corner; the place was scrupulously clean, and in front of the one window—a tiny triangle of light—was a rush-bottomed chair, with a Bible laid upon it. This was Ruth's oratory—the chamber that was called peace, and which opened figuratively and literally toward the sunrising. She knelt down upon the bare floor. She did not need to "prepare herself for prayer by a course" of reading and self-examination. The staircase that led for her to the mercy-seat was trodden so often that rubbish never gathered there. With the bowing of the head, and the utterance of the first word, she was face to face with him whom her soul sought. She had something to say to him, and she said it. "Just told God all about it."

How, save one loaf of bread, she had no food in the house; how she had lived upon bread and milk for three days, that Erasmus might have the meat his more delicate frame required. How thankful she was that he was too absent-minded to glance at her plate when she laid the savory morsels upon his. How, in her absence, last week, he had given away the last dollar they had in the world to a sick widow with six small children.

"One of the Lord's poor, my dear," he had answered his wife's exclamation of dismay, "compared with whom we are passing rich."

Ruth confessed in her prayer that her heart waxed hot at that; that she had crept away from her husband's sight to weep in disappointment and dread. She asked forgiveness for her lack of charity, of faith and patience; for grace to enable her to forget the loss of the money, or to regard it as a loan to the Lord; and finally, for daily food. "Thou knowest we have need of these things," she said. "Thou hast engaged that our bread and water shall be sure. I take thee at thy word. Help me to await cheerfully thine own good time of deliverance."

She arose from the floor, unbolted the door, and went back to her work singing, as she tripped down the uncarpeted stairs,

"Ten thousand, thousand gifts
My daily thanks employ,
Nor is the least a cheerful heart,
That tastes those gifts with joy."

She warbled the words to glorious old "Geneva," her clear voice rising in the exultant circles of melody as the lark sings when nearest the gate of heaven. The toiling student lifted his head from the study of his Biblia Hebraica, and smiled.

"Thou wilt keep her in peace—peace! whose thought is stayed on thee." He quoted from the original.

"Good morning, Mrs. Carey!" he said heartily, his face catching the sunshine of hers. "I was bringing some of my home-cured hams to market, and, if you will believe me, hadn't a thought of coming this way, when something faced me about and told me to leave one at my minister's house. It's a kind of first fruits offering, you see. It's too heavy for you to lift. I'll just lay it on the kitchen table."

He was off before she could thank him aright, and stepping softly, as in a sacred Presence, she returned to the kitchen and stood looking at the goodly joint—enough to last the twain a week—and folded her hands as a docile child does in prayer.

"While they are yet speaking, I will hear," she whispered in awed gratitude. The happy tears came in a great gush with the words, but she wiped them away and set about the business of the hour, getting the wonderful ham ready for boiling, darting and humming about the room more like a busy-bee than ever.

"I lack nothing upon earth except a few potatoes!" she murmured presently, for she spent so much of her time without other society than her own thoughts that she had fallen into the habit of talking to herself. "Or beans! They are more nourishing, and Erasmus is so fond of them. So am I, for that matter. I could saw off the knuckle without spoiling the shape of the ham, and season quite a potful of beans with it."

Then she caught up her song again:

"When all thy mercies, O my God!"

Nothing less triumphant than "Geneva" would serve her to-day. The door between kitchen and hall was open, and all was silent in the latter. There was no clicking of the latch or creaking of the hinges to warn her that mortal visitant was near. Yet, chancing to cross the hall half an hour later, she espied a large bag on the floor just inside the front door, which was shut. She untied it with trembling fingers. It contained half a bushel of fine white beans!

"No, my children," the dear old lady would say, when she reached this point of the story, and we pressed her with conjectures and questions, "I never found out who put them there. May be the good farmer had another revelation at the next corner, and returned stealthily to obey the Lord's will concerning me. Or the heart of some one else may have been moved to repay the loan I had, in my blindness, grudged to the Lord's suffering ones. I only know that the Father heard and answered me that day, as he has done since, times without number. The older I grow the surer am I that the reason we are not led in a plain path oftener is that we do not get a tight hold of his hand—don't fasten upon it as babies hung upon the fingers of those that have the charge of them."

"That is a strange story," said a Christian to whom I repeated the homely tale of real life just as I have written it down.

"Is it?" I asked him the question then. I have put the same to myself many, many times—sometimes, when the answer to my strong crying and tears has been wisely but mysteriously withheld; again, when the response was so full and prompt that the sure blessing overwhelmed me with gratitude. Are not answered prayers the rule, not the exception, with us all? Do we ever number them over to ourselves? The petitions we offer continually for the blessings of life, safety, health, daily food, for deliverance from overmastering temptation, the thousand "common mercies," so called, because we should be beggared without them, we are so used to their visits that we forget to entertain them as God's kindest messengers!

And, if when we seek special favors which are not, we are persnaded, inconsistent with his holy will, we find, with Christian, that the key of promise turns hard in the lock, is not the fault in the nerveless fingers and timid grasp that are all unused to taking "tight hold?"—Christian Intelligencer.

REV. DR. WILLIAM SPRAGUE.

Few men are more widely and favorably known than the venerable William B. Sprague, D. D., LL. D., late pastor of the Second Presbyterian church in Albany, New York, and now in his seventy-seventh year. That he is not now at his post as a preacher and pastor is not owing to any decay of his mental faculties, but simply to the loss of his teeth, which prevents him from appearing in the pulpit. The skill of the first dentists in the country has been put in requisition, but in vain. They have failed to render it possible for him to deliver a discourse. Greatly to the regret of his congregation, and, indeed, of the entire community of which he had been a member for forty years, he was constrained to resign his pastorate. He took up his abode in the beautiful village of Flushing, where he is passing a serene old age amid the citizens who welcomed his advent, and the numerous friends who visit him.

Dr. Sprague was born at Andover, Massachusetts, October 16, 1795, and graduated at Yale College in 1815, at the age of twenty. While in college he became one of the subjects of a powerful revival. This led him to study for the ministry. For this purpose he repaired to Princeton Theological Seminary in the fall of 1816. He remained there three years, when he was settled at Springfield, Massachusetts, as the colleague of the Rev. Dr. Joseph Lathrop. He remained in Springfield about ten years. His ministry was highly appreciated and successful.

In 1829 he accepted a call to the Second Presbyterian church in Albany, where he remained till the fall of 1870, when, as has been stated above, he resigned his charge.

During the whole period of his ministry at Springfield and Albany nothing ever occurred to disturb his peace or that of the congregation.

While a pastor, Dr. Sprague was rarely absent from his pulpit, and availed himself very sparingly of the assistance of his brethren in the ministry. It is understood that he rarely, if ever, repeated a discourse to his people. During the many years he was engaged on his great work, "Annals of the American Pulpit," he wrote new sermons for every Sabbath. Dr. Sprague is a voluminous writer. All his works have had a wide circulation, and many of them have been republished abroad.—Threescore Years and Beyond.

A JUDICIOUS WIFE.—A judicious wife is always nipping off from her husband's moral nature little twigs that are growing in wrong directions. She keeps him in shape by continual pruning. If you say anything silly she will affectionately tell you so. If you declare that you will do some absurd thing, she will find some means of preventing your doing it. And by far the chief part of all the common sense there is in this world belongs unquestionably to the woman. The wisest things a man commonly does are those which his wife counsels him to do. A wife is a grand wielder of the moral pruning knife. If Johnson's wife had lived there would have been no hoarding up of orange peel, no touching all the posts in walking along the streets, no eating and drinking with a disgusting voracity. If Oliver Goldsmith had been married he never would have worn that memorable and ridiculous coat. Whenever you find a man that you know little about, oddly dressed or talking absurdly, or exhibiting any eccentricity of manner, you may be tolerably sure that he is not a married man; for the corners are rounded off—the little shoots pared away—in married men. Wives have generally much more sense than their husbands, especially when their husbands are clever men. The wife's advices are like the ballast that keeps the ship steady.

THE INDIANS.—Hon. C. Delano, secretary of the Department of the Interior, gives the following estimate of the number of the Indians within our jurisdiction. There are about 142 nations of them, divided into tribes and bands. There are about 185,000 souls, exclusive of the Indians of Alaska, and the wild tribes of New Mexico and Arizona. In Alaska there are 75,000. Add 5,000 for the wild roaming tribes of Arizona and New Mexico, and 80,000 in the Indian Territory west of Arkansas and in several of the States, and there are by estimate 345,000 Indians under our jurisdiction.

Mr. Delano says that the Indians of Alaska are more highly civilized than the rest, having been under the care of the Greek Church and not influenced by our government, which is no compliment to our national Christianity.

THE INSTINCT OF LIFE.

"Would you wish to be in heaven?" said a watcher at the death-bed of a very old woman, an excellent creature. "Not yet," came the answer. How many Pauls have there been, "having a desire to depart," while yet in health and unimpaired vigor? Some, doubtless, but fewer than we think. Cloistered visionaries may sigh for heaven, sick-bed languishing may crave repose; but men in active, practical life have rarely grace enough to prefer the grave to the light of the sun, even if they look for a heaven beyond. They will rather flutter alone, the last yellow leaf of November, than be rotting out of sight. For my part, I don't blame them. He who made them put the clinging love of life in them. Yet it would be nobler—would it not?—more Christian, more blessed, if faith were stronger and heaven more real. The true frame is that of a dear old friend, now gone, who bade me farewell when I saw him, with these words: "My wife is dead, my children dead, and here am I, a poor old man, waiting for the Master's call." But as a rule, we always want death to come to-morrow, not to-day. This life and we get to be old friends, and are loath to part. I suppose the poorest solitary leaf thinks it better to flutter in the raw air than to be trodden under foot. There is no sin in wishing to live; the saint is as unwilling to go before his time as the sinner. Our hearts are turned to this craving by him who made them, else earth would soon be rid of not a few of her surplus population. The grand thing is to be willing to go when the time comes, and to be passive as to the date; ready to go; willing, rather, if it be God's will, to stay a little longer in the light of life.

THOU ART MY PORTION, O LORD.—The sweetest flowers that come to us from the Lord's garden soon lose their bloom and freshness; for Christ would not that we should rest satisfied with his gifts and comforts, and the tokens of his love, instead of saying, "Thou art my portion, O Lord." He refreshes and gladdens us with the flowers and spices of divine consolation, not that we may look away from himself to them, but that, enjoying the sweet fragrance of his comforting love, we may render it back to him in the breathings of joy, love and thankfulness. He is not hiding his face, though his flowers be dry; but he would have us ever going again, through the gentle dropping dews of prayer in the Holy Ghost, to knock at his garden gate and ask him for a fresh gift of his choicest flowers. He withers the flowers we have, that we may always come to him for more.

CALVINISM VERSUS ARMINIANISM.—Prof. Barber, in an interesting article on Calvinism, in the Congregationalist, quotes the following sentiment from Dr. Chalmers:

It was in rebuke of such a style of presenting the gospel that Dr. Chalmers in his theological classroom once uttered the following characteristic sentence—a sentence which comes with the greater force because, theoretically, he was "of the straightest sect" himself: "Give me a town, give me a village, give me a few scattered houses even, where the people are in anxiety about their soul's salvation, and I would rather send among them a Wesleyan Methodist, with all his Arminianism about him, than a sturdy, square-built Calvinist, who is so straight-laced in the rigidities of his system that he cannot preach a free gospel to every creature."

BAXTER PREACHING IN VIRGINIA.—A colporteur of the American Tract Society in Virginia says in a recent letter: "In October I gave a woman, near the Blue Ridge, a 'Baxter's Call.' A few days later her husband, who was a drinking man, took his wife's stockings and traded them off for whisky. Subsequently, as his wife was reading out of this book, the man became alarmed at his condition, and the next day redeemed the stockings, came home, and upon his knees begged his wife's pardon, and then began to ask God's pardon. I called upon him when in this condition and talked and prayed with him. He has since professed conversion, and thus far is living as a consistent Christian. It was through Baxter's warnings and entreaties that he was thus brought to Christ."

DID HE GET IN?—Little Willie R. had listened very attentively as his father read at family worship the third chapter of Revelation. When he came to the words, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," Willie could not wait until his father had finished, and running up to him he said: "O, father, did he get in? and is Jesus knocking at my heart? I will let him in."

The Savior is knocking now at your heart; bid him welcome, and it will be the happiest day of your life.—Child's Paper.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

AN Italian Bible Society was organized at Rome on the ninth of December. The British and Foreign Bible Society and the Italian Tract Society also have agencies in the city. The sale of the Scriptures is increasing.

THE Alt Catholics of Kaiserslautern held their first service on Christmas day in the Protestant church. The similar body in Wiesbaden have also followed the lead of the Cologne reformers, and petitioned against their payment of church tax to the Roman Catholics. The ministry has replied that they need not pay it.

NEWS has been received in this country of the death of the Rev. J. G. Cochran, a missionary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions to Persia. He had come to the coast to meet his family, who were returning to Persia from a visit to America, and the exposure of travel in crossing the mountains brought on fever, of which he died.

A FREE GOSPEL IN ROME.—The first legally authorized public Protestant service in the English language ever held within the walls of Rome was conducted by Rev. Andrew Paton, minister of the Church of Scotland, in their hired room, December 10. The services that have been heretofore held have been illegal, and could not be publicly advertised, but were liable to be suppressed at any time.

AT a recent meeting of the Societe d'Agriculture, Mr. Dronyn de Lhuys in the chair, a report was read showing that the amount distributed by the Society of Friends in money and in kind for the relief of the war victims reached four million francs. It was proposed to confer on Mr. Long the Order of the Legion of Honor; but as that gentleman acted in the capacity of agent to the Friends in purchasing cows in Spain, and other matters, he declined to accept a personal honor.

"ORDINATION OF DEACONESSES."—At St. Mary's Protestant Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, a special service was held on Sunday morning, the eleventh instant. Six sisters were solemnly set apart for religious duties by a kind of ordination, Bishop Littlejohn officiating and preaching the sermon. He urged woman's eminent and special fitness for such works of charity and mercy as these sisters perform in hospitals and elsewhere. A limited deaconate of three years, leaving them then free to renew or leave their work, is the basis of this sisterhood.

A MISSIONARY CENSUS of India has been decided upon. A committee of four gentlemen has been taken from as many Protestant bodies, and a series of questions will be issued to the leading man of every Protestant mission station in India, asking him to report the age of the mission, the number of its converts during the last ten years, the amount of money received from England, and the amount contributed by native Christians, the strength of the various churches in the way in which they estimate their strength, and other particulars of the same nature.

AT BEIRUT Dr. Jessup reports the number of candidates for membership in the mission church to be greater than ever before, and that the number actually received in the church of the mountain station of Abeih is unprecedented. Their Sabbath school receives an attendance of three hundred children, and a weekly Bible class is held for eighty young men. Several important members of the Maronite and Greek sects in that city have recently become Protestants, and a Moslem sheikh has recently requested a private interview with Rev. Dr. Jessup for religious discussion.

IN YOKOHAMA steps are being taken to organize a Union Christian church. Mrs. Pruyn and her fellow-helpers have fully begun work, have several Japanese pupils, and will soon have more. Their good influence as Christian women is highly spoken of in Yokohama. Miss Kidder, the young lady missionary of the Reformed Church in America, has thirteen pupils, Japanese girls, and one married lady, mother of one of her pupils and wife of one of the most influential merchants in Yokohama. Miss Kidder has also been invited by the Japanese governor of the district of Kanagawa to go to Yedo, and teach a family school for one of the chief officers there. If allowed to instruct other pupils besides those in that officer's family, she will most probably do so, and begin female education in the capital. Dr. Hepburn, the Presbyterian medical missionary, translator, scholar and lexicographer, is now at Shanghai, China, passing the revised edition of his Japanese-English dictionary through the press. Together with Dr. S. R. Brown, he is still busily engaged on the New Testament translation.

THE first native pastor of an Evangelical church in Egypt has recently been ordained at Nakhaileh by the missionaries of the United Presbyterian Church. At this place the growth of the Christian band has surprised even the missionaries themselves. Three years ago not more than two or three Christians could have been found there, or even none at all; whereas at a late communion season twenty-two members were added to this church of remarkable progress, making its membership greater than that of any other congregation in Egypt. After thorough examination and trial, Tadrus Yusef was set apart to the office of the ministry of the gospel, and installed pastor of this promising church by the Presbytery of Egypt. His address (from Titus ii, 11 14) is said to have resembled the lectures of the oldest missionaries of the body, who believe that divine truths, not beautiful illustrations, are the arrows of conviction used by the Holy Spirit; and that if they fall thick and fast and long they may be the surer to leave a lasting impression. The occasion was one of the deepest interest to the people, for the choice of Rev. Mr. Yusef seemed to be a union of first love on both sides, and promises not only to be of long continuance, but the means of raising up still larger additions to the church, both in Nakhaileh and in the whole region round about.

FRIENDS.—A few days ago a meeting was held in the Woman's Meeting House, London, to hear from Mr. and Mrs. Alsop an account of the Christian work of Friends in France. Joseph Gurney Barclay, Esq., occupied the chair. Mr. R. Alsop said that the chief object of their visit had been to get the address from the yearly meeting of Friends to France placed in the proper hands, but that during the six months' labor of himself, Mrs. Alsop and other Friends, way had opened for a good deal of Christian labor. He said, in the words of a French pastor: "What France wants is the gospel—not so much that she rejects it, but that she has not got it." Sixty thousand copies of the address had been distributed in various ways. Thirty-one congregations had been visited in Paris, the address read, and in many cases addressed, delivered. One thousand three hundred National, Wesleyan and German churches in France had been communicated with. The address had been presented to M. Thiers and to seven hundred members of the National Assembly. It had also been sent to five thousand mayors, with a request that it might be laid before their town councils; in fact, every mayor of a village of over eight hundred inhabitants, or town or city, had been reached. At many of the meetings held, some of which had been very large, a large number of Catholics attended, and willingly received copies of the gospels, Testaments, etc. Mrs. Alsop gave a very interesting account of the formation of sewing-classes, which had sprung out of the visit of Friends.

THERE is much excitement in France over the decree convoking the General Synod of the National Reformed Church. From 1559 to 1660 twenty-nine synods were held in various places; since then, though petition after petition has gone up for the convening of the synod, the permission of the government has been steadily refused. Last year the cause was gained, and a decree was drawn up, when the war broke out, and swept away the governing powers before it was published. The correspondent of an English paper says: "This year, as soon as it was practicable, the matter was laid before the new government by the Parisian consistory, and the Journal Officiel of December 1 contained the decree convoking the twenty-one provincial synods, in order to elect delegates to the national synod, to be held shortly in Paris. Each of the one hundred and three consistories is to furnish two delegates (one to be a pastor) to the provincial synods; and to the national synod there is to be one delegate to every six pastors, half the total number to be laymen. Now will be the turning-point of National French Protestantism; the binding firm, the girding of the strong man for valiant deeds; or the losing of all control, the breaking up still further than at present into parties and voluntary schism! To rejoice with trembling is the exhortation of the wisest, who foresee tempests; but, they add, tempests purify the air. The Rationalistic party is exceedingly opposed to the decree, and is considering whether to accept it or whether to abstain from voting. The various religious parties not of the establishment seem unanimous in their hopeful congratulations." The Renaissance, which is the organ of the liberal wing of the church, is strongly opposed to the convocation of the synod. The liberals assert that, while they are the majority of the church, the synod is to be constituted in such a manner as to give the orthodox wing the majority of the delegates. The calling of the synod has long been favored by M. Guizot, who is one of the leaders of the orthodox party; and the success of the movement at this time is attributed to his influence.

THE SHIPWRECK OF FAITH.

Every season furnishes its record of marine disasters. Little ships and big ones go down with their freights of costly merchandise and costlier human lives. All the great pathways of the ocean have witnessed the engulphing of proud and gallant vessels, and scarcely a shore exists that does not mark the scene of some terrible catastrophe. Now and then the world is startled by some pre-eminent calamity, in which the expectations, based upon the highest perfection of naval architecture and accomplished seamanship, have been sadly and mysteriously disappointed. The staunch prow, that anybody would have insured, has been broken, and the skill which inspired universal confidence has been baffled and defeated. The fortunes which have required a lifetime for their accumulation are lost in an hour, and the earthly career of crew and passengers is suddenly brought to an end.

Religious history has its records of ruin—of a ruin far more terrible than the havoc wrought by the storms and billows of the sea. The shipwreck of a single soul can allow of no comparison with the loss of mere earthly life or wealth. And yet such wrecks there are plentifully scattered along the line of experience from the beginning. It is significant enough that apostasy is described as the shipwreck of faith. The fearful breaking up, the grinding rocks, the overwhelming waves, the going to pieces of everything, the scattered fragments tossed upon the desolate shore, are images helping to make up something like an adequate conception of this spiritual destruction.

The world is prone to make a perverted application of these sad failures in the Christian profession. They doubtless give great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme. Men are confirmed in their unbelief by such miscarriages as those of Balaam and Judas, and by such humiliating falls as those of David and Peter. This is the fact, and yet it is a perverted, and not the legitimate conclusion. They simply confirm the inspired warnings against the dangers which beset the Christian's course, and are so far an argument for the truth of the gospel. Then we are to consider the multitudes who have not defiled their garments, and who have successfully run the heavenly race. A thousand good examples are more than an offset to one lapse into sin, though that one may have been most revolting in its character. It is well also to reflect that the intrinsic excellence of the gospel loses nothing by the unworthiness of those who profess to believe it. The charge of unworthiness and inconsistency is a tribute unconsciously paid to the purity of the moral law. In spite of the imperfections, grievous backslidings and apostasy of its avowed disciples, Christianity has advanced. It would be as puerile to throw dirt at the sun as to suppose that any man can stain or befoul the truth of Christ. He may fall into the ditch and wallow in the mire, but the light which shines around him and exposes his filthiness is not soiled thereby. The defection of a saint may cause the name of God to be blasphemed, and it may be the occasion of rejoicing among the enemies of Christ, but it is so only through an unreasonable and malignant perversion.

The lesson to believers is not to be misinterpreted. Let them not read it to their discouragement. Their faith stands not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. They have perhaps gloried in men too much, and have made their own experience too dependent upon the steadfastness of others. No matter who has fallen, they may stand if they will. The success of Joshua and Caleb are more to the point than the failure of those who perished in the wilderness. The sufficiency of God's help is in no way disproved by the fact that some have not entered in through unbelief. A wholesome fear and a cheerful hope are perfectly consistent. The same pen that wrote, "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway," also traced these lines of confident assurance, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." The brightest lights may go out in darkness most utter and appalling, a prophet may love the wages of unrighteousness, an apostle may betray his Master with a kiss. "Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his."

Christianity is not swamped by those who make shipwreck of their faith, and neither should the believer's confidence be shaken. Where the great and gifted and mature have failed to reach the goal, their apparent advantages may have been their weakness, and their exposure to temptation may have been in proportion to their eminence. They might have won the battle, and so may we. The causes of their failure were in themselves, and not in the religion they professed, nor in the God they served. Let us admit what is often true in such cases, that it is the fall of a saint, and not the mere unmasking of a life-long hypocrite. They were as we are, and they are such as we may become. Let us hold fast to our confidence, but let us be warned. Be not high-minded, but fear. It is the Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom. Christ's purpose is not to crush the bruised reed, nor to put out the smoking flax, but to send forth grace unto victory. The righteous, however, are scarcely saved, and it behooves them to give diligence to make their "calling and election sure." The admonition is to him "that thinketh he standeth." He that is firmest on his feet may be cast down. The veteran in Christ, the most eminent and honored in his service, is yet in the flesh, and liable to the wiles of the tempter. It is the watchful and humble spirit that can truthfully sing:

Though rocks and quicksands deep
Through all my passage lie,
Yet Christ will safely keep
And guide me with his eye;
My anchor, hope, shall firm abide,
And I each boisterous storm outride.

Bishop Pierce on the University.

In a letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate Bishop Pierce gives his views at considerable length on the proposed University in Tennessee, and the theological school to be associated with it. The Bishop says:

A very grave subject has been proposed for the consideration of the church, and incidentally, at least, the impression is made that the Bishops and the Conferences, and the great body of our people indorse the project; I refer to the "Great University." I think the impression is without evidence or foundation. The fact is, a very small portion of our membership know or care anything about it—very few of the Conferences can be committed to it—and the Bishops, I presume, are divided. I speak for myself alone, and mainly because I do not wish to be put in a false position by an assumption which silence might authorize.

To the original proposition, as submitted to the Tennessee Conference, I had no special objection. As I understood it, the project was to unite the Tennessee, Memphis, the North Mississippi and North Alabama Conferences in an institution, (a University,) which should represent themselves—meet their local wants, and, of course, be open for general patronage. Leaving out the theological school, this scheme might work—would and ought to find favor in those boundaries. But a "Great Central University," representing the whole church; levying upon all the Conferences; monopolizing the education; absorbing the means of the people—this is another thing; unwise, ungenerous, impracticable. Some few among us desire a theological school for the training of young preachers. The last General Conference repudiated this thing very decidedly, after much discussion. Our people are afraid of it—do not wish it at all. The great body of the preachers are against it. Now, under these circumstances, is it to be grafted upon our economy, nolens volens, under the prestige and patronage of a great popular idea—the education of the people by the church? Heaven forbid! This innovation I deprecate with all the energy of profound conviction. All the Methodism in me (and there is a good deal of it) rises up in stern revolt. The argument from history is against it. Compare the progress of denominations with and without this appendage. The reason of the difference is to be found in our freedom from this incumbrance—this brake upon the wheels. But I do not mean to discuss the subject—only define my position. Allow me to say, however, that a regular theological training, after the seminary pattern, will complicate our itinerant system; will slowly but surely modify it, and finally break it down. The very rapid development of the idea in a little resolution, at Lebanon, last October, awakens my apprehension of the whole scheme. It grows too fast; its vaulting ambition overleaps the proprieties of the case. Let the four Conferences named above stick to their programme. If they can harmonize on a common enterprise—well. We will all say amen. But we are not ready to ignore, or eclipse, or degrade, or embarrass Randolph Macon and her sons, or her capacity, for more of the same sort; or Emory and Henry, with her mountain-health, vigor and usefulness; or Emory, with her radiant history of graduates, and revivals, and contributions to the Conference; or Wofford, in her glory and misfortunes, just now on her feet again; or the Southern University, asserting her vitality by her recent resurrection from the debris of the war; or Centenary, now rallying to her aid Keener's vim, and "the grace of liberality" also; or the Texas University, with its grand combinations, its liberal ideas and imperial territory; or Central College, with her rich endowment of money, lands and people; or the Kentucky University, long struggling with difficulties and discouragements, at last looming up in the light of hope. All these institutions (especially the older ones, and the younger according to their time and means) have done, and are doing, good service. They ought not to be disparaged, and certainly not disabled. The church cannot afford their loss or damage.

As I am writing freely, I will say what I think the better policy in this matter is. Let Tennessee and Memphis unite and build them a college. They need it; they are able; they ought not to forage on their neighbors. The two Mississippi Conferences ought to rally, with Louisiana, on Centenary; North Alabama, with Alabama, on the University at Greensboro. The three Conferences in Arkansas should combine and locate an institution of their own at Batesville, or Fayetteville, or at some point along the mountain range between. These are my notions. Of course they bind no one. As suggestions, growing out of my knowledge of the field, and my convictions as to the best interests of the church, let them pass for what they are worth.

As to popular education, I yield to no man in my appreciation of it—provided it were managed by the church rather than the State. Education is not an unmixed good. It is an edged tool, and whether it works mischief or creates value, depends upon who handles it. It is the fashion to glorify education, and everything said in its favor is wonderfully admired and greedily swallowed. To intensify this sentiment, in order to promote a pet scheme, some very unjust charges are made against Southern Methodism. I heard one of these University orators, in his zeal to impress a Conference, berate and belittle what we had done—magnify the ignorance of our ministry, make light of our colleges, and bewail our rear position in the march of improvement, till, as a Methodist, I would have hung my head in shame if, happily, I had not known that he was mistaken. Neither poetic frenzy nor oratorical license can project a bushel large enough to cover and hide the light of our glorious past. By the grace of God we have wrought wonders in the earth. The world knows it. Results vindicate our plans. The largest crops show the farmer, and justify his modes. The world is not advancing so fast as some dream. The ministry, as a class, are abreast with it. Within my day the preachers have stepped pari passu with society. I am not ashamed of my brethren. Methodism has a place for some of every kind. God will call all the educated men he wants, and all the truly called—if obedient and faithful—of whatever class, will "study to show themselves approved," and "their profiting shall appear unto all men."

To tell us that the Wesleyans and the Northern Methodists have theological schools; that the Presbyterians, the Baptists, the Episcopalians, the Catholics, have them amounts to nothing—unless it can be shown that on this account they have more converts, more piety, are doing more good. The desire to be like the other nations was the ruin of the Jews. Under the judges, for two or three centuries, they did well; but to be like others they must have a king. In his wrath for their rejection of him, and theocracy, God gave them a king, and the kings ruined the nation.

Now, we have done well without these theological schools—done better than others for a century well-nigh. The itinerant system, wisely worked, is our school. There is none like it. I like Samuel better than Saul. The power of the pulpit is not in metaphysics, or logic, or literature, but in love, faith, self-denial, zeal. Nobody intends it, but the drift now is in the wrong direction. Let us keep to our rules of study and examination—imbue our colleges and schools with the religious element, and make our preachers feel (the people already know it) that preaching power is more important than preaching talent—we shall do well. And if, as we go, the oxen should stumble, and the ark should shake, Uzzah had better keep his hands off.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

A COMMUNICATION giving account of the jubilee of the Felicity Street Sunday school, which took place on the evening of February 22, was too late for our last issue. It was an occasion of great interest—sweet singing, distribution of prizes, and a talk from Bro. Tudor up stairs, and a collation in the basement afterward. The basement has recently been put in apple-pie order. Bible class, library and infant class rooms are now furnished with sliding doors, so that all can be merged with the main audience room when necessary. We believe that even the untiring superintendent, Bro. W. H. Foster, can hardly think of any further improvement.

Our brethren, and our sisters especially, of the Carondelet Street church have been improving and modifying their Sunday school room and fixtures at a large cost. The infant class room is a gem in its way, and a bouquet of living beauty when filled with its little occupants on Sunday morning. The seats in the main audience room, imported from New York, are models of elegance and convenience, and so constructed as to serve equally well for Sunday school purposes and for occasions of public worship. The old and ungainly pulpit has been sent into permanent exile, and a spacious and handsomely carpeted dais or platform is in its place, on which a light and movable stand is set when required. We observe also that a new library of choice and handsome books has been procured, and also a new library case, which is one of the completest and most beautiful we have ever seen in a Sunday school.

We are glad to note these exhibitions of good taste in the Sunday school rooms. They should be the brightest and most attractive places in our churches, and in harmony with the cheerful spirit of our religion. Cobwebs, gloom and dirt should never be associated with the religious training of our children. Flowers, fountains and instructive pictures are not out of place in the Sunday school.

REV. JOSEPH D. ADAMS, the new pastor of the Moreau Street church, of this city, has met with such a hearty reception as this people always give to their preachers. His work is doing well, as is evident from the Sunday congregations, the interesting Sunday school, and the good attendance at the prayer and class meetings. This charge grew much in interest and importance under the ministry of Bro. T. B. White, and his worthy successor is maintaining and pushing the work forward. Captain R. L. Robertson, the veteran superintendent of the Sunday school, has been at his post for about an entire generation, and his unabated vigor and zeal give promise of many more years of usefulness. He is one of the few who magnify their calling in the Sunday school work at threescore years and ten. Sunday last, March 10, was the anniversary of his seventy-fourth birthday, on which occasion the teachers of his Sunday school presented him with a handsome Bible.

WE LEARN by a note from Rev. R. B. Dewuer that the Rev. Thomas Nixon, of the Mississippi Conference, died at Raymond, Mississippi, on the fourth of March. Bro. Nixon was one of the oldest preachers in the church. In the ADVOCATE of June 1, 1871, we published a communication from his pen—probably the last he ever wrote for the press. In it he stated that he was a native of South Carolina, and that he was received into full connection at the session of the Tennessee Conference, held at Norval's camp ground, Logan county, Kentucky, in October, 1814. The session was held in a log meeting house, and he was there ordained deacon by Bishop Asbury. He lived and labored in Mississippi and Louisiana for more than fifty years. His death severs one of the few remaining links which connect us with the early history and ministry of Methodism in America. We trust that some member of his Conference will furnish us with a suitable memoir of this venerable minister of the gospel.

WE NOTICE that our esteemed brother, Rev. Joel T. Daves, has severed his connection with the Conservative, of which he has been for some years proprietor and editor, and that he is devoting his abundant energies entirely to his work as presiding elder of the Lake Providence district. We can well imagine the satisfaction which this deliverance brings him. Referring to the state of his district, Bro. Daves writes:

My district work is moving off finely. The prospect, even now, for a good year—for a full and complete rehabilitation of Lake Providence district—is flattering. The preachers, so far as seen and heard from, are in fine spirits. We propose a district camp meeting at Rayville, at the time of the District Conference. I am no longer a country editor and Methodist preacher combined, but trust, by God's grace, a single-eyed, single-hearted pastor.

WE HEAR with much pleasure that Rev. W. F. Easterling, the new preacher in charge at Opelousas, Louisiana, is giving great satisfaction to his church and congregation, and that his church is in a flourishing condition. In a private note Bro. Easterling says:

I am in high hopes and fine spirits. Have plenty to eat and plenty to do. My wife is improving and my children hearty. Of course I am pleased, cheerful and happy.

THE BALTIMORE CONFERENCE met at Warrenton, Virginia, on Wednesday, the sixth instant. The case of Dr. Huston was referred to the presiding elder of the district, whose duty it will be to call a committee of traveling preachers, and investigate the charges. Our dispatches state that Dr. Young, of Nashville, is to succeed Dr. Huston in the Trinity church, Baltimore. The reference of Dr. Huston's case is in accordance with Methodist usage, and for the purpose of securing all available testimony. In case of conviction the committee have power to suspend the accused until the next Conference.

WE HAVE RECEIVED, through the courtesy of Rev. Dr. Doremus, general agent, the twenty-second report of the Southwestern Bible Society, presented and read at the anniversary meeting, January 21, 1872. The pamphlet, besides everything pertaining to the organization and work of the society, contains Rev. W. V. Tudor's address. We extract from the agent's report the statistical details of the year, as follows:

Details of the Year.—Sales at the house, cash, $707.23; sales to depositories and others, $2,344.12; grants, $506.73; grants on life memberships, $68.50; total amount sent out, $3,626.58; sales by auxiliaries on last year's distribution account, $988.22; total distributed, $4,615.80. Value of the Scriptures now on the field, $9,929.82; value of the Scriptures in the house, $2,986.38; value of stock in possession, $12,916.20. Receipts: From sales, $2,239.76; from contributions through general agency, $2,374.33; from contributions through Mr. Alexander's agency, $66; from contributions through Mr. Harmon's agency, $1,175; from rents, $1,230.95; from expenses refunded, $17.55; from bills receivable, $189.20; total, $7,292.79.

Eleven life members have been constituted; eighty churches, Sunday schools, asylums, etc., and benevolent societies supplied. Thirteen new auxiliary societies have been organized, making a total of one hundred and twenty-six.

THE HOLSTON Methodist is a new weekly journal published at Morristown, Tennessee, by R. N. Price & Co., in the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. We heartily welcome the Holston Methodist, and wish it a prosperous and useful career. It is handsomely printed, on four pages, well edited, and mailed to subscribers at $1 50 per annum.

ON OUR second page will be found a sketch of Rev. Isaac Wall, written by one of all others most competent to pay a deserved tribute to one of the purest and best of men. Bro. Wall was a son-in-law of the Rev. Dr. Winans, whose character and life belong to the choicest treasures of American and Southern Methodism.

ON FEBRUARY 28 a slight accident occurred to the scaffolding of the center building, Centenary College, by which a colored boy was fatally injured.

BISHOP KEENER'S APPOINTMENTS

Dedication of church at Ocean Springs, March 17.

Preach at Opelousas, March 24.

Other appointments will be announced hereafter.

J. C. KEENER.

DEATH OF REV. JOHN G. RUSH.

The following note from Bro. Urquhart came too late for insertion last week.

MOBILE, ALA., March 4, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: I write to announce the death of Rev. John G. Rush, of the Alabama Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South. He died at home, February 28. His struggle with doubt and fear, for five or six days, was terrible, but his victory was sudden, evident and complete. Having gained the victory, he exclaimed: "I am free from Satan. Heaven is my home. I shall see my mother. All is right. Hallelujah—that is a sweet word." He continued in this state to the end. His whole nature seemed changed. The look of his earlier days returned; and words of sympathy and love unheard those years, were freely uttered. His wife and children, except the one at the Southern University, were with him. His end was all that his friends could wish.

H. URQUHART.

REVIVAL IN MARION, ALABAMA.

Rev. J. Bancroft, pastor of our church at Marion, writing March 5, says:

We have "a time of refreshing" here. Meetings have been held nightly for nearly four weeks, resulting in twenty-three conversions, and twenty accessions to the church. I have several names of persons who are applicants for church membership. The church has been much quickened. We feel greatly indebted to Dr. Rosser, of the Virginia Conference, who labored with us very faithfully. May the Lord reward him in "that day."

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

LEGENDS OF THE PATRIARCHS AND PROPHETS, AND OTHER OLD TESTAMENT CHARACTERS, FROM VARIOUS SOURCES. By the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, M. A. New York: Holt & Williams, 1872.

The author has, with great industry, collected the traditions of the Jews and Gentiles, of the Mussulmen, of the Cabbalists, the Rabbins and the Talmudic writers. It is a volume of curious information, and not without interest and instruction. The follies, absurdities, extravagances and nonsense of the most of these traditions will tend to increase our reverence and faith in the inspired record. The legends, however, contain many gems of truth and beauty, and are worthy of a place in the library of those who are fond of the venerable, curious and fabulous lore which has gathered round the inspired history. For sale by Kain & Co., Canal street, New Orleans.

FERNANDO DE LEMOS. By Charles Gayarre. New York: G. W. Carleton & Co., publishers, 1872. 12mo, 486 pages.

The author is a native of Louisiana, and well known to our people as a writer of much merit. Twenty-five years ago we listened to his admirable lectures on the Romance of the History of Louisiana, and his History of Louisiana we have read with great satisfaction. Of the present work we cannot speak with confidence, as we have not yet been able to read it, except in a hurried and fragmentary manner. There is evidently much of truth and history mixed up with fiction, and a great many wholesome lessons, political, religious and historical, are brought out. The story begins and ends in New Orleans, although some of its episodes extend to other parts of the world. We suspect that the author has given us a substantial autobiography, somewhat disguised in the garb of fiction. The style is lively, and the delineations of character are usually well executed. We are indebted to the author for a copy. The work can be obtained of R. J. Harp, at the Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

A MANUAL OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. A text book for schools and colleges. By John S. Hart, LL. D. Philadelphia: Eldridge & Bro., 1872.

This is a work of great utility and convenience, not only as a text book for schools, but for reference, and will be prized by all who feel an interest in the leading writers of English literature. The work begins with "English before Chaucer," and brings the record down to the writers of the present day. A copious index greatly facilitates the work of reference and perusal. What the author has done for the literature of England we hope he will also do for America. Dr. Hart's work exhibits great labor, accuracy and impartiality. We are indebted to the publishers for a copy of this valuable volume.

THE LITTLE GIRL IN BLACK. By Margaret E. Wilmer. New York: National Temperance Society and Publication House, 1872.

This is a beautiful 12mo volume, and is a well-told story, full of temperance, and inculcating and illustrating the best of morals.

POOR MISS FINCH is by Wilkie Collins, and published by Harper & Bros.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for February is a number of more than usual interest. We give the contents in full: The Vicar's Daughter; Who has the Best of It? The Weeping Willow; The Resurrection of the Dead; Mathew Henry; Ill at Ease; Margaret; Charity in London; How to Study the Old Testament; Premiums Paid to Experience; The Editor's Room.

GOOD WORDS for February has the following articles: The Golden Lion of Grandpere; Communism; The Carpenter; A Giant Sun; At his Gates; Town Geology; Vanity Fair; Sermons Preached before the Queen at Balmoral; Edward Denison, the Friend of the Poor; Thy Kingdom Come; Hints for Essays; A Psalm of Life.

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE is an excellent domestic and literary periodical. Published monthly by S. S. Wood & Co., Newburg, New York. We have received the March number.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL of March 2, besides the usual variety of valuable matter, has a series of engravings illustrating winter sports on the Jersey coast.

DIE MODENWELT for February is lavishly furnished with plates, engravings and patterns. L. T. Taylor, publisher, New York. Price, $3 per annum.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL for March has a fine table of contents, embracing a large number of original articles in prose and in poetry.

THE AMERICAN FARMER AND RURAL REGISTER is a valuable agricultural publication. Published at Baltimore, by Samuel Sands & Son.

THE SOUTHERN MAGAZINE for March is an excellent number.

AGENT'S NOTICE.—The burning of our house at Nashville makes it necessary that we should insist on the prompt payment of amounts due the house in New Orleans. Our friends owing us will please remit at once.

ROBT. J. HARP, Agent.

MISSISSIPPI MINUTES.—The Minutes have been distributed to the members of the Conference as nearly in proportion to the membership represented by them as we could estimate. Where changes were made in the boundaries of circuits we had no means of ascertaining. We have a large reserve to supply deficiencies.

Only thirteen in all replied to our request to instruct us how to forward them. We sent some to the presiding elders to distribute on their districts where we thought this the most certain method of reaching them, prepaying in all cases. We have issued two thousand five hundred copies.

ROBT. J. HARP.

LANDS FOR LEASE AND SALE.—We call attention to the advertisement of Louisiana and Arkansas lands elsewhere.

RATOON PICKER.—The attention of sugar planters is called to the advertisement of Trouard's Ratoon Picker, in to-day's issue.

MR. H. MENGELLE, No. 20 Camp street, calls attention in this issue to his assortment of hair, fancy articles and millinery goods. See his card.

SPRING GOODS.—Messrs. Schneidau & Hellwig, No. 651 Magazine street, call attention to their elegant assortment of spring dress and domestic goods, in their advertisement in another column.

UNDERTAKER.—Peter Dufort, No. 82 St. Louis street, offers his services to those who need them. Perhaps there is not a finer hearse in the city or South than that of which he speaks in his card elsewhere, said to have cost $5,000.

GARDEN AND FIELD SEEDS.—Our friends engaged in planting and gardening will do well to pay attention to the advertisement of William A. Maupay, No. 70 Gravier street. Mr. Maupay deserves the thanks of the country for his enterprise in collecting choice and valuable seeds.

TO SUGAR PLANTERS.—Sugar planters are invited to call and see A. F. Trouard's Ratoon Picker, which will pick twelve arpents of stubble cane in one day, with one hand and two mules. This machine can be seen at Mr. Edward Dreher's, No. 45 Union street, where orders will be received. The patent right for some of our parishes and for other sugar States is offered for sale. These machines are now in use on the plantations of Dronet Bros., A. Rochereau & Co. and others, and are giving entire satisfaction.

LOUISIANA NATIONAL BANK.—The statement of the condition of the above-named popular bank appears in our present issue. While the stockholders have abundant cause to felicitate themselves upon the successful management of their interests, the commercial community, so vitally interested in the able and judicious administration of our monied institutions, will share largely in their satisfaction. During the severe and protracted financial pressure of the past season this bank was among the first to come to the rescue to save the credit of the commercial community.

THE MUTUAL NATIONAL BANK.—The very encouraging statement of the above-named bank will be found in another column of the ADVOCATE. There is a feature embraced in the articles of association of this institution to which we would call special attention, and for the benefit of those who may not have read the articles we quote that portion bearing upon the feature alluded to:

ARTICLE 9.—The depositors shall receive on the average amount of their cash balances for the preceding six months, and the stockholders shall receive on the amount of their stock, a contingent semi-annual interest equal to the net profits of the bank for the preceding six months, after deducting from said net profits the following items:

1o.—The reserve of one-tenth required by the thirty-third section of the national currency act approved June 3, 1864.

2o.—A regular semi-annual dividend of five per cent., for the stockholders, on the amount of their stock.

The contingent interest above mentioned shall never exceed the maximum rate of interest allowed by law.

The semi-annual statements of the bank, properly verified under oath, will be the basis upon which the dividends will be issued to determine the claims of depositors. The daily cash balances of each depositor, for the six months, shall be added up, and the grand total divided by (180) the quotient showing the average balance.

Obituaries.

MILTON Y. LANGSTON, son of J. R. Langston, died in Homer, October 7, 1871, in the twenty-first year of his age. A youth of promise; having consecrated himself to the work of the ministry and just entered upon his studies, he was called suddenly away, but, fully prepared, his departure was triumphant. The family circle, the church, the community and his college alike mourn over the vacant place he has left, but in the hope of the happy reunion. J. E. P.

MARTHA VIRGINIA, daughter of Jefferson and Catherine H. Bonhulck, was born in Tuskaloosa county, Alabama, on the twenty-third day of May, 1854, and died near Laurel Hill, Neshoba county, Mississippi, on the third of February, 1872. Mattie—for so she was familiarly called—was brought up under religious influences and pious instruction from her earliest infancy. Early dedicated to God in baptism, she grew up to the age of discretion and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, by her own voluntary act, in the bloom of youthful maidenhood, and continued an acceptable member till death snatched her from the church militant to the church triumphant. Mattie began the year 1872 with as bright prospects of life and health as fall to the lot of the most hopeful. Young, healthful and sprightly, she began the new year; but, alas! before the first month had run half its course disease seized upon her, and in a few weeks after the attack she fell a victim to typhoid pneumonia, and was numbered with the dead. Mattie, though pious and orderly as a member of the church, and consistent in her deportment, had never manifested that marked evidence of her spiritual regeneration which led her to rejoice in hope of the glory of God, and to praise Him from a sense of his love shed abroad in her heart, till some days after her last illness had began its fatal work. Her uncle, the Rev. Anderson Ray, who lives in the neighborhood, was a constant visitor, a vigilant watcher and faithful adviser. He conversed with and exhorted her to look to the Lord Jesus for help, and for life and salvation, by faith in his merits; and the spirit of our young friend readily apprehended the power of the truth of God, and at once the clouds were all dispersed, the shadows all fled, the Lord made his face to shine upon her, and she was filled with love divine. The sting of death was taken away, and she "rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory." When hymns of praise and songs of joy were sung, her voice joined with those around her dying bed, to sing the praises of redeeming grace and dying love. And thus the quiet and unobtrusive Mattie, the intelligent young lady, the exemplar of filial piety, in this happy frame of mind and spirit, passed to her home above. She told her doting mother and grieved father, and all her sisters and brother, not to weep for her, nor grieve at her departure, but rejoice with her. When her last moments drew near, with her eyes lifted toward heaven, she exclaimed: "Look! look! what beautiful creatures; glory to God;" at the same time raising her hand as if reaching to grasp them. When her utterance had almost ceased, she still spoke words of triumph. And her last words, that could be understood, were "Peace! peace! peace! peace!", and at twelve o'clock on Saturday night, the third of February, Mattie's happy spirit took flight to heaven, and the first earthly sabbath of the month was her eternal Sabbath in the world of light and glory.

H. W. CHATFIELD.

BURTON W. DOWD, son of Captain William C. Dowd, was born in Marion county, Georgia, on the twenty-fourth of September, 1850, and departed this life near Laurel Hill, Neshoba county, Mississippi, on the fourteenth of February, 1872. He was dedicated to God in baptism, in early infancy, by Rev. Young F. Tigner, late of the Georgia Conference. The deceased was early bereft of a fond mother, who died in the triumph of the Christian faith, leaving the injunction that her dear boy be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, that he might meet her in heaven. This injunction was remembered by his surviving parent, and Burton was early instructed and impressed with the idea that a sainted mother expected her dear boy to live for God, and meet her in the heavenly world. Though Burton had the advantage of religious training, and though his mother's dying charge was impressed upon his recollection, he did not become a member of the church till about two years ago. Then, having professed justifying faith in Christ, he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and remained a member of the same till he was called away from the trials of earth to the church triumphant. He was favored during his illness with the assiduous attention and watchful care of Rev. Anderson Ray, of the neighborhood, who counseled him, prayed with him, and encouraged him to trust a faithful Savior; and the chastened and docile spirit of the afflicted one joined his prayers with those watching at his bedside. The Lord heard his cry, and brought him out of the miry clay, and put the songs of praise in his mouth. Many times, during the last three days before his decease, he would mingle the sound of his almost inarticulate voice with those of friends who sang the hymns of praise and triumph at his bedside. These songs of praise seemed to fall on his ear with sweetness, and to swell his failing heart with unutterable bliss. When his voice and articulation had so far failed that it was difficult to understand his utterances, he would signify his desire to have singing, and in one or two instances started a favorite song or chorus himself, and sang with an energy that was as surprising as cheering to his weeping friends. The voice of the strong young man is hushed on earth; but we trust he has joined the hosts above, in the songs of the redeemed before the throne of God and the Lamb.

On Thursday afternoon, February 15, the corpse was carried to the chapel near by—six or eight of his surviving young friends and former associates acting as pall-bearers—when the writer of this preached a funeral discourse to a large, solemn and weeping assembly. The corpse was then carried to the burying ground, and interred in the presence of a large concourse, Rev. Anderson Ray reading the burial service, and our young friend left to sleep till the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible. G. W. CHATFIELD.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A True Friend.—"Another Richmond in the field," cried Richard; but for the sake of history and truth, be it known, the old proverb [illegible] the valiant king; and so, despite the multifarious bitters that flood the deluged markets of the country, Price's Great Specific overshadows them all. With loud acclaim, the sonorous echoes of which reverberate through all the land, mid the mighty mountains, answering the seaboard, give back the glad response from hill to dale, from river to lake, and both of these again to grand old ocean, that rolls it on for aye! With billowy roar the people hymn the praises of Price's Celebrated Aromatic Bitters. They have tested its efficacy, tried its virtues, and shrined it, like an idol, in the very heart of faith. Indigestion no longer waits upon their appethal indulgences. Dyspepsia breaks no more upon their enjoyable repasts. Nervousness avaunts; debility, that crouched within them, shrinks at the metamorphose of the giant strength, and the load of suffering under which they writhed is thrown off, as with the agile grace and power of an athlete. They care not for the recognition of other preparations, content to know and feel that they have found in Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters the true balm they have heard so often prated of in Gilead.

BY MARY [illegible]

There are two armies [illegible]
On the world's [illegible],
Though unnoticed by [illegible]
To the eyes of [illegible]
Though we hear no [illegible] of triumph,
Though we see no [illegible] fray,
These little [illegible]
For the Right [illegible] each day,
The Right or [illegible] each day.

They [illegible] no ground is [illegible]
And I watch the [illegible] they take,
One little army chooses
To fight for Truth's dear sake:
The banner floating o'er it
Rose grandly up to view;
And I read this glorious motto
"Fighting for the Right and True."
The Beautiful and True.

How brave that little army!
What a halo o'er it shines
And even angels welcome
Every soldier to its lines;
How sweet the stirring music
Of the tramp of little feet,
That in God's holy light way
Swiftly, onward, upward beat!
Onward, and upward beat!

Alas! the other army,
'Neath a gloomy flag unfurled,
Marches with the ranks of evil,
Treads the dark ways of the world;
Not for the True and Beautiful
Does it grow brave and strong;
For, lo! upon its banner
I read: "Fighting for the Wrong;"
Old surly-hearted Wrong.

Little Corporal.

OLD GINGERBREAD.

A high board fence standing up straight and blank on the common. A fence painted white, and with spikes on the top, and beyond it a long, low, brown school house with a yard—oh! such a yard for boys to play in, with plenty of old trees, and in one corner an out-of-door gymnasium, which was better than all.

Just outside the school house gate stood what at first seemed nothing but a huge umbrella, but upon closer investigation proved to be a stall, heaped up and running over with all sorts of things that boys' hearts delight in, and behind the stall sat an old man with long white hair, and a face that one could not help loving the moment one looked at it. This was Old Gingerbread. A funny name for an old man, and it was not, after all, his real name, but it was that by which all the boys called him, and which he loved to hear uttered by their fresh young voices as they came to buy from him day after day. There was not a boy in the whole school who did not love Old Gingerbread very dearly, or who did not know the meaning of the crutch which always stood by the side of his stall. I said that he sold all sorts of things, and he did, from a penny stick of candy to tops and kites for the older boys; but the principal thing he dealt in was gingerbread, and this was how he came by his name.

It was not common gingerbread either, but a particular sort that he made himself, and covered with what the little boys thought was real gold, and which made his stall look very splendid on a bright sunshiny day. Sunshine or storm, winter or summer through, the old man was in his accustomed place, and the big umbrella sheltered him alike from the burning summer sun, or the cold rain and snow. And now I want to tell you what made the boys love the old man so much, for there was a story connected with him, which they all knew, and a good cause for all the love and gratitude which they showed him. If you should look attentively at the school house you would see that it was new, and not just such an old-fashioned building as you might expect to see in the midst of those old trees, and on the outskirts of such a quiet little place as Weston. There had been an old school house, which had stood there for a century or two, and which every one expected would stand there forever, if they thought of it at all, for it seemed to be one of the fixtures of the place.

About two years before the time of our story, however, on a wild windy day, Dr. Price had just called the school to order before ringing the bell for the first recess, when, without any warning from without, a thick smoke began to come through the cracks of the doors and windows, and in another minute lurid flames shot up, and enveloped the room in one blinding glare. The boys, frightened, of course, as people always are at such a time, made a rush for the door, but upon opening it found all retreat in that direction cut off.

While all were in a panic, and Dr. Price, not knowing what to do, was trying to preserve some kind of order, a window at the back part of the room opened, a white head came slowly through, and a calm voice was heard to say: "Dr. Price, this is the only way of retreat now, but if you will pass the boys out one by one, I think we can save them yet." All turned and beheld the kind old face of Florian, the village painter. One by one the boys were handed down to him, and one by one he took the little ones in his arms and carried them down his ladder safely to the ground, and helped the older ones to get down themselves. Last of all came Dr. Price, and stepping his foot on the ground and looking back at the burning building, he said: "Let us thank God for our safe deliverance." The boys all fell on their knees, and with clasped hands were ready to utter the thanksgiving, when a piercing shriek rent the air, and, looking up, they beheld little Archie Grove at one of the upper windows waving his hands with gestures of despair, and shrieking to be taken down. How he got there no one knew, but the thing now was to get him out of the burning building, and quick as thought old Florian's ladder was placed against the side of the house again, and in another minute the boys saw him high up among the flames, and climbing on higher and higher still to save poor little Archie. At last he disappeared, and, during the few minutes that he was invisible to them, many a silent prayer went up to God that he might be enabled to bring their little favorite down in safety.

Minute after minute passed, but at last they saw him at the window again with Archie in his arms. Every breath was held, for the part of the building that the top of the ladder rested on was rapidly burning away, and all the boys saw that in a few minutes [illegible] would give way and all retreat from the burning house be cut off. Archie was almost too small to be trusted on the ladder alone, but old Florian saw there was no time to waste, so with a few words of encouragement he placed the little fellow on the topmost round, and slowly he began to descend. At last he reached the ground in safety, and such a cheer rent the air as had not been heard from the school yard in years; but their joy was in a moment turned to mourning for the brave old man, waiting until Archie was down before he would touch his foot to the ladder, at last ventured to come, but the beams were burned away too much for it to bear his weight, and before he reached the middle, with a tremendous crash the window frame gave way, and he came to the ground.

There were sad hearts, and many a tear shed that night through the village for the poor painter, for he was not expected to live till morning. With the first beams of the sun the boys all gathered around his little house to hear the doctor's report, but when it came it was hardly better than death they thought. He would live, the doctor said, but would be a cripple for the rest of his life. He had not given up his life for them, but what was something even more precious to the active old man. He could never more go day after day to his work, as he had been used to do as far back as any of the boys could recollect, and many a one in the village would miss his skillful hand and artistic taste.

Saturday came, and with it a meeting of all the boys at Dr. Price's house. They had made up their minds to do something for old Florian, for their gratitude was too deep for them to allow him to go unprovided for after the great service he had just done them. There was not a boy among them that was not willing to give up his spending money for a year to come, and Archie Grove's father, who could not do enough for the brave old man who had saved his only boy, offered to help them by any advance of money they might require. So they had come together this Saturday afternoon to consult with their teacher as to the best method for helping the sufferer. They wanted to get something done before he should get well, so that they might surprise him with the news.

One thing after another was suggested, until, after a long talk, they decided that they would set up a stall for him just outside the school house gate, where they could see him every day, and then and there they all registered a vow that they would always place their pennies for safe keeping in his hands. They had often heard him tell the story of how he once turned baker for the camp long ago, when he was a young man in the army, and he used to boast of the gingerbread he could bake, which the boys never believed in till one day he actually made some to prove to them that he could. The recollection of this now came to their minds, and they thought if he would only enter the business, they would never be loathe to exchange their pocket-money for a piece of this same good cake.

So it was settled; and with Dr. Price's help they stocked the stall with everything they could think of, leaving the question of the gingerbread until he should get well. In a week or two he was able to sit up, and then it was the boys told their plan to him, and found him only too glad to carry it out, and very thankful of their kind care of him.

It is two years now since all this happened, and the school house is built up again, and everything goes on as usual, except that old Florian has turned into Old Gingerbread, and I think he likes his present business full as well as the old one, and I am sure the boys like it a great deal better.

And now, boys and girls, do you ever think, as you pass the stalls of poor old men and women on the street corners on your way to school, that they may have been brought to this kind of business by just some such accident as happened to Old Gingerbread; and that the thoughtless word and idle jest, that you indulge in as you pass them, go to their hearts, which often yearn after just such children as you. Don't spend all your pennies at the large fashionable candy store because you think it looks well, but give it to the old apple woman at the corner, or the poor old man who day after day holds out his hat for the few coins which he cannot see drop into it. God will not forget such little acts of kindness, and if you would only take the trouble to get acquainted with some of these old men and women, you would find that they had just as kind hearts, and some of them as pleasant faces, as Old Gingerbread.—J. R. W., in New York Observer.

"WAS JESUS CHRIST A COWARD?"—"A coward, Tom! That's what you are! Why don't you strike him, and not walk away so, and let him call you names? Catch me to take it so quietly! I guess I would let him know who he had to fight. O, you are a coward!"

"Was Jesus Christ, our Savior, a coward, Jack? And what did he do when he was scourged, and struck in the face, and even spit upon? Did he strike back? Or when he was reviled, did he do the same? No! we are told that he answered not a word; but when on the cross, in suffering and agony, he prayed God to forgive them! Shall we not try and follow his example? I intend this year to endeavor, as far as I can, to be like Jesus, meek and gentle, and forbearing and forgiving. I had not done anything to offend Will; only refused to play truant with him, and advised him to go to school too, when he struck me, and because I did not strike back he called me names."

Though outward sins can be cured only through a change of heart, yet is the heart to be reached by breaking off the outward sins.

BELIEVE nothing against another, but on good authority; nor report what may hurt another, unless it be a greater hurt to another to conceal it.—W. Penn.

The Farm and Garden.

CLOVER.

We do say it to every one who wants to feed a cow, a calf, a pig, a horse, and if only a quarter of an acre to spare, sow clover. Be not afraid. Suppose it costs at your house, by the small, sixteen to eighteen cents per pound; two and a half pounds to a quarter of an acre, admit fifty cents. It will, if cut and fed in pen or lot, give more and better feed to cow and calves and hogs than five or ten dollars' worth of corn. We know what the croakers say; they said it to ourself in 1830 to 1834, but before 1837 we showed what it would do. If land be poor, enrich it for a fifty-bushel crop of corn. Plow deep; we care not if it be clay land, or if it be sandy, if rich, alluvial bottoms, only let it be dry and well drained; stir the soil under; plow as deep as you can; harrow fine, and leave thus until about the tenth of February, low down in the thirtieth degree of latitude, and say first to tenth of March in the thirty-fifth degree; then sow ten pounds, no less, and even twelve pounds, all the better; brush in lightly and leave it for the sprouting.

For soiling—cut green and fed in the house, pen or lot—cut daily as much as is eaten up clean, and no more, as soon as in bloom. For hay, cut when in full bloom; mow it close, and as soon as possible after in full bloom; first year, it is better to wait until in full bloom, yet not wait for a brown bloom, as it is better to cut in time enough for a good start before the drouth of May or June. In latitude thirty-two degrees, on good land, we have had clover in full bloom on the twenty-first of March, sown in October—rich, fresh land that had been cowpenned, so to say, for years. We took two crops a year. We do affirm, an acre of best land will feed more cattle and hogs, and better, too, than a similar one in corn and fully cultivated. Hogs need no other feed; yet, if corn to spare, it will pay to push those for slaughter, with a good feed of corn two or three times a day. We say, never let a hoof on it, unless if a mower be used. Don't cut first year but once. The crop can be increased by sowing one bushel of plaster per acre on the clover, when wet with dew. We do desire to see plenty at all our homes, less need for corn and more time to make cotton. Cotton is money, if home be fully supplied.—Southern Farmer.

COWS.

The Prairie Farmer says: "The great claims of the Jersey is as a cream-producing animal. Where milk is to be disposed of by the gallon, as it is in a city market or at a cheese factory, the Jersey is an unprofitable cow to keep. But where quality and richness, and not quantity, is desired, as in furnishing milk and cream for the family, or for producing butter of beautiful rich color, and fine flavor, it has no peer among all the improved breeds of cattle. There is both pleasure and profit in keeping a few of these cows on every farm. They are pets to be loved and tenderly cared for. Their yield of cream is surprising both in quantity and in quality. There is no greater dainty for the table than Jersey cream. The butter made from it is of surpassing excellence, and often commands twice the price of ordinary butter in the market. Even a few of these cows in a herd will cause the peculiar color and flavor of Jersey butter to be observed in that made from the entire quantity of milk. It is also observed that the milk of half-breeds has the characteristics of full-blooded animals in an eminent degree; to such an extent is the influence of the male exerted on the progeny of the short-horn, Devon or native cow.

"At present there is a good demand for superior milch cows on the part of persons living in cities and towns. The full or half-blood Jerseys are well adapted for this purpose, being docile, spare feeders, great milkers, and of a breed whose ancestors have been kept confined to narrow limits. Although little can be claimed for the Jersey as a beef-producing animal on account of its diminutive size, still all experience, both in this country and in Europe, shows that the Jersey is very easily fattened after it is dried off, and that the beef is of excellent quality. Indeed, it appears to be true that cows that give extremely rich milk will fatten easily when confined in the stall. The fat contained in Jersey beef is yellow or straw-colored. Jersey calves are prized for veal in the islands where this breed has long been raised, and the same may be said of the few animals slaughtered in this country. In all parts of the Eastern States and Canada, where these animals have been introduced, they are held in great favor, while the few who have kept them in the West are equally warm in their praise."

A REMEDY FOR CUT-WORMS AND WIRE-WORMS.

Conversing with an old farmer a few years ago on this subject, he told me that he was in the habit of soaking his seed corn in strong brine—meat pickle would answer—and that corn thus treated was never injured by worms. I think he said he soaked his seed in the pickle about twenty-four hours. I expressed some apprehension that steeping corn in brine would injure the germinating principle, but he assured me that such was not the case, as it all came up well. He said he once farmed a place to the shares, and intended pursuing this plan with his seed corn, but his landlord objected, thinking it would ruin the seed; he, however, after much persuasion, consented that a portion of it should be thus treated, and the result was the corn from the pickled seed came up well, and grew on undisturbed by worms, while that from the dry seed was almost totally destroyed by them.

I remember of hearing my father tell once of some peach trees he once had in the yard, and which were badly injured by the borer. In order to destroy the worms, he poured a quantity of fish pickle about the roots. The trees bore a plentiful crop of peaches, but the fruit was so salty as to be unfit for use. It would appear from this that the saline particles were taken up in the circulation of the tree, and thus disseminated to the fruit, and this may account for the efficacy of the salting process in the case of seed corn, the saline matter being taken into the plant, and thus preventing the ravages of worms.—L. D. Lewis, in Prairie Farmer.

SUGAR-MAKING.

The agricultural journals begin to talk of a new industry—the manufacture of sugar from sweet potatoes. The average product of a bushel of potatoes (the yam variety being preferred) is said to be over two gallons, and as the average yield per acre on poor sandy soil is from a hundred and fifty to a hundred and eighty bushels, it follows that the product will be from three hundred to three hundred and fifty gallons of sirup. This sirup, moreover, is said to surpass that of the beet, and even that of the sorghum, in delicacy of flavor, and in nearly all the other qualities which should commend it for use at the table. The residuum, after the juice is extracted, is pronounced a valuable article of food for either man or beast. In the Southern States, where yams grow spontaneously, the manufacture of potato sirup may be very profitably carried on, and if it has the effect of cheapening sugar, the consumers of saccharine at the North can have no serious objection.

EXPERIMENT WITH STRAWBERRIES.—A strawberry grower states that in half a hogshead of rainwater he puts one-quarter of a pound of nitre, and with the solution sprinkled the plants when blossoming. The application was made at evening, twice a week, and continued until the fruit was nearly of size. The result was that the vines thus fertilized gave double the amount of fruit obtained from adjoining vines, which did not receive the application.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

POTATO PIE.—Have ready a rich crust, lay in slices of a boiled sweet potato and thin slices of a mellow apple, then spread thickly, sugar and butter, cover with a crust and bake it nicely.

FRIED HOMINY.—Take boiled hominy, hot or cold. If cold, warm it. Add a piece of butter, a little salt, half a pint of cream and flour to stiffen it, together with one or two eggs. Fry on a griddle after cutting it in thin slices.

OYSTER SAUSAGE.—Chop a pint of oysters with a quarter of a pound of veal and a quarter of a pound of suet, and some bread crumbs; season with salt and pepper; pound them in a mortar; make them into little cakes with an egg; flour, and fry them dry. Serve hot.

DR. BELLOWS' IDEAL LOAF.—Dr. Bellows, in his work, "Philosophy of Eating," gives what he considers the true method: "My ideal loaf is made from wheat perfectly fair, and free from smut or other disease, not having been wet or molded before or after grinding; carefully kept clean after being properly ground, so as to need no sifting; and not to be bolted, it retains every part that belongs to it, needing no addition except cold water."

MINCEMEAT.—Of a fresh boiled sirloin of beef, one pound; stoned raisins and minced apples, each two pounds; currants and fine Lisbon sugar, each two and a half pounds; candied oranges, lemon or citron rind, eight to sixteen ounces; boiled lemons, two, (time of boiling, an hour and a quarter;) rind of two others, grated; salt, half an ounce; nutmegs, two small; pounded mace, one large teaspoonful, and rather more of ginger; good sherry, half a pint; brandy, half a pint. Mince the ingredients separately, and mix them all well before the wine and brandy are put in; press the whole into jars, and keep covered.

We are now told that the discovery of the photographic art is due to Thomas Wedgwood in 1791, and a fac-simile is given of the earliest known Heliotype or sun picture taken by him. Miss Meteyard says she has traced the link which connected the Frenchman Dominique Daguerre with the elder Wedgwood, and so onward with the testimony of Sir Humphry Davy and James Watt, the great engineer. The fac-simile referred to is supposed to be the sun's copy of an etching by Teniers, or one of his school.

The commonly received theory that mist, fog, clouds, etc., are composed of minute watery vesicles is opposed by J. Kober, in Poggendorff's Annalen der Physik und Chemie. In his article he reviews the statements of a large number of physicists who hold this view, and cites experiments tending to show that aqueous vapor in the atmosphere does not take a vesicular form. According to his opinion, clouds consist of larger or smaller solid drops. These drops of water, floating about, become covered with a protective layer of vapor, and, thus enveloped, often form conglomerations. Their falling is only prevented by ascending currents or layers of air, until, by further accumulation, they descend in rain.

Attention is called by the Mechanics' Magazine to the fact that anchors of ships moored in the vicinity of the Guano Islands frequently bring up guano from the bottom of the sea. This fact is quite at variance with the universally received explanation of bird origin for the deposits, unless there has been a general subsidence of the land; when, in turn, the deposits become too vast to be accounted for by this theory. More likely these deposits on the Chincha Islands, which in some places are upward of one hundred feet thick, have been raised from the bed of the ocean, where far more extensive deposits still remain, and have been formed by long-continued accumulations of the remains of animals and plants, those of the islands chiefly, and those of the sea, wholly of marine origin.

The National Baptist says that in his lecture on electricity, delivered recently in the Philadelphia Academy of Music, Prof. Morton illustrated how inexact most persons are in their estimates of duration. Anything less than a second is popularly set down as equivalent to "no time," but when scientific men calculate the billionth part of a second, the importance of this error is clearly manifested. A lightning-flash occupies the one sixteen-hundredth part of a second. To give an idea of such marvelous rapidity of motion, Prof. Morton took a disc bearing a bold black figure on a white ground. This was made to revolve so rapidly that no trace of the figure remained, and even the appearance of motion was lost. And yet, every time an electric spark was sent through the disc, the figure stood out, clearly defined. So quick was the flash that it had the effect of apparently arresting the motion of the disc. The one sixteen-hundredth part of a second, therefore, enabled us to discern the figure.

The fact has been brought out by the recent deep-sea explorations of the Mediterranean sea that its waters contain matter in suspension in a very fine state of division, which it derives from its rivers. The bottom water is almost everywhere turbid, and the bottom muddy. Very little life exists over it when thus muddy, and this is attributable to the fact that life cannot exist where there is a constant deposition of this finest silt going forward, as it tends to cover the surface of the animal and prevent aeration. Thus oyster-beds will not flourish in the range of river deposits. These facts correspond with those observed by Tyndal, who detected the particles in the surface-water of the Mediterranean by electric light, and attributed the deep blue color of the waters, as well as of those of Lake Geneva, to their presence. The facts are stated, adds the American Journal of Science, to explain to geologists how non-fossiliferous clay-beds may have been formed in past time.

Fossil Elephants in Alaska.—It has been generally supposed by scientific men that the fossil elephant of Siberia had no representative in the same latitude on this continent. Recent examinations on the Yukon river in Alaska, however, have established the fact that the remains are even more plentiful on the west than on the east side of the North Pacific. Enormous quantities of bones are found, and a supply of ivory sufficient to last the world for centuries. The valleys of all the streams and all the low grounds are filled with bones and tusks, so that every vessel now arriving from those remote possessions has part of its cargo made up in part of these new-found remains. The elephant, whose range was formerly almost universal, is now confined to a small portion of Africa and Asia, and it would seem as if the species was in process of slow extinction. Neither Europe nor America, which once swarmed with them, has now either a climate or vegetation fitted to their existence. Their remains, however, are likely to give Alaska a value not previously suspected.

Hair.—Under the magnifying-glass human hair presents the appearance of a tube of a light brown color, with lines running along each side, and wavy or zigzag lines across. The lines at the sides are the fibers which form the walls or outside of the hair, and the wavy lines are the edges of the various layers or coats of the surface, which, as the hair gradually diminishes to a point, must overlap each other. A hair is thus like the stem of a tree, having bark, fiber, and sometimes pith in the middle.

Hogs' bristles, besides being about three times larger than a man's hair, have much finer fibers. The wavy lines are much nearer together, which shows that the over-lapping scales are thinner. There is no bark, and in the center there is a dark cavity passing up through it. The finer hairs of the horse and ass are like those of a man, outside, but they are distinguished by having a dark pith in the middle.

The hairs taken from the fur of a cat, and that of a mole, are variegated by dark and light patches in irregular bands, across their surface. The scales are strongly marked on both sides in the cat, but only on one side in the mole. The most remarkable in appearance are, however, the hairs of a bat, which have the outer scales so projecting that they look like a chain of trumpet-shaped flowers, each stuck into the mouth of the other.—Youth's Companion.

SAVE YOUR CLOTHING! SAVE YOUR LABOR!

ITEMS OF IMPORTANCE TO EVERY HOUSEKEEPER.

THE WOMAN'S FRIEND

WASHING MACHINE!

Only four months since it was first introduced to the New Orleans public, and large numbers have been sold.

It washes by beating, instead of rubbing—the only true principle, as time has demonstrated.

A Home-manufactured Article.

THE UNDERSIGNED offers this Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating instead of rubbing. It will wash 16 shirts or 25 ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly Wash, Rinse and Blue 100 pieces ordinary clothing in FORTY-FIVE MINUTES, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread. The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it

WITHOUT THE LEAST INJURY.

It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and cost less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no fog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every machine will do what is represented if the directions are followed.

To verify what is stated, I have obtained a few certificates from responsible parties, which are annexed hereto.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $15.

EDWARD THOMPSON, Manufacturer and Proprietor,

ja22 1m 184 PETERS STREET, NEAR JULIA, NEW ORLEANS.

CARROLLTON, LA., November 1, 1871.

I hereby certify that I have one of the "Rocker or Woman's Friend Washing Machines," and have found it the Machine for country use, as it will wash dirty clothes, such as farm laborers wear rolling logs, etc. Any machine will wash clothes that are slightly soiled. A. W. CARRUTH.

Mr. Carruth, in a letter accompanying this certificate, makes the following statement: "My wife, who understands fully the principles and process of washing, says it is useless to wash ordinarily soiled clothes through more than one hot water, but I could not well embody this in a certificate."

NEW ORLEANS, November 8, 1871.

I take pleasure in stating that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson in September last, gives me excellent satisfaction. I have used it personally, and can say that it will wash the dirtiest clothes and give them a grass-bleached whiteness. I have washed swiss muslin dresses with it without the least injury. I have washed blankets with it and found (as stated in the circulars) that it gives them a new appearance and feeling. One week, during a temporary illness, my little girl twelve and boy ten years of age done the entire washing. I simply put in the water and soap. I will give any further information I may possess to those interested, by calling at my residence. MRS. A. BOUCHEREAU,
232½ Eighth street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 18, 1871.

MR. E. THOMPSON—Dear Sir: I have used your Washer for the last three months, and as a practical man (securing daily) I pronounce it the best in the market; I could not spare it. I will explain its merits to any one by applying to P. VOLNEY,
Dyer and Scourer, 89 Bienville street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 7, 1871.

I certify that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson last June, has done the entire washing of my hotel, from the largest quilt and blanket to the smallest collar, ever since, to my entire satisfaction. It will wash clean the dirtiest pieces, and will not damage the most delicate. It has saved me a great amount of labor. Any one can see it in operation at my hotel on Monday of each week.

JOHN REINHARDT,
Proprietor Verandah Hotel, New Orleans.

SYLVESTER-LARNED INSTITUTE
For Young Ladies,
402 and 404 Carondelet street,
New Orleans, November 15, 1871.

MR. E. THOMPSON—Dear Sir: Having used for over two months your "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," and tested it most thoroughly under my own eye, I am prepared to say with confidence that it does all you claim for it, if the simple and plain directions are followed. The Wringer especially is a great success. Altogether the Machine and Wringer are wonderful labor-saving machines, and the machine is very properly called "Woman's Friend."

Without it, not less than double our present number of servants would be required to do our work—hence the economy of it is evident. Every family should have one. Yours truly, J. S. PAGAUD.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well-known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted to the subject, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the New Orleans Times-Democrat, March 12.

The general market has exhibited rather more animation since our last report, especially in most branches of the wholesale trade, which are now doing a fair business in sales to country merchants and city dealers. Sugar and molasses have been in good request, at easier rates; the lower grades of the former showing a decline of ¼c.

We have nothing additional to report in relation to the probable receipts of cotton. It is the general impression that we may look for a continued falling off compared with last year, and the most common crop estimate is now 3,000,000 bales, some parties looking for less, while others still claim much more.

The river is 11 feet 8 inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the eighth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales 9,676
Lake	136
Mobile	1,691
Arkansas	124
Florida	1
Texas	317
Total	12,178

On Saturday the movement commenced with a manifestly better feeling among factors, many of whom refused to offer their stocks, while even those who wished to realize were more stringent in their pretensions, and, although the demand was only moderate, yet 3,550 bales changed hands at prices, showing an advance of ⅛@¼c., good ordinary closing at 20¾@21⅛c., low middling at 21⅜@21¾c., and middling at 22¼c. On Monday the dispatches from Liverpool and New York being discouraging, the turn was in favor of buyers, but without any marked decline, the sales embracing 3,700 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate inquiry but at rather easier rates, and, although most factors were unwilling to meet the demand at the ruling rates, yet others who wished to realize were compelled to submit to further concessions of ⅛@¼c. and in some cases ⅜c., the closing rates showing a pretty general decline of ¼c. Good ordinary sold at 20⅝@20⅝c., low middling at 21c., and 21¼c. for even-running, strict do. at 21⅜c., middling at 22c., strict middling at 22⅛c., good middling at 23c., and middling fair at 23¼c. We also heard of exceptional sales of low middling at less than our inside quotations for that grade.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 809,071 bales, against 1,092,239 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 735,235 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 134,451 to France, and a decrease of 543,262 to Great Britain, and of 159,413 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	19¾@20
Good ordinary	20⅞@20⅝
Low middling	21 @21
Middling	22 @
Strict middling	22⅛@ —
Good middling	23⅛@23

Sugar.—We note a quiet market, with light supplies. There is a fair demand for open kettle, but little or none for clarified. On Tuesday the market was in good supply, with a moderate demand. Interior sold at 6⅞c., common 7¼c., fair 8¼@8½c., good fair 8¾@8⅞c., fully fair 9¼@9⅝c., prime 9¾@9⅞c., strictly prime 10c., choice 10¼c.

Molasses.—Louisiana is in fair demand, and the receipts on Saturday and Monday were sold at 40@44c. for common fermenting, 45c. for fair, and 50@55c. for prime fermenting, 45@55c. for reboiled, 48c. for centrifugal not fermenting, 55c. for cistern bottom, and 56@58c. for prime. Some half bbls. strictly prime sold at 62c. ₱ gallon.

Corn.—On Tuesday large receipts caused a decline of 7@10c. ₱ bushel. The sales embraced 16,000 sacks at 75@78c. for mixed, 80c. for white, yellow and mixed, and 83@85c. for white.

Oats.—On Tuesday, with liberal receipts, there was a decline of 5c. ₱ bushel, when 200 sacks sold at 60c. ₱ bushel.

Bran.—On Tuesday prices declined 10c. ₱ 100 lbs. There were sales to the trade at $1.75 ₱ 100 lbs. 200 sacks sold at $1.75 ₱ 100 lbs.

Pork.—On Tuesday large receipts depressed the market, and mess was offered at $13.75 ₱ bbl., without buyers. It is retailing at $14@$14.25 ₱ bbl.

Bacon.—On Tuesday the market was quiet but firm. 50 casks and 50 boxes sold, in lots, at 6c. for shoulders, and 8⅝@8¾c. for clear sides. Clear rib sides were quoted at 7½@7⅝c. ₱ lb.

Hams.—On Monday 10 tierces sugar-cured sold at 11½c., and 12 do. at 11¾c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 200 tierces sugar-cured sold, in lots, at 11c. for uncanvased, and 11@11½c. ₱ lb. for canvased.

Dry Salt Meat.—The market is quiet, with a light supply of shoulders, which are a little firmer. On Monday 10 casks clear rib sides sold at 6¾c. ₱ lb. Shoulders are quoted at 5¼c., rib sides 6c., clear rib sides 6¼c., clear sides 6½@6⅝c., and hams 6½@6¾c. ₱ lb.

Lard.—On Tuesday 50 kegs refined sold at 10¼c. ₱ lb. Packers' in tierces is quoted at 9½c., refined 9¾c.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 110⅛@110⅜, (against 110¼ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates in both markets.

The sales of silver have been confined to $500 in American half dollars on Monday at 103, and $2,500 at 103½. American half dollars are quoted at 103½@103¾, and Mexican dollars at 3@3½ per cent. premium in gold.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly

Durenge's Pectoral Balsamic Syrup.

Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Durenge's Pectoral Balsamic Syrup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.

It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.

For sale by all respectable druggists,

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1872. NO. 12.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, March 14.—A meeting of about a thousand unemployed workingmen was held this afternoon in Tompkins square, under the auspices of the International Society. Resolutions were adopted that railroads, mines, gas works, expresses, telegraphs, etc., have a right to be owned and run by the government in the interests of the people at cost; that the public lands should be disposed of only to actual settlers; that all acts of legislation should be submitted to the people for their approval or rejection, and demanding of the city authorities work for the unemployed.

Nashville, March 15.—Mary Middleton Rutledge, wife of Francis B. Fogg, died suddenly this morning of heart disease, in this city. She was a granddaughter of a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and distinguished as one of the most intelligent and benevolent women of Tennessee.

St. Louis, March 15.—A revolt in the Missouri penitentiary to-day was subdued. One convict was shot and others bludgeoned. The plan was to overpower the guards and rob and burn the shops.

Boston, March 16.—A majority of the Legislative committee on the subject have reported a bill to amend the constitution so as to give women the right to vote and hold office. The minority of the committee consent.

St. Louis, March 17.—A bill was introduced in the Senate yesterday practically abolishing the death penalty, by leaving the mode of punishment to a jury.

Washington, March 18.—A bill was introduced by Mr. Kellogg to aid in rebuilding levees on the Mississippi river, providing for the issue of ten-forty bonds, at the rate of $16,000 per mile, to the Mississippi Valley Levee Company, to aid in the construction of the levees from Cape Girardeau, Missouri, to Fort Jackson, Louisiana.

Chicago, March 18.—Twelve millions of dollars are being invested in hotel property here. Work is progressing rapidly on the Pacific and Gardner hotels, and contracts for the new Sherman House have been awarded.

New York, March 19.—The New Jersey Methodist Conference passed a resolution closing camp meetings on Sunday.

Twenty-nine cases of smallpox yesterday, and on the increase.

FOREIGN.

Paris, March 14.—It is reported that President Thiers yesterday gave final notice to England of the renunciation by France of the commercial treaty.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have departed for Cannes and Nice.

The deputies of the Left in the Assembly unanimously resolved to repudiate the International Society. The bill for its suppression passed the Assembly to-day without an amendment. It imposes various fines and terms of imprisonment for holding office in, belonging to or having any connection with the society, and in some cases deprives the offender of his civil and domestic rights.

Berlin, March 14.—The Prussian government has requested the Roman Catholic Bishop of Ermland to revoke the sentences of excommunication pronounced by him, contrary to the laws of the country.

Matamoras, Mexico, March 14.—General Palacios received a courier extraordinary this evening, with official dispatches announcing the reoccupation of Zacatecas by the government troops, under General Rocha, on the sixth instant, after the signal defeat of the rebels, commanded by Generals Trevino, Guerra and Martinez, who had consolidated their forces. General Rocha claims to have captured all their infantry, artillery and munitions, the leaders only escaping with a small force of cavalry.

The bells are ringing and artillery firing in honor of the victory.

London, March 15.—The Emperor and Empress of Brazil have departed for home.

Earl Granville announced in the House of Lords to-night he had received official notice from the French cabinet of the abrogation of the commercial treaty.

The Fenians are making preparations for grand demonstrations throughout Ireland in favor of amnesty on St. Patrick's day.

Havana, March 15.—The survey steamer Bibb has returned with a collection of Azteo antiquities.

A telegraph cable between Cuba and Mexico will probably be laid in April.

Captain Richard Adams, late of the steamer Moro Castle, died last night.

The Moro Castle, from New York, arrived this morning. She had her wheel-houses damaged in a storm.

Paris, March 16.—The trial of Marshal Bazaine, for the capitulation of Metz, is expected, and just now occupies public attention. As he can only be tried by his peers, there is some difficulty in assembling a court martial which is competent, as nearly all the marshals of France, of whom the court must be composed, were themselves concerned in some capitulation or surrendor during the late war.

The Committee on the Defense of Paris have submitted a report condemning the present system of fortifications around the city, and the government has refused to fortify the points occupied by the German troops during the siege.

Duc de Grammont has issued a pamphlet reviewing the recent struggle between France and Germany, and showing that Bismarck had determined upon going to war.

The National Assembly to-day rejected a resolution proposing a reduction in the allowance of President Thiers. It was proposed to reduce the amount by one-tenth.

London, March 16.—It is reported that England and Uruguay have come to an open rupture, and that all friendly relations between the two nations have ceased.

Berlin, March 16.—The Archbishop of Cologne has formally excommunicated Profs. Hilgers, Knoodt, Saugen and Rusch, of the University of Bonn, for their rejection of the dogma of papal infallibility.

London, March 17.—The Observer states that at the meeting of the cabinet yesterday the American reply to Granville's note was read and discussed, and produced a favorable impression, and was regarded as furnishing the opening for further negotiations on the basis of arrangements provided in the treaty of Washington.

Rome, March 18.—Von Arnim, the German embassador to the papal court, will shortly present to the Pope his letters of recall.

Bonn, March 18.—Delegates of the Old Catholic party, to the number of one hundred, held a meeting here last week, and resolved to call a general congress, to meet at Cologne, in September. A petition against the Jesuits was framed, to be presented to the Reichstag.

Calcutta, March 18.—The assassin of Lord Mayo has been executed. He confessed that the assassination was not the work of a conspiracy, but that he alone designed and carried out the murder. He designed also to kill General Stowart, who accompanied Earl Mayo.

London, March 19.—Granville announced in the House of Commons that a reply to America's note would be dispatched on Thursday, and that the honor of the country would be maintained.

The press of this city this morning, in commenting on the statement made to the House of Commons last night, by Mr. Gladstone, relative to the reply to the American government to Earl Granville's note, generally express the opinion that the communication of the premier will create disappointment and apprehensions throughout the country.

The government is urged to bring the present difficulty with America, arising out of claims for indirect damages, to an amicable and honorable solution.

Matamoras, March 19.—Particulars of General Trevino's defeat near Zacatecas prove more disastrous to the revolutionists than at first reported. While the battle was progressing one thousand of Trevino's men revolted and joined General Rocha, which created a panic, resulting in the route of the revolutionists and the capture of Trevino's main command, with all their material of war.

General Cortina attacked the revolutionists near Camargo, defeating them and capturing many horses and men.

General Quiroga's position in Camargo is rendered precarious, Cortina having advanced toward Monterey.

A good definition of the difference between "old school" and "new school" was given by the Hon. J. B. Grinnell, of Iowa. "As near as I can understand," said he, "the children of Old School Presbyterians sin as soon as they are born, and the children of New School Presbyterians as soon as they know how."

SPLENDID LEGACY.

Mr. R. H. Bayley, a Virginian by birth, and many years a prosperous merchant of this city, lately departed this life. His will was probated in the Second District Court a few days ago. It contains the following provisions:

"I give to the Washington Robert E. Lee College, at Lexington, Virginia, seventy thousand dollars in cash, say $70,000, to establish a professorship to be called by my name; the president and trustees of the colleges shall designate the most useful one for the institution. The amount, say $70,000, shall be kept as a permanent fund, the amount never to be made less. The interest on the same to be paid in support of the said professorship.

"I appoint my brother, G. M. Bayley, of this city, and General Lee, the president of Washington and R. E. Lee College, at Lexington, or his successor in office, my executors or administrators, to carry this will into effect, without their giving any security."

Such bequests as this have become frequent of late. The hardships and afflictions of our Southern people appear to have excited a sectional and local pride and interest in our home institutions, which have not hitherto been manifested by our rich people. The magnificent legacy of Mr. Miller, of Lynchburg, Virginia, of $1,000,000, for the education of the poor children of Albemarle, his native county, and of $100,000 to the University of Virginia, and other large bequests by rich men in the South, are gratifying proofs of this invigorated State and sectional pride among our rich men. They show how unjust and unfounded is the aspersion upon the Southern people of indifference to education. If these examples are followed by other wealthy testators, and the liberality of the rich men in New England toward their great institutions of learning should be emulated by our own citizens possessing large means, we should soon be able in the South to vie with those great institutions that have conferred so much renown and so many benefits upon Northern communities.—New Orleans Times.

For the Advocate.

HOMER COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: Through you let me say to the preachers of the Louisiana Conference, and the friends of Methodism in this State, that this institution of learning is not second to any in its claims upon our confidence and support.

We have invested here thousands of dollars in brick and mortar, and the fine college building stands upon the hill overlooking the beautiful and flourishing town of Homer, a monument of the liberality of the citizens of Claiborne and the adjoining parishes. The present endowment subscription, reaching nearly $15,000, almost entirely from this parish, shows that this people are interested and in earnest about building up a college here. I might also mention the fact of the fine chemical and philosophical apparatus and library lately bought in the city of New York for the college. These facts speak for themselves, and are worthy of demanding the interest and support of our people.

The president, Rev. James E. Cobb, is not surpassed in learning and piety in the South, and, with his able faculty, he is laboring to make Homer College the first in the connection, North or South. The curriculum is full and complete, and the faculty are determined that the student shall be thorough before he can be advanced, so that when he graduates he will not only be an ornament to society, but will be able to give credit to the institution in any department of business.

The moral discipline of the school is as good as the most conscientious Christian could ask for, and yet there is nothing in it but that the most worldly-minded parent would commend. Its location is the most desirable one that could be found in the State, and for health and refinement it is not surpassed in any country. It is the very place to build up a first-class college, and the foundations are all laid. Yet, brethren, Homer College is at this moment literally struggling for an existence. The trustees have exhausted their wits and means; but they are unable to make it what it ought to be. The college belongs to the Louisiana Conference, and she has promised to help; but have those promises been redeemed? A few empty resolutions do not keep the buildings in repair, nor pay the faculty or supply the agent with bread and meat.

The agent, Rev. Thomas J. Upton, is efficient and industrious; but his labors, so far, have been confined principally to this parish and for the endowment. It is not expected that a college is to be supported entirely by local patronage. It cannot be done. We need friends who will work for us, and send up young men from different parts of the country to fill these halls with students. Could not each preacher in the bounds of our Conference send up two or more young men to Homer College? Now, brethren, let us prove ourselves faithful to the resolutions passed at our last Conference.

Again, we need money—need it now. Who will make an effort to find a few friends of education like Colonel Hardee, McVay and others, who have so nobly answered the appeal of Bishop Keener for help for Centenary—to send Homer College a few thousand dollars.

I would not pluck a single laurel from Centenary, nor hinder in the least her success. Yet I am sure that Homer is equally needy and worthy, and Homer belongs to us entirely. She is the child of our household, the pledge of our union. Should we neglect to provide for her wants, or shall we be counted "worse than infidels" in failing to labor for our offspring? This is an appeal made in good earnest. It is the necessity of the case that called it out. Who will answer? Who will send us help, either young men or money, or both?

Address Rev. J. E. Cobb, president Homer College, or William F. Moreland, president of the Board of Trustees, Homer, Louisiana.

REPORTS FROM THE WORK.

Lower Peach Tree, Alabama Conference.

Mr. Editor: I find Christian people here, and stewards of our church, who know and do their duty well. They have rented for me a comfortable house, well situated, with good water, and have well supplied it with new furniture, suited to a preacher's comfort and convenience; also a full supply of provisions. A committee is now negotiating for a house and lot as a permanent parsonage for the circuit, and there is no doubt but this will be accomplished in a few weeks, at most.

At my first quarterly meeting there was a full attendance of the official members, save one appointment. The brethren manifested great zeal and concern for the financial as well as the spiritual interests of the circuit. The assessments were satisfactorily agreed to by our worthy presiding elder (Bro. Briggs) and myself.

The spiritual condition of the church on this work is as good as I could expect, under existing circumstances. I have reasons, well grounded, to look for an improvement in this important matter.

The appointments are well attended, especially so when we take into consideration the bad roads and weather. I will here say that Methodism is looking up through this country. I have great reason to believe and trust that the Lord will pour out his Spirit abundantly upon the church and people of this work. O that it may be so all over our land! is my prayer.

A. C. Hundley, P. C.

Lower Peach Tree, March 8, 1872.

Caddo Circuit, Shreveport District, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Editor: Having nearly finished my second round since Conference, I desire to say a few words in reference to the status and prospects on my circuit. At our Conference in Monroe, and also after I returned home, I gave myself unreservedly anew to God and the work of the ministry—laying self, wife and everything we possess on the altar of consecration to Christ.

When I left this circuit for Conference I had only two appointments; two others were added to it by the cabinet; since Conference I have added two others; making, in all, six monthly appointments. The appointments cover an area of twenty-six by ten miles. Each of those promises a good harvest. At every point, save one, I hope to have a good Sabbath school. We organized a school last Sabbath in Greenwood under more favorable auspices, or at least with more earnestness of spirit, than last year.

We are now making strenuous efforts to raise funds to build a new church in place of the one burned down just before Conference. I am hopeful of succeeding, though we may be necessitated to call for aid from abroad.

Mrs. Parsons, very recently from Mansfield, with her three highly accomplished daughters, has opened a school of high grade in the academy at Greenwood, which promises to give a new interest to our little village. I sincerely hope that every one who can possibly do so will rally to the support of this school, so highly meriting patronage. Mrs. Parsons has had many years' experience in teaching in colleges and schools of high grade, while her daughters are even more highly advanced in the classics than herself. Good board, at reasonable rates, can be obtained in good families.

I would say, in conclusion, that we are trying to put the entire machinery in motion, and, having begun systematically, I am anticipating a good harvest.

Will my good brethren pray for me and my good wife, who is at this time quite sick? To my brethren in the ministry: let us all do a faithful year's work for Christ. Souls are perishing! Let the warning cry ring out, and the battle rage on, till we shall hear the jubilant shout of victory coming up from every quarter, and see the grace of God coming down upon land and sea.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel,

Amicus W. Williams.

OUR MEXICAN MISSION.

It behooves us to push our mission work in this opening field. We must not be content to remain upon the border, but should penetrate the heart of Mexico in a brief period. Bishop Marvin, writing to the St. Louis Advocate, says:

The readers of the Advocate will remember that a few weeks ago I gave some account of the Mexican mission recently established in western Texas; and in view of this opening field, so large in its prospective demands, urged the church to greater zeal and liberality in the missionary work. I did not at all intend to invite remittances to myself for the benefit of the Mexican mission, but to swell, if possible, the volume of missionary contributions made in the regular way, so that the church might be able to meet the demand upon her for this and all other fields.

But within this week I have received two letters,—one from Dr. J. E. Douthit, of Kingsville, Missouri, containing $5, and one from Rev. B. M. Messick, of the Chestnut Street church, Louisville, Kentucky, containing $50, from Mrs. Rosanna Graham, both for the Mexican mission. These amounts, thus voluntarily contributed, without direct solicitation, I accept as the sign of good things to come. And I will now say that I would not object to receiving between this and the first of May a sufficient amount to meet the expenses of the Mexican mission for this year—only some $450, as we have at present only one missionary employed. If the liberality of the church shall justify, we hope at the next session of the West Texas Conference to enlarge this work considerably. Suitable men begin to come into sight, and will be at hand when the means shall be furnished. I believe that God put it into the hearts of his children, at those two distant points, simultaneously, to make these remittances.

But I trust that none who make special contributions to the Mexican mission will subtract the amount from their contributions to the general fund. Let it be a special gift, the fruit of abounding liberality.

Those amounts I will keep until the annual meeting of the Board of Missions in May, at Nashville. If the Parent Board shall then assume the charge of this work, I will turn the money over to the treasurer. If they still leave it to be managed by the West Texas Conference, I will then at once remit what I may have in hand to the treasurer of the Board of Missions of that Conference, Rev. Buckner Harris, of San Antonio, Texas.

To Patrons of the Handsboro Democrat.

On Thursday night, the fifteenth instant, the Democrat printing office, with my books, files and private papers, was totally destroyed by fire, which has caused the temporary suspension of the paper.

I have commenced rebuilding, and making arrangements to resume publication in a week or so, when the Democrat will greet its patrons much improved and enlarged. The expense of rebuilding and buying new printing material will fall heavily on me at this time, therefore I earnestly request those who know themselves indebted, either for subscription, advertising or job work, to make immediate payment.

I have worked assiduously for nearly twenty years to build up a paper in this section, and I am proud to say the Democrat was fast growing in favor, and pecuniarily in a flourishing condition.

If my call to delinquents to send the amounts due meets with prompt response, I shall be able to start again without needlessly embarrassing myself in the purchase of material necessary to start a paper that will assist to build up the good country and its enterprises.

Temperance at the Antipodes.—A law is in force in New Zealand forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquor except on the written application of a third of the inhabitants of the district. It also holds the liquor-seller responsible for losses inflicted by his customers when intoxicated, and makes the adulteration of liquors a penal offense.

Aged and Faithful Servants Cared For.—The New York Conference of the Methodist Church has purchased a house and lot in Middletown, New York, to be occupied by worn-out preachers unable to provide for themselves.

THE FUTURE.

BY ELIZABETH C. SPENCER.

O wonderful, beauteous Future!
Violet and amber-hued,
Jeweled like Eastern princess,
Poet and priest hast thou stood
Since the earliest dawn
Ushered the day.
Luring us ever
With thy roundelay.

How do thy portals glisten!
How do thy pavements gleam!
How like a palace of beauty
Thy towers and minarets seem!
A city of refuge,
A place of retreat,
For sad and down-hearted,
Grief-laden feet.

Oh! jeweled and amber-hued Future!
Thy sunny and golden-walled realm
Shall the wand of the sable-robed Present
With clouds and with darkness overwhelm?
See! the white marble tells
Of past promise untrue;
Of the grief-bursting heart,
And the loved ones laid low.

No! Ever, thou star-crowned magician,
Continue thy wonderful sway:
Paint visions of beauty for mortals,
Chase sorrow and sadness away;
With Hope's rainbow span
The darkest of days;
Light even the tomb
With thy soft, mellow rays.

Divine Efficiency of the Church.

"For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds."—Second Corinthians x, 4.

When we look at what the church accomplished in the days of the apostles, and the apparent inefficiency of the means used, the truth is forced on our minds that a supernatural power co-operated with the means, rendering the weapons "mighty." St. Paul was convinced of this truth when he said: "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are."

The Founder of the Church and Author of the Christian religion made his appearance at a time when paganism was at its zenith, and in a manner that the wisdom of the world would have pronounced unfavorable for the spread of his religion. Little was it imagined, when he was cradled in a manger, or when he expired amid the ignominies of the cross, that he would subvert the religion of the empire, and become the God of the Roman, the Greek, and all the nations of the earth; that he, of his own power, would dethrone the long-worshiped deities of paganism, and fix his cross, the brightest and most glorious gem upon the diadems of the Cæsars. He had, however, said: "If I be lifted up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me." The prophet Isaiah fully understood in what light the world would look upon him—as having "no form nor comeliness," "no beauty that we should desire him," "despised and rejected of men," "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." What attraction, then, could the wisdom of the world discover in the mangled body of a crucified Jesus—him who "made his grave with the wicked." This, then, is the man who was to draw all men unto him; the man who, by his own almighty power, cast down the proud fabric of idolatry, and erected on its ruins the altars of his own divinity; the man for whose name martyrs laid down their lives. True, when this man hung upon the cross, scenes transpired well calculated to impress upon the mind of beholders that he was more than man; while the darkening of the sun, the quaking of the earth, the rending of the rock and the coming forth of the sleeping dead all proclaimed that he was not only a man, but God. There was one circumstance, however, that seemed to neutralize the effect produced by this confusion of nature. A portion of his language did not seem to be that of God. When spent with suffering, and apparently despondent at the cruelty and ingratitude of his people, he exclaimed: "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me."

Again, the disciples whom he selected to be his companions and co-operators were not such men as the wisdom of the world would have selected for the propagation of a new religion. They were fishermen, accustomed to no other occupation, acquainted with no other science, than that of casting out and drawing in their nets. They were simple, uneducated men—men who adhered to their Master only so long as they had hope of temporal preferment, and then forsook him as soon as they apprehended danger. Even Peter, who had promised to die rather than forsake him, denied his Lord as soon as he was questioned by a female servant. Yet such were the men of whom Christ made choice for the subjugation of the whole world, and whom he commissioned to go forth and "teach all nations," and that, too, at a time when paganism was at its highest pitch, and learning and refinement far advanced. And then the manner in which he sent them forth. How apparently inefficient! Did they go out equipped in arms and invested with majesty? Did they lead on to the field of battle a host of warriors, against whom the legions of the earth could not stand? Did they go forth like the disciples of Mohammed, with the Koran in one hand and the sword in the other, awing the trembling caravans into subjection, and immolating with inexorable zeal all who dared to resist the prophet? No; their weapons were not carnal! When Peter drew his sword in defense of his Master he was told that "all who use the sword shall perish by the sword." He sent them out without gold or silver, without shoes, without a second coat, or a staff to lean upon. And then they were told that they would be hated for his name's sake, that they would be driven from city to city, that they would be persecuted, delivered up to the synagogues, cast into prison, and brought before kings and rulers, and all this because of the name of him whose gospel they were sent out to promulgate.

Is it possible, then, that such men, and under such circumstances—devoid of every accomplishment calculated to give to them even the appearance of plausibility—could become the teachers of all nations, and the instruments in the overthrow of the hosts of long-cherished pagan gods? Who will listen to their doctrine? What have they to recommend their person or their cause? The God whom they preach is crucified, and his cross is a scandle to the Jew, and a stumbling block to the Gentile. Yet they are commanded to point to Calvary, and proclaim that he who was crucified there is God, and that he who "believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Must not the Roman Senate have sneered at their design? Must not the Emperor have looked down from his throne with contempt upon their undertaking? What! do such men as these plan the entire subversion of idolatry? Will these fishermen enter into the domestic sanctuaries of families, into the shrines of the capital, into the temples of the city and the fanes of the groves? Will they throw down the wreathed statues of the Jupiters, the Minervas and the Apollos, and raise in their stead the ignominious cross of a Nazarean? Will they persuade Egypt to forsake her ancient and venerated deities, and worship him who bowed his head upon the cross and gave up the ghost? Will they turn the adoring eye of the Persian from the splendors of the sun, and fix it upon the gloom of Calvary? Yes; not by their own might or power, but by the power of the Most High, who was with them. Armed with the name of Jesus Christ and the panoply of heaven, they were able to rout the combined powers of darkness, and make the cross of their Master the joy, the pride, the solace and the hope of the world.

It must, therefore, be manifest that the efficiency of the church depends upon a divine agency, and that the wonderful change wrought—from paganism to Christianity—in the days of the apostles was by divine power. The eye and finger of God was there—the God of wisdom, the God of power, the God of mercy, the God of light was there.

PREACHING.

MR. EDITOR: Some people, and some preachers too, it is to be feared, mistake the true end and aim of preaching. Paul speaks of some hearers who have "itching ears," who are "turned from the truth unto fables." Such hearers seem to forget that the great end of preaching is to save souls and glorify God. They seem to look upon a sermon pretty much as they do upon a lecture on some scientific subject, or upon an oration on some anniversary occasion. Consequently they are not satisfied with the preaching of the gospel in a plain, earnest, pointed, heart-searching manner. They want the preacher to "prophesy smooth things;" to tell them pretty things in a pretty way; to entertain them with beautiful imagery and elegantly-woven garlands of rhetorical flowers, or to hold them spell-bound with his overwhelming eloquence. They forget that mere pictures of flowers are not fragrant, that pictures of fire do not burn, and that the painted resemblance of bread does not satisfy hunger. And it is to be feared that too many who profess to be called of God to preach the gospel, to preach "Christ and him crucified," not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," forget, to some extent, the high and holy and fearfully responsible work committed to their charge, and yield to this morbid and unhealthy craving of their hearers.

Now, there can be no objection to beauty of style and of language in preaching; but it should not be a studied, artificial beauty, but natural and spontaneous, like that of the blooming flower, or the sparkling dew-drop as it mirrors forth the myriad stars of the firmament above, or like the genial sunshine as it emanates in brightness and glory, without effort, from the great luminary of day. Let it be that beauty which is inherent in all gospel truth, and then it matters not how much there is of it—the more the better. There is such an inherent beauty in the gospel, and it is infinitely superior to the glitter and tinsel of mere human eloquence. It is true that the perception of this beauty by the hearer depends very much upon the manner in which it is presented by the preacher. He should not, therefore, be indifferent with regard to his style and manner. He should not ignore as unimportant the assistance afforded by science, literature, arts, the rules of logic and rhetoric, and the best models of eloquence, but should avail himself of them to the utmost, should cultivate his mind to the highest possible degree, should gather up knowledge from every source, should bring heaven and earth under contribution, and compel the very elements to aid him in the grand and glorious work of so presenting the truths of the gospel as that all who hear may fall in love therewith, and be prevailed upon to embrace them, and allow them so to pervade and permeate and possess their entire being that heart and life may be molded and fashioned like unto the heart and life of the blessed Jesus.

When we, as preachers and as hearers, shall come to recognize fully the truth that the "gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," and that it is the great means ordained by God for the salvation of the world, then, and not till then, will we preach and hear as we ought. Then only will the "word have free course and be glorified." True, the gospel has had success, and is still having success—in many places glorious success; but all must admit that its success ought to be a hundred-fold more than it is, considering the saving power it claims to possess, and the fact that the greater part of the world is still shrouded in heathen darkness.

May God open our eyes, show us our responsibilities, quicken our energies, and enable us to preach and hear as for eternity.

REPLY TO BISHOP PIERCE.

Last week we published Bishop Pierce's views. That both sides may have a fair hearing, we publish the following rejoinder from Bishop McTyeire, which we find in the Nashville Christian Advocate:

With the highest admiration for Bishop Pierce, personally and officially, I must venture a few remarks on his letter—it is so remarkable.

1. More than one of our Bishops have written on a subject that is just now engaging the attention of the church—an institution for the training of our young preachers; and Bishop Pierce is the first to present it in a controversial aspect.

2. Besides his own name, which is a tower of strength, he makes up a powerful coalition against the proposed Central University. First, he addresses himself ad collegium; calls over the various colleges by name, and touches and tickles them all around; tells them they are to be "ignored," "eclipsed," "degraded," "disparaged," "disabled;" and he alarms their patrons and "sons." Next, he turns ad populum: the means of the people are to be "absorbed"—"foraged" on—"levied" upon. But the master-stroke is ad clerum. What can exceed the rallying power of these sentences of his letter, found all in a cluster?—

"The world is not advancing so fast as some dream. The ministry, as a class, are abreast with it. Within my day the preachers have stopped pari passu with society. I am not ashamed of my brethren."

The subtle force of the last sentence lies in the implication that it is to be read backward in connection with the friends of theological education. Of course the "brethren" will feel pleased with themselves after that, and will tie on to the eminent person who stands ready to take their part. Now, that three powerful elements are arrayed, or attempted to be arrayed, in hostility, let the "pet scheme" and its friends take care, for they are in peril!

3. The "Bishops are divided," we are informed. Sorry for it. The unity of our general superintendency is one of the things we glory in. The venerable Bishop Andrew, and all his colleagues, (except Bishops Soule and Pierce, who were absent,) committed themselves squarely to the policy of a theological institute in their address to the General Conference of 1866; and they are not men to go back on their record. That General Conference did the same thing; but in view of the prostrate condition of the country, biblical schools were accepted in connection with existing colleges, as a temporary expedient. It was generally understood, from himself, that Bishop Andrew was anxious to renew his testimony in the episcopal address of 1870. The present senior Bishop presided at the Memphis Convention; and the opinions of his junior colleagues are pretty well known. On this subject, therefore, Bishop Pierce is in a small minority, if any minority can be small that claims him.

4. The bane of our educational projects, heretofore, has been the want of concentration. Wise and practical laymen have rebuked us for this, not only in respectful remonstrance, but by withholding their means. The Memphis Convention, it was hoped, had at least taken away this reproach. There were eight Annual Conferences, representing a membership of one hundred and forty thousand, and over five hundred traveling, and over one thousand local preachers. At last a combination was effected, adequate to the case. It was matter of congratulation, for men began to think it impossible to utilize the connectional genius of Methodism for the benefit of its higher education. But our honored Bishop views the combination with displeasure, and proceeds to disperse it—let this Conference go here, and that go there; let these draw off to themselves, and those to themselves. The Arkansas brethren are advised to build a college, and so the Tennessee.

5. This advice is the more strange because, as president of the board, the Bishop has known the embarrassments of Emory College. With agents abroad, and various appeals, how hard for that noble institution to live! The Bishop's last resort was an ingenious running endowment; but with all his influence and eloquent writing, he never could get a meeting of the endowers. The two Georgia Conferences, rich, populous, strong, are pledged to the support of Emory. And yet he would have the Arkansas Methodists, whose united membership does not equal that of either of the Georgia Conferences, and whose settlements are distant and new—he would have them add another weak and starving college to a list already too long!

6. The Bishop is a wise man; and we would like to do what he tells us, but the Conferences concerned will find difficulty in exactly understanding what he would have them do. He says:

"To the original proposition, as submitted to the Tennessee Conference, I had no special objection. As I understood it, the project was to unite the Tennessee, Memphis, the North Mississippi and North Alabama Conferences in an institution, (a University,) which should represent themselves—meet their local wants, and, of course, be open for general patronage. Leaving out the theological school, this scheme might work—would and ought to find favor in those boundaries."

That is plain. Further on he says:

"Let the four Conferences named above stick to their programme. If they can harmonize on a common enterprise—well. We will all say amen."

And a little further on he gives another, and what he thinks "the better policy in this matter:"

"Let Tennessee and Memphis unite and build them a college. They need it; they are able; they ought not to forage on their neighbors. The two Mississippi Conferences ought to rally, with Louisiana, on Centenary; North Alabama, with Alabama, on the University at Greensboro. The three Conferences in Arkansas should combine and locate an institution of their own at Batesville, or Fayetteville, or at some point along the mountain-range between. These are my notions."

It is well that they are "notions" only, for if they were directions, the brethren would be puzzled. I humbly submit, before any man offers to break up a settled scheme, that he ought to have a definite one of his own.

7. We infer from the Bishop's letter that he will have nothing to do with locating the "Central University," though respectfully requested by the representatives of eight Annual Conferences; but, without being requested by anybody, he locates a college for Arkansas.

8. Speaking of the "great University," he says: "The fact is, a very small portion of our membership know or care anything about it—very few of the Conferences can be committed to it." Again—"Some few among us desire a theological school for the training of young preachers." And again—"Our people are afraid of it—do not wish it at all. The great body of the preachers are against it." One greatly marvels that the majority of our Bishops do so misrepresent the sentiments of the church. Bishop Pierce must have seen how the mind and heart of people and preachers respond to the plan outlined by the Memphis Convention, for subsequently in his letter he complains—"The very rapid development of the idea in a little resolution, at Lebanon, last October, awakens my apprehension of the whole scheme. It grows too fast." Query—How can a thing grow so fast that has but few friends?

9. Upon the declaration that people and preachers are opposed to a theological institute, the Bishop proceeds: "Now, under these circumstances, is it to be grafted upon our economy, nolens volens, under the prestige and patronage of a great popular idea—the education of the people by the church? Heaven forbid!" It seems to me the volens principle has been conspicuous in every step of this movement. Nine Annual Conferences appointed delegates to the convention. Bishop Pierce presided over three of them, and if any were forced into the thing, he should have protected them. No corporator was appointed in the bounds of any Conference that had not appointed delegates; and the charter is to allow a representation to any Conference that may hereafter choose to co-operate. The feelings and susceptibilities of others have been delicately regarded throughout. Antagonisms and jealousies have been eschewed; let the responsibility of awakening them rest elsewhere. To assume that, because the last General Conference declined to order, create or establish a theological institute, therefore "spontaneous action," as Bishop Doggett calls it, is unlawful, is a non sequitur. I yield to no Methodist in loyalty to the General Conference; but I can see many reasons why that august synod should decline doing a thing for the whole church, which is yet open to individual enterprise. If anybody anywhere, pleased with the compass and plan of the proposed University, with its theological school, should elect to contribute it, would Bishop Pierce forbid him, or turn his contribution into another channel, nolens volens?

10. The attempt to concentrate men and means upon an institution of higher grade and larger patronage and facilities than any yet realized by the church, the Bishop characterizes as "unwise" and "ungenerous;" it would eclipse and disparage the excellent and useful institutions we already have. As to the unwisdom of trying to improve upon ourselves—let that go; but the imputation of "ungenerous" touches a tender part. Pray, is it ungenerous for one preacher to excel another in preaching? If it is, then Bishop Pierce is one of the most ungenerous men in the world.

11. He tells us, "God will call all the educated men he wants;" and before he concludes says: "Let us keep to our rules of study and examination. I cannot reconcile these positions.

12. "The itinerant system, wisely worked, is our school. There is none like it. I like Samuel better than Saul." We agree with the Bishop in that sentiment; but beyond the alliteration, I cannot see the point in introducing Samuel and Saul. Some writers have made a strained use of those names in favor of presbytery against episcopacy, but this is the first time I ever saw that argument against ministerial education. Yes, give me Samuel all the time. He traveled a circuit, annually, from Ramah to Bethel, and Gilgal and Mizpeh—he was a model prophet and judge and circuit-rider all the days of his long life; and no wonder, for the Lord called him, and he was put to school very early, and trained for his life-work in the best institution his age and country afforded. It is thought by some that Samuel founded a "school of the prophets," and was the first president of a theological institution. As for Saul, he entered the scene at mid-age, as undisciplined as one of his father's asses; though he had good intentions and an honest zeal, it was without knowledge; tall as he was by nature, he made but a sorry figure in his high office, and utterly broke down under its responsibilities.

13. The Bishop begins by assuring us that he is "not disposed to dogmatize;" and I was going to end by saying the same of myself, but I suspect that I have misapprehended the meaning of that word.

14. While we are toiling up the hill together—moving on the cause of Christian education against prejudice, selfishness, covetousness and indifference, led by good and great men, among whom Bishop Pierce is conspicuous, he hits back at ministerial education in these final words: "And if, as we go, the oxen should stumble, and the ark should shake, Uzzah had better keep his hands off."

Just so, dear Bishop; but people may differ as to who is acting the part of Uzzah.

PRESERVE your conscience always soft and sensitive. If but one sin force its way into that tender part of the soul and is suffered to dwell there, the road is paved for a thousand iniquities.

ON EARTH we have nothing to do with success or with results, but only being true to God and for God; for it is sincerity and not success which is the sweet savor before God.—Robertson.

THE GOOD OLD BIBLE.

A Virginia banker, who was the chairman of an infidel club, was once traveling through Kentucky, having with him bank bills to the amount of $26,000. When he came to a lonely forest, where robberies and murders were said to be frequent, he was soon lost, through riding the wrong road. The darkness of the night came quickly over him, and how to escape from the threatening danger he knew not. In his alarm he espied at a distance a dim light, and urging his horse onward, he at length came to a wretched-looking cabin. He knocked; the door was opened by a woman, who said her husband was out hunting, but would soon return, and she was sure he would cheerfully give him shelter for the night. The gentleman put up his horse and entered the cabin, but with feelings that can better be imagined than described. Here he was with a large sum of money perhaps in the house of a robber whose name was a terror to the country.

In a short time the man of the house returned. He had on a deer-skin shirt, a bear-skin cap, and seemed much fatigued and in no talking mood. All this boded the infidel no good. He felt for his pistols in his pockets, and placed them so as to be ready for instant use. The man asked the traveler to retire to bed, but he determined to sell his life as dearly as he could. His fears grew into a perfect agony. What was to be done?

At length the backwoodsman arose, and, reaching to a wooden shelf, took down an old book, and said:

"Well, stranger, if you won't go to bed I will; but it is always my custom to read a chapter of the Holy Scriptures before I go to bed."

What a change did these words produce? Adam was removed from this skeptic's mind. Though avowing himself an infidel, he had more confidence in the Bible. He felt safe. He felt that a man who kept a Bible in his house, and bent his knees in prayer, was no murderer or robber. He listened to the good man, and slept as calmly in that cabin as he did under his father's roof. From that night he ceased to revile the good old Bible. He became a sincere Christian, and often related the story of his eventful journey to prove the folly of infidelity.

NOTHING REMAINS AT REST.

It is a fallacy to suppose that there is any such thing as rest to matter. There is not a particle in the universe which is not on the move, nor a drop of fluid on the globe that is perfectly quiescent, nor a fiber in the vegetable kingdom in a state of inactivity. In animal bodies, from monads to the complicated organism of man, every part and parcel, even in the solids, are incessantly moving among themselves, and their component elements never cease to act in accordance with that universal law till death stops the machinery. Even then a new series of movements commences at that culminating point. Chemical dissolution of organic structures is but a liberation of molecules, the aggregation of which was necessary for a corporeal beginning and subsequent growth; and they then disperse to enter into new relations and new forms, and thus one never-ending circle of activity characterizes the material universe.

Death is a dissolution of the union that existed for a limited period of what is called life with organized matter. How that union commenced is as much of a divine mystery as their separation. They are distinct in nature and character, although one cannot manifest itself without the brain and nerves of the other.

Astronomy reveals the astounding intelligence that there are no fixed or stationary bodies in the unsurveyed regions of celestial space. Even the fixed stars, as they were once considered, permanent landmarks in the heavens, are coursing with undefined rapidity in the train of countless globes of shining glory, on a circuit too distant to be followed even by human imagination in the boundless realms only known to that God who controls the mighty whole.

Everything, therefore, is moving. When motion ceases there will be a wreck of worlds and a crash of an entire universe. Life is motion; inertia, to our finite minds, is death. Nature, however, neither modifies nor repeals a law, and consequently those now in force will operate with unerring certainty through the endless cycles of eternity.

BISHOP STROSSMAYER has not submitted to the Vatican. Dr. Dollinger has commenced at Munich a series of lectures on the Union of the Churches. Profs. Hilgers, Knoodt, Renoch and Langen, of Bonn, have received an ultimatum from the Archbishop of Cologne, requiring them, on pain of excommunication, to subscribe to the dogma of infallibility.

HEADING UP THE BAY.

A REVERIE OF THE CHESAPEAKE.

How oft I think of other days,
When 'neath the sun's declining rays,
Or at the morning gray,
I paced the deck as nearer drew
The city's distant spires in view,
When heading up the bay!

O happy waves! how well of yore
I scanned your course from shore to shore,
Where storied precincts lay;
The "Light"—the "Point"—the Islands green,
Beyond the water's dazzling sheen,
While heading up the bay!

With pleasant thoughts of friends to meet,
And scenes that fill the busy street,
The heart was light and gay;
Yet turned to treasures left behind
The earnest longings of the mind;
While heading up the bay.

Alas! how many here we mark,
As wretched as some driven bark,
From virtue's path astray;
Who need, like ships, the Pilot's hand,
To safely clear the rock or strand
While heading up the bay.

Ah! such is all our life below,
Like vessels trail that come and go,
And have no certain stay;
Thro' storm and shine, from morn to eve,
Some port to gain—some shore to leave—
Still heading up the bay.

O! blest are they of humble heart,
Who study well the sacred chart,
That guides the soul away;
Who heed the signs in earth or sky,
That love divine hath set on high,
For heading up the bay.

See, where the Golden City stands,
With all its bright immortal bands,
Along the crystal way!
Her glory on the distant hills
With hope the patient spirit fills,
While heading up the bay.

Help me, O Lord! my voyage to make,
And bearings well for Heaven to take;
Thro' guiding Grace, I pray;
Till gently fades the glowing West,
And calmly sinks the heart to rest,
From heading up the bay!

WHAT TO DO WITH OUR BOYS.

BY JAMES LEONARD CORNING.

I know no more melancholy sight than that of a man who has broken down hopelessly as a merchant, and does not know how to turn his hand to anything else than the activities which have rewarded all his hopes and toils with disaster. Every large city teems with this class of unfortunates. Now and then a bank or an insurance company is created to make a place for them, just as benevolent societies seem to be foreordained from all eternity for the purpose of feeding a lot of cast-off preachers in the capacity of agents and secretaries. Probably nine-tenths of the large mercantile houses in every great city have each one or more clerks who were formerly proprietors in business. Now and then one of these poor unfortunates hangs himself; a serious matter, surely, if he had not been almost hung before! What thousands of broken-down merchants, lapsing, in the merciless vicissitudes of trade, to the function of underlings, would thank heaven if they knew how to peg shoes or manufacture tinware. As the chances of mercantile adventure now stand, a man who can peg shoes on his own last or make pails and muffin-rings on his own bench is on much better terms with Fortune and the Fates than the man who learns to barter behind a counter, with the probability of never doing so for himself, but forever more for somebody else. Well-to-do merchants do not generally wish their boys to learn trades, and yet an average boy will hardly ever approach so near kingliness as when he becomes master of a handicraft. A merchant's fortune is in the winds; a mechanic's is in his fingers. And I have now suggested the central principle of parental obligation as regards the future thrift of their sons, which is to give them some sort of knowledge which shall lift them above the vicissitudes and caprices of fortune. I would teach my boy to do something for the world, whether to make a barrel or build a railroad, which the world needs and must pay for. As regards earthly considerations, that is the best and most indestructible inheritance which I can bequeath to him.

But for my own boys my ambition would go further, and combine thrift with culture. If I had a dozen sons, I would, if possible, educate every one of them in some department of what may be called headcraft, in distinction from handicraft. I would, if possible, make every one a master in some branch of literature or science which makes a man personally superior and intellectually rich, and which the world will pay well for. Better science than literature, on a general comparison; for, as regards the earthly compensations of literature, they need to be backed in nearly every individual case with a hundred thousand dollars salted down in five-twenties. Nevertheless, I would rather be able to teach the people through the press, on a very moderate income, than be a merchant's clerk with gray hairs—a thousand to one.

But, after all, science is the thing to give a boy. Next to religion, this is what the world wants most, and what it has got to pay for. Let me instance, for thoughtful fathers of sons, a few examples. Let us begin with dear old Mother Earth, where everything starts which has to do with solid thrift.

Chemistry has changed agriculture from a blundering empiricism into a noble science. If men only knew how, they would double the produce of their farms. Two years of training in practical science would make your boy the most intelligent and skillful agriculturist to be found in his native country. With a quarter of a section of government land, purchased for a song, and all the laws of Nature at his fingers' ends, I would like to know if a man is not considerably more like a king than a hoary merchant's clerk, who knows nothing but barter and sale, and is predestinated from all eternity to die an underling.

Again, two years of thorough training supplementing the school routine will enable your boy to draw an air-line from New York to San Francisco. Only let him once show that he can do this thing, if need be, and, if he has an average amount of enterprise, he need never lack for remunerative employment. Commerce may have its ups and downs; but the railroads have got to be built, and the men of science have got to be paid to build them. Teach your boy to handle the chain and the theodolite, to plan a bridge, to bore a tunnel, and I should like to see the Fates try to starve him to death.

Again, in the bowels of the earth, waiting for skilled hands to bring them to birth, are the substance of wealth, and the coin which represents this. Mining hitherto, above all industries, has been empiric and conjectural as to its results. But science is changing all this; and in another generation a man, by geological and chemical lights, together with mechanical appliance, will take a bee-line to a bed of gold or copper or iron, as to-day the mariner takes a straight path from New York to Liverpool by the guidance of the meridian. Well, then, two or three years' training will teach your boy to sink a shaft and take metal from ore in the most expeditious and economical manner. Let him show that he is a master in these things, and he will not need a hundred thousand dollars capital to put him into business. The people who have got capital will be glad enough to put their money up to buy his brains.

But of all sciences for a boy (and a girl, too, for that matter) I like best the healing art; for this, besides paying, implies culture and also philanthropy. Teach your boy to heal the sick, and tell him to heal the poor for nothing, or next to nothing; but if the rich want his receipes, make them pay roundly for it. Do you say the world is full of doctors? I own it, if you put all the quacks in the category; but, if I were a first-class physician, with careful training in the best schools and hospitals in the world, I would set myself down in a nest of M. Ds. five hundred to the square acre, and expect a paying business in due time.

Only the other day I read in the paper that my old-time college friend, Dr. Agnew, received a fee of a thousand dollars for removing a cataract. Who shall say that brains do not pay? Albeit, while my friend was in training with the scalpel, I was hard at work trying to get cataracts off from blind souls, with not quite so large pecuniary returns!—Independent.

SEEK GOD NOW.

It is hard to believe that we have lived as long as we have. The child thinks the old man's life an age; but the old man looks back on it as a hand-breadth. Yet we cannot bring ourselves to realize that it will soon be over. The moment given us is to last forever. But it was the same with the generations that have lived before us. Yet where are the busy crowds that filled the world before we were born? They had their days filled with as many cares and occupations as ours have. Go back no farther than the beginning of this century. Where are our countrymen and countrywomen of that day? Their life was warm in them once. Some were caring for their young families then as some are now; some marrying; some following the past generation to the grave. The plowman whistled as he cut the furrow; the sailor heaved the anchor, or dropped it, to his rough "Yo ho!" the smith was busy at his forge, and wiped his brows, as he rested the hammer on his anvil and gossiped with the neighbors on the latest news. They met at markets and churches, and on the exchange. The fairs had their buyers and sellers, and their gaping crowds to see the clowns and the giants. Men were of all kinds then as now. Here you had an honest fellow that would put himself about to serve you; yonder one who had no thought but to cozzen you. They were feasting in the great man's house, and watering a crust with tears in many a poor widow's garret; all that the poor orphans had among them. Where are they all now? Not one of them, or hardly one, but is a pale ghost, gone forever from the light of the sun! Their memory has long ago faded from among men, and no one knows that ever they existed. They are faded and gone like the flowers that once pleased them in the sweet summer fields and gardens of long ago. O ye sons of men, how all the past is swallowed up by the black night! What think ye of yourselves delaying to make ready for the inevitable?

You have something to say for yourself, have you? But what if it be not admitted where alone it would be of value? Besides, in such a case, can excuses be reasonable? It is no common risk. You can't afford to be lost. You can live only once, and after that must go to the dead and have no more any portion forever in anything that is done under the sun. Then, after death, the judgment. No wonder your cheek blanches. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. You would shrink from letting your nearest friend know all your past life; but all things are naked and open to the eyes of him with whom we have to do. He is greater than our hearts, and knoweth all things. Texts sound at times like storm bells, deep and terrible, in your conscience—"The worm that never dies"—"Outer darkness"—"Depart, ye cursed." Oh, brother! no excuse, pray, no excuse. It is a matter of eternal life or death with thee.

There are two sides to this matter of delay. Even if it were safe, is it manly or honorable? To try to get heaven for the easy price of a death-bed repentance is not very gracious. To make peace with God when you are driven to it, for your own sake, not his; to accept heaven as a necessity, when you can do no better—is rather making use of God for your own interest than honoring him with your heart. Selfish repentance is no repentance. It is regret, not for your sins, but for their punishment. It is superstition, not religion; trust in a rite, part from practice; making a charm of Christianity to keep away the devil; a monk's gown put round you when dying to secure salvation. God cannot let himself be mocked. He requires sincerity, as you yourselves do. To hide behind a mask of seriousness, when your heart is the same as ever, is a rash folly with the Eternal.

But do you know you will be in the mood to think hereafter, if you refuse to do so now? We can only feel once. Impressions can never be renewed in their first freshness.—Geike.

PROF. HUXLEY'S RELIGION.

Prof. Huxley tells us that the necessity of a belief in a personal God, in order to a religion worthy of the name, "is a matter of opinion!" Of course, the word may be employed in some unusual sense. I recollect reading of a certain Emersonian who, having accompanied his wife to see Fanny Elsler dance, and being charmed, remarked to her, during the performance: "Margaret, this is poetry." To which his wife replied: "No, Paul, it is religion!" Of such religion I will ingly make a present to Prof. Huxley. But, apart from such bizarre employments of the word, I firmly adhere to my proposition. I know that Buddhism is sometimes asserted to be atheistic; but the conception of a power or principle apportioning after death rewards and punishments according to a standard of virtue necessarily involves the existence of an entity, which, as being most powerful, intelligent and good, is virtually and logically a personal God, whatever be the name habitually applied to it.

I do not know what precise meaning Prof. Huxley would give to the word religion. He speaks of "worship, 'for the most part of the silent sort,' at the altar of the Unknown and the Unknowable;" but he has not (as far as I recollect) explained to us as yet the full and exact nature and tenets of that religion the ritual of which is thus hinted at. Mr. Darwin's conception of religion is, however, sufficiently definite. He tells us that it consists "of love, complete submission to an exalted and mysterious superior, a strong sense of dependence, fear, reverence, gratitude, hope for the future, and perhaps other elements."

Let us apply this to the Unknown and the Unknowable. "Love" for that of which we can by no possibility know anything whatever, and to which we may as reasonably attribute hideousness and all vileness as beauty and goodness! "Dependence" on that of which treachery and mendacity may be as much characteristics as are faithfulness and truth! "Reverence" for an entity, whose qualities, if any, may resemble as much all we despise as all we esteem, and which, for all we know, may be indebted to our faculties for any recognition of its existence at all! "Gratitude" to that which we have not the faintest reason to suppose ever willingly did anything for us, or ever will! "Hope" in what we have no right whatever to believe may not, with equal justice, be a legitimate cause for despair as pitiless, inexorable and unfeeling, if capable of any sort of intelligence whatever!

This is no exaggeration. Every word here put down is strictly accurate; for, if that which underlies all things is to us the unknowable, then there can be no reason to predicate of it any one character than its opposite. If, on the other hand, we have any reason to predicate goodness rather than malice, nobility rather than vileness, then let preachers of the unknowable abandon their unmeaning jargon; for it is no longer with the unknowable we have to deal, and we are plunged at once into a whole world of as distinctly dogmatic theology as can be conceived—a theology the dogmas of which are profoundly mysterious, while they are even more trying, and at the same time more illuminating, to the reason than any others of the whole catena which logically follow.—St. George Mivart, in the Contemporary Review.

"NO MONKEY, NO PHOTOGRAPH."

Johnny, the darling of the house, was going to have his likeness taken. A picture of Johnny on his third birthday was demanded by friends and neighbors all around us; and so Johnny was to stand with his dog Fan for a picture that was to delight all hearts.

Mother and aunties took careful counsel together about his dress; as for Fan, all she needed was a new collar, and that having been purchased, and Johnny daintily arrayed, three of them escorted the twain to the artist's, with much pride and satisfaction. Punctual to his appointment, the artist was waiting for Johnny, and he and Fan were placed in position, with all the cautions that we usually give to children who are about to stand for their photographs.

As the artist was preparing to take his last survey, before removing the cloth for the picture, he said, with a significant glance at his escort, which did not escape our watchful little Johnny: "Look steadily at this spot on the wall, and a monkey will come out."

Next to dogs Johnny delights in monkeys; his black eyes sparkled and fairly danced as he waited eagerly, while the artist took another careful and satisfied survey. A picture of Johnny, as he looked then, would have been a priceless treasure.

When all was ready at last, and mother and aunties hoped that Johnny would neither move nor tire and just as the artist was about to uncover the camera, Johnny asked, in his decided way: "Where's the monkey?—want to see the monkey."

"Yes, yes," said the astonished artist, who had promised hundreds of children a sight of that monkey, and never been called upon to produce it before; "by and by you shall see the monkey."

"But," insisted Johnny, "want to see monkey first; Johnny did look, monkey didn't come."

The artist hesitated; Johnny looked from one to another of the astonished group in his keen, searching way; in an instant he seemed to realize that the artist had been trying to deceive him; and then, with an air of determination that made mother and aunts tremble for the success of the picture, Johnny sat down upon the floor, beside Fan, put his arms around her neck, and said: "I tell you what it is, Fan, no monkey, no photograph;" and Johnny kept his word.

Twenty times at least, during the following hour, did mother and aunts and artist try to persuade Johnny to resume his position; but Johnny was firm; he insisted upon seeing the monkey first, and as there was no monkey to show him, he came off conqueror.

Three sadder and wiser women escorted Johnny sorrowfully home; but not one of them could speak a word of reproof to Johnny, for in their hearts they admired and respected the spirit he had shown.

When Johnny's grandma heard the story, she said, in her quiet way: "That shows the folly of trying to deceive children; Johnny has learned his first lesson in falsehood to-day. I hope this may prove a lesson for you all;" and it was; one they will never forget.—Christian Union.

A NATIVE PASTOR at Madras, connected with the Scotch Presbyterian Church, in a recent letter to a friend of missions, gives a hopeful view of changes coming over India. He observes a wide difference between the present generation and their fathers. There is an eagerness to be rid of their idols; a readiness to accept the truth that God is one; a gaining conviction that Christianity is from heaven; and an impatience of the shackles of caste, and every superstitious rite. This transition state is one of great importance.

IF BURNS were living now he would tell the man that wants to see himself as others see him, to run for office.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

GOOD NEWS FROM JAPAN.—Just now, while the Japanese embassadors are visiting Washington, and receiving on all sides, from the President and from the American people, the most cordial greetings, it is especially gratifying to hear of the growth of Protestant religious effort in Japan. Our latest advices state that in Yokohama steps are being taken to organize a Union Christian Church.

For the first time in Rome the week of prayer was observed, from January 8 to 13. Prayer meetings, held in various parts of the city, were conducted by Italian evangelists and attended by converted Romans. A stranger fact still, and equally gratifying, is that at the present time a Bible stand of a colporteur, with its books displayed for sale and rapidly sold, is located in the Forum of Trajan.

THE Committee of Evangelization in the Waldensian Church proposes to all the churches with which it is connected to hold special meetings for prayer, on the first Monday evening of each month, in behalf of its missions in Italy. During the month of April conferences of pastors and evangelists engaged in this work are to be held in Florence, for the purpose of devising the best means for the promotion of the gospel throughout that land.

REV. JAMES LEWIS, D. D., the excellent Scotch resident minister at Rome, Italy, died there January 29, of diphtheria. He has been pastor of the Free Church congregation there since 1865, and has endeared himself to many Americans, who will lament his death. He was the man on whom the order was served in 1867 to cease his ministry in Rome or he would be seized by the Inquisition. From that time he preached outside the walls.

A CHINESE MISSION has for some time been established at Melbourne, Australia, under the charge of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. A class of twenty Chinese residents has been formed, nearly all of whom give clear testimony of the converting power of the gospel. Preaching has been maintained so regularly on the Sabbath, and attended with so promising results, that the committee of the society has resolved to supply the Chinese evangelist and members of this church with a permanent edifice, at an estimated cost, for ground and building, of $1,000.

A LARGE Protestant church has recently been built and opened at Diarbekir, the chief city of Mesopotamia, on the Tigris, under the auspices of the American Mission. The native minister at Diarbekir, pastor Bojugian, who is much esteemed for his piety and talent, has gathered a large congregation for which the church has been erected. It is the largest Protestant church in Turkey, holding above two thousand. Many people from the neighboring towns attended the ceremony, feeling great interest in the event, which is one of bright promise in those regions of darkness and error.

THE veteran Bishop Gobat, of Jerusalem, has been engaged in missionary labor in the East nearly half a century. On the recent completion of a quarter of a century of his episcopate, Christian missionaries, friends and representatives of various evangelical societies at Jerusalem, presented to him a testimonial; and it is now proposed to raise in England a tribute in the form of a special fund for the support of the various schemes of education and evangelization under his care. There are doubtless many in this country who would desire to share in making this memorial. Contributions may be sent to the London Record.

THE New York Methodist Book Concern has assets estimated at $1,850,315.93, and liabilities amounting to $735,135.93. The capital of the Concern, November 30, 1871, was $1,055,179.57, an increase of $69,163.26 during the year. The Cincinnati Concern lost by the Chicago fire, as nearly as can be ascertained, $120,471.48, on which they have collected insurance to the date of exhibit to the amount of $18,250. They have unpaid insurance, $49,250, most of it in insolvent companies. The entire profits of their book, newspaper and periodical business were, for the New York Concern, $63,095.92, and for the Cincinnati Concern, $27,780.30.

CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS are about to be opened by Mrs. Parry, of Mount Lebanon, in the district of Hauran, more commonly known by its biblical name of Bashan, comprising the country between Damascus and Gilead, on the east of the Jordan. The inhabitants of this region are Druses and Greeks, both equally ignorant of the Scriptures. No Protestant evangelist has ever gone among them. Many of the sheiks are desirous of having schools established in their villages. One sheik of Sameidah offers a school room and lodging for the teacher. Others will, no doubt, do as much or even more as soon as educational advantages are seen. Such schools are the forerunners of the missionary of the gospel; for it has been found from experience in these parts of Syria that a school will be readily accepted where an evangelist would be driven away, and that after a school has been established a missionary can easily gain a hearing. If possible, the teacher should be a native evangelist. From the first, however, the Scriptures are to be faithfully and unreservedly taught in all the schools.

THE Congregational Quarterly is at hand, with statistics of the denomination for 1871. The following figures show the present strength of the Congregational churches, with the gains for the year: Pastors 936, gain 27; acting pastors 1,505, gain 67; ministers not engaged in pastoral work 906, a decrease of 22; foreign missionaries 105, gain 6; church members 312,054, gain 5,536; additions during the year by profession 13,271, less than the number added in 1870 by 230; baptisms during the year—adult 5,797, infant 5,262; membership of Sabbath schools 368,937, a gain of 7,472; charitable contributions, so far as reported, $1,150,814, gain $195,081. During the past ten years the gain of churches has been a little more than twenty-five per cent.; the net gain of ministers, not including foreign missionaries, about sixteen per cent.; the net gain of church members about twenty-two per cent.; the net gain of Sabbath schools almost fifty per cent. Something over $5,500,000 is given annually for parish expenses, according to a moderate estimate. The amount per member annually contributed for church expenses and charities is about $22. Much of this is given, of course, by persons not members of the churches.

TANDIL, a village in the Argentine Confederation, has lately been the scene of a fearful massacre. A man named Solares, who gave out that he was a messenger from God, and who professed to foretell future events and to cure diseases, established himself about fourteen miles from Tandil, and collected a large number of the half savage inhabitants about him, whose minds he inflamed with denunciations of Freemasons and foreigners. On New Year's morning Solares and fifty of the poor creatures whom he had attached to himself entered Tandil, before daybreak, and, shouting "Death to Masons! Death to foreigners! Kill and sack!" they went from street to street slaughtering many innocent persons. At length the citizens rallied, pursued and overtook the murderers, who had fled, and killed sixteen of them, besides capturing twenty-four, Solares among the number. The captives were lodged in the prison; but in the night shots were fired through holes made in the prison, and Solares fell dead. The newspapers of the country blame the priests for the teachings which led to the dreadful massacre. They assert that the Argentine clergy are the worst kind of bigots, and that it was their violent and habitual denunciation of Protestants which prepared the ignorant Gauchos to follow Solares on his murderous enterprise.

PORTUGAL.—While we hear much from Italy, Spain and Germany, little is said as to evangelical efforts in Portugal. Hence we turn with pleasure to an account in the Wesleyan Missionary Notices, of the labors of Rev. R. H. Moreton, at Oporto. A Methodist Church is organized there as a center of effort. There is among some much interest in the preaching, and also much opposition stimulated by the priests, which has been thus far quelled by the protection of the civil powers. Some cases of conversion are also reported. The people are acted on not only by preaching on Sunday and at funerals, but by Sabbath schools, and the distribution of tracts and Bibles. Excursions are also made into the surrounding country. Of this system of effort Mr. Moreton says: "By these means we are sending the influence out far and wide, so that Oporto is but a center, whose importance is by no means commensurate with the little gatherings that take place in it. It is beginning to leaven elsewhere. Only a few days ago (I now write on January 9) a priest, who has been here making inquiries of one of our members, an ex-servant of his, sent for a couple of Bibles, which were duly forwarded to him, with some suitable tracts. He is one of many who are quietly searching 'whether these things be so.' Several months ago a priest in good position left his parish for Lisbon, became a Spanish subject, joined the church (Episcopal) of Rev. Dr. Mora, married civilly, which was an additional blot of infamy in the eyes of the exasperated priestly party; and now the best paper in the kingdom refers in an exultant tone to the sermon preached by him at Lisbon, exposing the fallacies of the Church of Rome, and asserting the supreme authority of the Bible. I believe there are not a few who would like to do the same—I mean, adopt a purer faith—but lack the boldness, and perhaps the means."—Christian Union.

UPS AND DOWNS.---INS AND OUTS.

Not long ago an aged brother, relating his experience in love-feast, remarked: "I have had my ups and downs, but, thank God! never my ins and outs." A good distinction, as we thought, and well worth remembering. The Christian's path is rarely uniform and smooth. It has its lights and shades, times of exultant hope and triumph, and seasons of trial and depression. This is the testimony of saints in the Old Testament and in the New. David, Jeremiah and Paul exhibit these vicissitudes in the tenor of their religious career. Sometimes we find them on the top of the mountain, bathed in the sunshine, and enjoying the most serene and glorious prospects. At other times they are deep in the shadows of the valley, and battling with the clouds and storms of temptation. Peter speaks of believers being, for a season, "in heaviness through manifold temptations." Paul was "cast down, but not destroyed." Such is the common experience, and such will it ever be while subject to the assaults of Satan, and encompassed with the infirmities of the flesh.

We must, however, distinguish these periods of trial, and temporary distress and conflict, from apostasy and the loss of God's favor. They by no means imply sin and condemnation, nor are they to be confounded with a fickle and unstable profession. The ins and outs of a soul frequently lapsing into sin and departing from God, and as frequently repenting and returning, is quite another matter. To alternate between the church and the world, between God and mammon, and between a profession of godliness and a life of sinful indulgence, is a sad and humiliating confession which the sincere soul has seldom occasion to make. Ups and downs, but not ins and outs! Through discouragement and struggle, and amidst depression and warfare, the Christian holds fast to the promises, and keeps steadily on in the path of duty. With varying emotions, with different degrees of comfort and assurance, with fightings without and fears within, he is still faithful to Christ, and patiently runs the race that is set before him. He may, with shame and confusion of face, confess his weakness, and even sins of unbelief and omission, but he has never lost his hope altogether, nor found himself without God in the world. Like the mountain climber who aspires to reach the Alpine heights, where the grandest views are disclosed, the exemplary Christian, through perils and difficulties, rises from height to height, and steadily ascends to the glorious summit of holiness and love.

We have, then, two distinct types of character. The one most fickle and vacillating, of periodical flushes of diligence and zeal, of unstable purpose, and ever-changing performance. In and out, swinging between religion and irreligion, and vibrating between the counter attractions of earth and heaven. The other is the uniformly consistent Christian, the subject of a thousand conflicting emotions, wrestling with inward temptations, writhing under the buffetings of Satan, suffering, triumphing, mourning and rejoicing, but still holding firmly on his way. Ups and downs, but no ins and outs! The shield of faith is never surrendered, the path of duty is never abandoned. The ship is strained and racked by the gale, and rises and falls with the agitated billows, but she is always heading for the port. The way is rugged, and the opposition is formidable; but the racer presses along the mark for the prize. For such a type of experience let us aim—an experience which, with all its ups and downs, has never its ins and outs.

WHAT IS DOING FOR THE CAUSE OF MISSIONS?

This is one of the questions asked at every Quarterly Conference—four times a year. Too often the answer is, "Nothing as yet;" or its import is supposed to be met by the report of a single annual collection. In some instances the response contains the gratifying statement of monthly collections in the Sunday school. But does not the question suggest something more than stated collections, and mere financial results? Every congregation should be aiming at results in the line of church extension, planting and supporting Sunday schools, and occupying the waste places lying round about. Besides, something should be doing to inspire and keep up the missionary spirit. This underlies all effort, and unless it burns in the hearts of the people not much will be done. It requires much preaching, and a good deal of special praying, to keep the church up to any tolerable degree of zeal for the salvation of the world.

It is seldom that a missionary hymn is sung in the prayer meeting, and the subject of missions is not as distinctively and frequently brought forward in the pulpit as it should be. The duty of giving is only the last link in the process, and will take care of itself if the light and warmth of the spiritual life have been previously infused. Besides the money element, there must be believing prayer. The victory that overcometh the world is our faith. Of all the factors in the problem of the world's conversion, prayer is one of the greatest. "Thy kingdom come" stands in the forefront of the inspired petitions, and was put there of set purpose, that it might arrest our attention and claim our faith, before passing to matters of a more personal and local character. Do our class meeting experiences indicate concern on the part of individual Christians for the spread of the gospel? How much of wrestling and agonizing is there in secret for the salvation of the heathen? Very much is doing for missions where a spirit of earnest and prayerful longing is growing in the hearts of God's people, and where their responsibility is felt more and more.

To awaken this sort of interest is of paramount importance. Individuals are apt to be absorbed with their own spiritual needs and conflicts. Churches are almost wholly taken up with the improvements, comforts and attractions of their houses of worship, and with the building up of their local strength and influence. It should not be forgotten that the home work is a base of operations, while the grand objective point is the universal spread of the gospel. A church that does not realize this conception of its existence and mission is not truly Christian, nor can it be in a spiritually healthy and prosperous condition. Where the whole missionary life is exhibited in a single and meager collection once a year, and where the thought and interest are limited to an occasional and spasmodic effort, the cause is at a very low ebb. In answer to the question which comes up every quarter, to receive the same indifferent response, we should be glad to have a reply spread upon the record to the effect that the members are all talking about missions, that their prayers and exhortations are full of the subject, that many are seeking posts of usefulness in the waste places, and that a fervid zeal is glowing in all hearts for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. We should like to hear that the preaching has been largely leavened with this subject, and that men and women are inquiring what they can do for the conversion of the world, as earnestly as they once exclaimed: What must we do to be saved?

It is not altogether a question of money, but of faith, of love, of deep conviction and of spiritual power. Where are the young men who are pressed in spirit to enter the missionary field? Where is the irrepressible yearning after spiritual conquests, and for a speedy and overwhelming advance against the powers of darkness? We would have the searching inquiry, "What is doing for the cause of missions?" put in flaming letters upon the walls of every church, and indelibly stamped upon the conscience of every Christian. Much is doing altogether by the entire Christian world, and something by ourselves as a denomination; but little, however, in proportion to our means and opportunities. Let us make the matter more definite and personal. What is doing here in this pastoral charge? Let us come still closer. What is doing in my heart and with my hands for a perishing world?

QUESTIONS.

A steward inquires: 1. Have the Bishop and his Cabinet, during the session of a Conference, the right or authority to change or form new districts, circuits or stations, without consulting the official members of the same or obtaining their consent?

2. If the Bishop and Cabinet have this authority, has either the district or part of the district, a circuit or part of a circuit, the right to repudiate either the presiding elder or the preacher in charge, or to repudiate the claims of one and acknowledge the other?

In answer to the above: 1. The Bishop has authority to arrange the districts and appointments. In chapter iii, section 2 of the Discipline, among other duties of the Bishop are the following: "To see that the districts be formed according to his judgment; provided, that no district shall contain more than fourteen appointments. To unite two or more circuits, stations or missions together, for Quarterly Conference purposes, allowing the financial interests and pastoral duties of each to remain separate and independent; and to divide a circuit, station or mission into two or more, when he judges it necessary."

2. The answer to the first question is also an answer to the second. The Bishop forms the district according to his judgment, and the Quarterly Conference has no authority to change its boundaries or to choose what district it shall be in. Neither has a society or church in a circuit the right to determine to what circuit it shall be attached. The Bishop has already done this, and appointed the pastor, whom they are bound to receive. It is the duty of the steward of a circuit or station to fix the allowance of their preacher. The allowance of the presiding elder is made by the district stewards, and the amount to be raised by each charge is apportioned to it by them. Of the money raised for the support of the ministry, the presiding elder is entitled to his pro rata, or proportion upon the basis of this apportionment, as made by the district stewards. In this matter neither the Quarterly Conference nor the board of stewards have any disciplinary authority to discriminate or to repudiate. In case of conflict or difference in the adjustment, the reference is to the joint board of finance of the Annual Conference, as per Discipline, chapter ix, section 5: "The joint board shall decide all issues that may exist between the stewards and the presiding elder, or any of the preachers, in relation to salaries, and their decision shall be final."

CLERICAL CONFIDENCE MAN.

From the Canton Mail we learn that the pastor of our church at Canton, Mississippi, proves to be a first-class "confidence man." He professed to be a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, licensed in Toronto, Upper Canada, in 1866; removed to Rochester, New York, and relicensed in 1868, and yearly since; an intimate friend of Bishop Janes, and Rev. Andrew Longacre, of New York, from whom he had ample documents. He gave a long list of referees. Starting forth in October last, he attended several of our Annual Conferences, and was at last employed upon the Jackson district, at Canton. He sang divinely, preached admirably, conducted the Sunday school with rare tact. He threw himself fully upon the church from the first, having "lost father, mother, sister, two brothers, wife and child." He stood "a single trunk, every branch smitten off, and even the vines which cling to him blasted by the bolts of heaven." He had more tears than the prophet Jeremiah, for they came at command; great big fellows—no mere dew of sorrow. He wept freely over all his kin, which seemed proper enough, but mostly over a chest of very fine clothes, which were the relics of his dear wife. When these were being aired, every time he passed them his feelings gave way; so much so that the clothes were put back into the chest. He had a diamond pin of precious memory, which he wore on his necktie while preaching; and upon his two hats the crape was deep. Such devotion to the memory of a wife is rarely seen in widowers, and could not but be admired. His property was now nearly gone—an estate in North Carolina, and one in Missouri, was all that remained, excepting it might be something possible from the "Frazer branch" of his nearly extinct family. His opinions and theology were decidedly broad, and gave great satisfaction to those who had long waited for something wider than hide-bound orthodoxy. He did not believe in total depravity, but spoke often of the Gospel of Progress. A "social game of cards," the opera in its purity, and "square" dances were all quite possible to godliness.

He gave immense satisfaction to classes not before reached, and it is due to him to say that he succeeded in taking nearly everybody into his confidence. His Sunday school threatened all the others with extinction. The name to which this admirable and popular pastor answered was WILLIAM F. HORTON. Unfortunately his references all failed him, and the principal one, the Rev. Dr. Longacre, of the Central church, New York, pronounces his church letter and recommendation to be a base forgery, and the said Horton to be an "unmitigated scoundrel;" and, as troubles never come alone, about the same time notice was received that his wife had appeared in Dr. River's office, at Louisville, Kentucky, in search of her trunk of clothes, and her "wandering star." Whereupon the brother has been summarily dismissed, or, as he gave out, had received "a telegram which required his presence immediately in Scotland, to look after the remnant of his estates by the 'Frazer branch.'" Let us hope that he will reach his own Scotland, and never leave it more. Still, look out for him. He is five feet seven and a half inches high, slight build; hair, Scotch auburn; dresses very well, but has a constitutionally seedy look, weeps at will, and is the hero of many marvelous circumstances.

RESPONSE NO. 7.

MR. EDITOR: A letter from President C. G. Andrews says: "Our March exhibition passed off well. The boys did themselves credit, and the audiences were quite large—larger than at the last commencement.

"A distressing accident occurred on February 29, resulting in the death of a man and a boy, and the severely hurting of another man. Contrary to the instructions of Mr. White, the masons were putting up the courses of bricks which formed the projections, without at the same time tying them to the supports; expecting to do that after they had carried up the projecting courses. The mortar, being still wet, gave way, because of the weight of brick jutting over, precipitating several courses of brick down upon the scaffold, and throwing the whole to the ground.

"Sad as it was, I am thankful that none of our students were hurt, and also that it was the fresh work that gave way, and not the scaffold. Mr. White, the builder, was absent at the time. He is going right forward with the work, and says the center buildings will be closed in by April 1."

The president adds: "I start on a trip of agency next Tuesday." He goes to secure money and students. Our people are still dreaming over the past, though the education of their sons has now become a necessity. When rich they might afford to start them with or without mental training, but now they cannot afford to raise them in ignorance. I am thankful to God that there are some hearts more generous to the young than their own parents, and from one of these noble spirits I this day report another sum of $400.

J. C. KEENER.

EVANGELIZATION OF MEXICO.

A writer in the Interior speaks as follows of the open door in Mexico for missionary operations. The Methodist Church South ought to have missions in that country. The field lies nearest to us and naturally invites us to enter it.

RELIGION.—Great changes have taken place within the last few years in the religious life of the people. By a former article in the constitution, "The religion of the Mexican nation is and shall be perpetually the Roman Catholic. The nation protects it, and prohibits the exercise of any other whatsoever." In 1850 the property of the church in Mexico was estimated at $90,000,000. The annual revenue was $20,000,000.

With such a vast money-power the church was enabled to control for a long time both political and religious affairs. No part of this immense sum was expended in education, charity or any improvement of the great masses of the people. It was used to support the pageantry of an establishment and to maintain a pampered priesthood, whose influence was and is but a moral leprosy in society. But there are indications of a brighter chapter in their religious history. The government has thrown off the yoke of Rome, abolished the conventual system, established religious liberty, and confiscated all church property not used for worship.

A BETTER SEED SOWN.—A deep and truly religious awakening is in progress. The American and Foreign Christian Union, though not long in the field, have already set up a printing press, established a weekly religious journal, gathered fifty congregations, employed twenty-nine laborers, and circulated a hundred thousand pamphlets. Four converted Catholic priests are laboring with great zeal and success among their countrymen in the city of Mexico. The people hear them with great eagerness, and converts are rapidly increasing.

Disinterested and impartial American residents in the city of Mexico give assurance that the readiness of the people to receive evangelical truth is so remarkable as to render this one of the most promising fields of usefulness in the world. It is estimated that not less than one hundred and fifty Protestant congregations are to be found in different parts of the republic. In no country have so great results followed so small an outlay of effort.

REASONS WHY PROTESTANT MISSIONS SHOULD SPEEDILY BE ESTABLISHED IN MEXICO.—1. Its great promise. In further support of the facts above named, it may be said that by the downfall of the empire of Maximilian and the papal alliances of his usurped throne, a great reaction was produced in the public mind. Republican sentiment has opened the way for Protestant freedom of thought; and the long-continued disgust and loathing of corrupt systems of sacerdotal tyranny seek prompt relief in a free gospel. Difficulties will doubtless be interposed; the wily Jesuit will be met in every form of social and political intrigue; but this cannot avail to smother the truth while government protects liberty of thought.

2. The evangelization of Mexico is geographically, and therefore providentially, assigned to Protestants of the United States. No other evangelical nation is brought in contact with it. It lies upon our southwestern frontier as only a part of our own land. Whether it shall ever be identified with our republic or not, its moral and religious destiny must be essentially the same as ours. It will share a vital part in a common and elevated Christian character, or it will cling as a gangrened and corrupting excrescence, comminating poison and death. For our own country's sake we must enlighten Mexico.

3. The whole social, commercial and political thrift of Mexico depends on the establishment of free thought, enlightened patriotism and sound moral character, and these can only be gained by those same religious truths which have elevated our own and all other Christian nations. Revolutions will never cease in Mexico so long as popular ignorance and sacerdotal intrigue bear sway.

4. The purification of the papacy itself in Mexico demands the contact, not to say the healthful rivalry of Protestantism. If there are those who maintain that it is both useless and needless to attempt the conversion of Romanists in a country like this, still the case is different in Mexico and South America. Here truth and error exist side by side, and men may freely choose between them; and besides, in lands of religious freedom the papacy herself is on her good behavior. The moral debasement, the open and shameless vice of the priesthood of Mexico could not be tolerated here. The bigotry and tyranny which have so long degraded the Mexican church are simply impossible where the light of Protestantism shines. For these reasons, if for no other, evangelical light should be poured even into the darkest portions of Mexico, until even her own priesthood shall be shamed into decency.

5. The field is not a difficult one, nor is it far distant. The climate, especially in the high table lands of the interior, is almost without an equal in the world; the language is easy of acquisition; the natural ability of the race is of a high order, and the opportunities for raising up native laborers of every class are peculiarly good.

BISHOP PAINE IN WASHINGTON.

Dr. Roszell writes that they had a glorious day at Mount Vernon Place on Sunday, February 25. Dr. Duncan, of Randolph Macon College, "preached finely, lectured finely, and we had fine times." The collection for general assessments amounted to $500. Two Sabbaths ago the church took up a collection of $1,000 to meet the balance of the current expenses for the year. The church is united and prosperous, and the congregations very large. Bishop Paine spent last Sabbath in Washington. We would gladly have accepted the kind invitation to be present, and to have shared with our friends the pleasure and profit of hearing Bishop Paine, but were prevented by the near approach of Conference and the great amount of work now upon our hands.

The presence of our senior Bishop among us, for the first time in his official capacity, is a matter of general felicitation. Some of us have most agreeable recollections of him as a member of the General Conference in Baltimore in 1840, and also at New York in 1844. His whole bearing was such as to leave an indelible impression upon the memory and heart, and we can but thank God for the privilege of receiving him now as our chief pastor.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

BISHOP MARVIN'S ILLNESS.

For two weeks, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, Bishop Marvin has been confined to his room by a severe attack of pneumonia and nervous prostration. Prompt medical treatment relieved him of the former, but time and rest are needed for the latter. His unremitting labors after he returned from Texas, at a time when rest and retirement were so much needed by his exhausted system, brought on this attack, which has caused his friends considerable anxiety. But we are glad to announce that his symptoms are more encouraging under the unremitting attentions of his physician, and, by the blessing of the great Head of the Church, we hope soon to chronicle his recovery. But let the brethren forbear their solicitations for his too willing services, and let prayer be offered to the God of all grace for his speedy and entire recovery.

ON WEDNESDAY, says the Shreveport Times of March 8, we had the pleasure of a visit from the Rev. Charles B. Stuart, the able president of the Mansfield Female College. It gratifies us to be able to state that this school, one of the very best in the country, is in a flourishing condition. In addition to an excellent faculty, Mr. Stuart now has an efficient assistant in his accomplished wife, whom he not long since enticed from Virginia, where she had received a superior education, and such an one as eminently qualifies her for the responsible position she now occupies. Parents wishing their daughters placed where every attention will be paid to their moral, physical and intellectual well-being could not do better than send them to the Mansfield College, and we well know whereof we write.

OUR CHINA MISSION.

Mr. Editor: Your letter of November 10 is at hand, and has afforded us great pleasure. We are pleased at the success of your grand paper, and at the prospects of its greater enlargement. Would that we had something encouraging and worthy to appear in it from this hemisphere. We are sorry to hear the board is still between the upper and nether millstones. Hope the grinding they are now getting will ultimate in good to all concerned. In the meantime, however, we await the issue with much anxiety.

The following are the statistics for which you ask: Foreign missionaries, 2; Bible women, 2; members baptized, 1871, 9; whole number of members, 72; number of pupils in boarding school 27; native assistants, 2; chapels and preaching places, 3; number of probationers, December 31, 15; boarding schools, 3; day scholars, 22. Obituaries.

Died, March 4, 1872, Van H. Gordon, eldest son of S. J. C. Gordon, aged twenty-one years and eight months.

We trust that he is safe in the arms of One who can dry all tears, and whose presence is joy forevermore. Safe from the trials of this world, safe from its cares, its anxieties. He sin. Oh! what joy to be "safe at home."

M.

Mrs. Elizabeth Pearce, widow of the late Collin Pearce, died in Calton, Mississippi, on Sunday morning, February 11, 1872, in the sixty-third year of her age. She was a native of North Carolina, and her maiden name was Hanna. She was blessed with pious parents, and was early led to Christ as her Savior, and loved his service. She was uniform in her life and punctual in her religious duties. My acquaintance began with her twenty years ago. I was her pastor six years of the twenty—four in Canton and two in Sharon, and I ever found her devoted to the class and prayer meetings, as well as to the public services of the church. She was plain, simple, and without ostentation in manners, dress and intercourse with others. She loved the Bible and secret prayer. These were of daily service to her.

Her affliction was protracted and severe, yet she did not complain; but bore all with Christian resignation, realizing the sufficiency of God's grace in all she was called to endure.

May the loved ones left behind be led to trust in the same Savior, find the great salvation, follow in the same life led by their mother, and reach the same blessed heaven, promised by the Savior, to which we trust she has gone. H. H. Montgomery.

Sister Mary E. Fisher was born December 28, 1838; embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, August, 1856, and was married to James L. Woods July 18, 1858, with whom she lived happily to the day of his death. His was one of the many spirits that passed from this world of sorrow during the war.

For the last two years Sister Woods has been a great sufferer, yet patiently she endured her afflictions until the Master called her spirit home. She died in peace on the twelfth of November, 1871. Her greatest cross was to give up and leave behind her little daughter, Mary Ruth. A short time before her death she desired to again partake of the holy sacrament, and the writer was sent for. At this communion I witnessed the most affecting scene I ever beheld. Here lay the mother in the arms of death, her little daughter—ten or eleven years of age, and a member of the church—kneeling by her bedside and partaking for the last time on earth, with her dying mother, of the holy sacrament. Sister Ruth, dry your tears. Your fond mother has passed the stream before you, and if you are faithful you will meet her where tears and sorrows are not known.

F. White.

Evergreen, Avoyelles Parish, La.

Died, February 23, at Woodgrove, near Greenwood, Caddo parish, Louisiana, of pneumonia, terminating in lung fever, Matilda Youngblood, wife of Major Melville W. Sale, late of Phillips county, Arkansas, and formerly of Lawrence, Alabama, in the twenty-second year of her age and the third of her marriage. She was born in Edgefield district, South Carolina, from which she emigrated with her parents, uncle and brother, in 1865. In the spring of 1866 she professed to have found peace in believing on Christ, at a protracted meeting held in Greenwood by Bishop Marvin.

Being a child of Baptist and Episcopal parentage, she did not enter the Methodist Church until the fall of 1870, when, after having been baptized by immersion by the Rev. Baxter Clegg, she united with the Greenwood Methodist Church South.

During the last days of the three weeks of her illness she sent for her pastor, Rev. Amicus Williams, with whom she conversed frankly, and with childlike confidence and humility, of her approaching change and preparation for it—alleging against herself backslidings from her first love as felt at conversion, but expressed a renewal of love and of hope in the tender mercies of her Redeemer, in whose will she desired to acquiesce, whether it was present life or death.

She remarked many times: "I am not afraid to die; but I would rather live for my husband. I hate to leave my husband." She promised him to try to live, and faithfully strove to do so. By nature she was gentle, winning and sprightly, yet with much energy of will; and, though so slight and delicate physically, was possessed of much vitality. Her life, though brief as to length of days, was comparatively checkered and full one. Mathilda lost her father, Dr. Arthur Youngblood, in the fall of 1868; and her mother, after a two months' illness of pneumonia and lung disease, on the thirteenth of January last, about six weeks before her own change.

Only her young brother, Glenn, and her uncle, Captain Jake Youngblood, remain of the family who came among us to make a new home after the trying changes of the late civil war; but many friends of her family and her husband's are scattered over these Southern lands. A Friend.

Died, at his residence in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, January 24, 1872, Abel Waddill, Senior.

Bro. Waddill was born in South Carolina, September 13, 1798, married December, 1819, and in 1821 he and his wife joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at a quarterly meeting in Mississippi, and soon after made a profession of religion. In 1829 Bro. Waddill removed to Baton Rouge, where Father Tabor preached occasionally in a small school house. In 1835 Rev. C. K. Marshall was stationed in Baton Rouge, and Bro. Waddill was a member of his charge. For many years he was a member of the official board, which position he occupied at the time of his death. His last sickness was somewhat protracted and painful, yet he never grew impatient, though he often expressed a readiness and even a desire to depart and be with Christ. His death was glorious triumph; he seemed to realize himself on the margin of the spirit [illegible] even before the ties that bound him to earth were quite severed. At a meeting, held February 21, the official board unanimously adopted the following tribute of respect:

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to call from this world our friend and Christian brother, Abel Waddill, Sr.; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the stewards and trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Baton Rouge, do hereby accord our recognition of the full Christian character of our departed brother.

Resolved, That we behold in him a worthy member of this church, and a faithful steward and trustee of the same, who, to the full measure of his strength, performed the duties and bore well the burdens of the positions he occupied; that, while he was one of the oldest members of this church, he never wearied of the services of the sanctuary, but was a regular attendant of public worship, and a reverent and thankful participant in all the privileges of the church.

Resolved, That, as we esteemed him an earnest and humble disciple of the Master, we devoutly believe that he has gone from the labors and burdens of the church militant to the rest and glory of the church triumphant.

Resolved, That while we feel that we have lost a spiritual kinsman, we tender our sincere sympathy to the relatives of the deceased, who have been bereft of a kinsman "according to the flesh," and ask for them the blessing of their kinsman's God.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the Baton Rouge Advocate, Gazette and Comet, and in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy of the same delivered to the widow of the deceased.

Agent's Notice.—The burning of our house at Nashville makes it necessary that we should insist on the prompt payment of amounts due the house in New Orleans. Our friends owing us will please remit at once.

Robt. J. Harp, Agent.

Hair Store.—Mr. Chandler, 17 Bienville street, calls attention, in an advertisement elsewhere, to the splendid assortment of fancy articles in his line.

Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm.—We direct special attention to the Pectoral Balm compounded by Mr. B. Laplace, of our city, and advertised in another column.

Practical Optician.—Mr. John Lazarus, No. 6 St. Charles street, calls attention in his card, which appears in our columns to-day, to the celebrated Pantascopic star spectacles.

Wood and Coal.—The consumers of wood and coal, and especially those in the Fourth District, are referred to the card of Messrs. Velden & Mitchell, who are located at the corner of Jackson and Prytania streets.

Cotton Seed.—The attention of planters is directed in the advertisement of Mr. W. M. Pinckard's choice variety of cotton seed. Mr. Pinckard is also agent for Wham's raw-bone superphosphate, the great Southern fertilizer.

Plumber.—The advertisement of Mr. D. McKendrick, house and ship plumber, and gas fitter, appears in our columns to-day. Those who have never called on him will be greatly surprised to find what an extensive establishment he has built up at 464 Magazine street.

We call attention to the advertisement of Kemper Hall, the institution over which Rev. George M. Everhart, D. D., presides. Dr. Everhart was once connected with the female college at Huntsville, Alabama, and is extensively known in portions of the South as an educator.

Cromwell Line of Steamships.—It will be seen by the advertisement elsewhere that one of these splendid steamers will leave for New York every Saturday at five P. M. They are staunch and well equipped, and those who visit the North this summer, and prefer the sea, will find their accommodations all that could be reasonably desired.

The Utica Steam Engine.—From the abundant and satisfactory testimonials of competent judges, we have no doubt of the practical excellence of the Utica Steam Engine advertised by H. Dudley Coleman, No. 9 Union street. We refer those interested to the advertisement in another column for further information, and advise them to call, if convenient, and see for themselves.

John L. Adams & Co., Wholesale Grocers, Etc., 43, 45 and 47 Peters Street. The advertisement of the above firm appears in our columns to-day. It is one of the oldest, most extensive and reliable firms in the city. After a knowledge of them for many years, and an intimate acquaintance with many of their customers, we have no hesitation in recommending them to our readers who may not know them.

Latest Styles.—The finest articles of dress goods are just now being received and offered for sale at the dry goods emporium of George McGibbon & Co., at the corner of Canal and Bourbon streets. The latest styles grenadines, which the markets of Europe afford will be found comprised in an extensive list published elsewhere by this enterprising firm. One price is asked at the store, and for that reason all the goods are marked as low as possible. Refer to the advertisement for interesting details.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

True Economy.—The country is at present flooded with cheap and inferior goods of every description, which are heralded to the public in flaming advertisements, and which find a market among those who have yet to learn that "true economy" consists in buying a first-class article from an established and first-class house. For example, pianos of various makers are offered at about one-half the price of those of really first-class manufacture. Among the latter none are more deserving of the encomium "really first class" than those manufactured by Messrs. William Knabe & Co., of Baltimore, a firm which dates over a third of a century, and whose pianos for excellency of workmanship, durability and sweetness of tone stand absolutely unrivaled, and containing many valuable patented improvements to be found in no other instrument, made by the very best workmen and of strictly first-class and seasoned material.

The so-called "cheap" piano may present a fair external appearance, but is made of inferior and often entirely unseasoned material, and soon becomes a wreck which defies the art of the tuner. We make special mention of the piano as the most forcible illustration of our remarks, which can be applied to almost every article we use in our families. mh21 1t

A True Friend.—"Another day passed in the mail," cried Richard; but for the sake of history and truth, be it known, the day proved at least an overmatch for the fighting King; and so, despite the multitudinous bitters that flood the deluged markets of the country, Price's Great Specific overshadows them all. With lordly reckoning, the contagious echoes of which reverberate throughout the length and breadth of the mighty mountains, quivering the seaboard, give back the glad response from lake to lake, from river to lake, and both of these again to grand old ocean, that rolls it on for ages. With pillowy roar the people hymn the praises of Price's Celebrated Aromatic Bitters. They have tested its efficacy, tried its virtues, and shrined it, like an idol, in the very heart of faith. Indigestion no longer waits upon their appetite and indigences. Dyspepsia breaks no more upon their enjoyable repasts. Nervousness, weakness, debility, that crouched within them, shrinks at the metamorphose of the giant strength and the load of suffering under which they writhed is thrown off, as with the agile grace and power of an athlete. They care not for the feeling, nor other preparations, content to know and feel that these have found in Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters "the true balm in Gilead" they have heard so often prated of in Gilead.

The Child's Corner.

THE SLEEPY BOY.

I know a little boy;
And I've often heard it said
That he never was so tired
That he wished to go to bed.
Though he scarcely can hold up
His drowsy little head,
Yet this very foolish little boy
Cannot bear to go to bed.

When the big golden sun
Has lain down to sleep;
When the lambs every one
Are lying by the sheep;
When underneath its wing
Every chick tucks its head—
Still this odd little boy
Does not like to go to bed.

Primroses and daisies
Have shut their bright eyes;
Grasshoppers and crickets
Are singing lullabies;
The fire-flies have lighted
Their lamps bright and yellow;
And I'm sure it's dreaming time
For this sleepy little fellow.

The houseless little-child
Who has no place to sleep;
Who on the ground must lie
Or in some doorway creep;
O'er whom no clean white sheet,
No blanket soft is spread—
How happy would he be
If he could go to bed!

But with a pretty nest,
All soft and warm and white,
That's waiting for this boy,
When it's time to say "Good night!"
With mamma's loving kiss,
And hand upon his head—
How strange a sleepy boy
Should not like to go to bed!

THE ICEBERG'S VOYAGE.

BY EDWARD EGGLESTON.

Away up on the coast of that land that we call Greenland, but which ought to be called Snowland, the icebergs are born. The one I am going to tell about came from an ice river. Did you ever hear of a river all solid ice from bottom to top? There are many such. This great ice mountain was pushed slowly down toward the sea by the glacier, or ice river of which it was a part. At last it trembled and toppled on the brink of a steep precipice. But the ice behind kept pushing, and a great fragment, weighing hundreds of millions of tons, fell off the cliff into the Arctic ocean, and made waves larger, a good deal; than a pebble does when you toss it into the brook. After plunging about awhile, and washing off the Greenland mud, he settled down for a voyage. The clear Arctic sunshine flashed upon the great ice cliffs, that gave back in return the most brilliant colors from their prismatic shapes. There seemed to be castles, towers, temples, palaces and mosques of ice upon the berg as it slowly set sail for the south.

"Beware of the Northwind," said a hoary old headland who had seen icebergs sail away from Jacob's Bight for thousands of years, but never one come back again. But the sea-gull, who had traveled extensively over sea and land, and who knew what became of the ice, took care, as he sailed in dizzy circles around its purple top, to warn Iceberg against the real dangers of his voyage. But remembering how iron-strong his own deep heart of ice was, Iceberg laughed at both warnings and moved away.

No sooner had he set sail than the winds began to conspire against him. "I will wreck him before he gets away from his native land," said Westwind. "I will blow a hurricane at him off the cold Labrador." "But I," said Northwind, "will rack his joints with cold. I'll crack him to pieces, I will kill him with rheumatism." "And I," said Eastwind, "will blind him with fogs, brothers, if he escapes the rest of you; and, when I get my cloud blanket over his eyes, I will smuggle him off into Hudson's Bay, where I have carried thousands like him; and, when I get him fairly bagged, he may coast round its narrow shores till he dies." "And I," said Southwind—but they all laughed at him, and wouldn't let him go on. "You're too mild to hurt anybody, brother," said Northwind, and that ended it.

Before Iceberg got out of Baffin's Bay, Westwind grounded him in water only a thousand feet deep, for you know that is shallow for an iceberg. But his steadfast friend, Undercurrent, lifted him off and carried him safely through, though Westwind fought hard to drive him ashore. But when Westwind gave it up, fierce old Northwind came down out of his ice mountains, mad to see Iceberg broken away from his chains, and getting safely out to sea. Very savagely did he roar about the walls of the berg, until the ice came to be a deeper purple, and cracked open with cold. "Ah!" said iceberg, "Northwind cracks my sides, and makes me blue with cold, but all this cold and bluster makes my great crystal heart strong, and sends me more swiftly toward the south."

"Let me at him, brother," said Eastwind, impatiently. "Let me give him a wet sheet-pack." With that he swopt his great arms full of fogs, and threw them into Iceberg's face, smothering him almost to death. When he was fairly blinded, Eastwind threw his arm about him, and went tugging away to pull him into his great bag of Hudson's Bay. But, you know, the whole iceberg family live with seven times as much of themselves under the water as they have above. What we see above the water is a huge mountain. But, after all, it's only the head of the iceberg out of water. Now, while Eastwind was tugging away at his head, Iceberg's good friend, Undercurrent, had a stronger hold on him, and pulled away toward the south. For though the fog was around his head so that he could not see, Undercurrent knew the roads through the sea, for he had traveled these dark paths for a thousand years. So all the fog, and all the plotting of Eastwind, came to nothing. Iceberg sailed on to the south.

At last came the Southwind. His gentle breath smelled of spices and orange groves. Iceberg liked him. But Undercurrent tried to pull him away. Iceberg liked the balmy Southwind the better, because he had never been used to such caresses.

Then Southwind introduced him to a new friend called Gulf-stream. Now, Gulf-stream felt genial and warm to the heart of Iceberg, and he said: "I've never had anything but snow and cold in my life, and there can be no harm in [illegible]." So he left his good, steadfast friend, Undercurrent, to follow Gulf-stream. For weeks Iceberg enjoyed the gentle songs of Southwind and the soft caresses of Gulf-stream. Then he found there were rills of water running from his sides, and that the waves made inroads upon him, so that great caves were forming all around him. He did not feel as strong as usual. "I will get out of this," he said. But alas! his good friend, Undercurrent, was now far away. There was no help for him. And so he rotted in the sunshine until he was only a shell; whereupon all the other winds fell upon him, and, because his strength was all gone, he perished miserably.

Not the rude storms of life are our greatest enemies, but the soft blandishments that take away our strength by degrees.—Sunday School Scholar.

SPOILING A QUARREL.

Johnny stood a little time at the gate, nibbling the scallops from the edge of his cookey; possibly he was nursing his courage to say a kind word. He was waiting for Jerry White to turn round and look.

"Halloo, cry-baby!" shouted Jerry, as soon as he discovered him; "what you got there?"

"Halloo, pretty face!" retorted Johnny, good-humoredly; "come and see.

"'Open your mouth and shut your eyes,
And I'll give you something to make you wise.'"

"Open your eyes and shut your mouth," responded Jerry, and I'll——" and here a snowball, that was meant for Johnny's face, fell harmlessly over his shoulder. The next instant the extra cake was struck from Johnny's hand into a snow-drift.

"You like to sugar your cakes with snow," laughed Johnny; "'cause that's yours; mother sent it to you."

"No she didn't, neither," answered Jerry, picking up the broken cookey; "what did she send it to me for?"

"I don't know nothing about it; 'cause she gave me one, I guess."

"She's real good, anyhow," said Jerry, demolishing the cake at two mouthfuls. "Father says you look just the same as her; do you, Johnny?"

"I don't care if I do; she makes good cookies, don't she?"

"O, you should see my mother's Christmas pies!" was Jerry's reply; "ain't they jolly, though! What you going to do this forenoon, Johnny?"

"I'd go sledding if there was anybody to draw half and ride half."

"I guess I can pull some," said Jerry; "get on here and let's see."

Johnny loaded himself upon the little new sled, and, giving command to his one-horse team, went spinning down the street directly to the deepest, highest drift of yesterday's storm.

"Whoa! haw! gee! go long!" shouted the driver at every step. "Steady, Reindeer!"

But just at that moment Reindeer accomplished an extraordinary feat of shying, and, with one mischievous jerk, Sir Johnny lay sprawling on a fresh, unbroken patch of snow.

It is very remarkable, at least the Reindeer seemed to think so, that Johnny Lapland didn't cry, or scold, or call names, or something. He only jumped up laughing at the curious print his figure made in the snow.

"Now it's your turn," said Johnny; and Jerry, somewhat foiled by the good-humor of his companion, nothing loth, took the seat of command. On they went, past the grocer's corner and the minister's front door, and up toward where little Katy Miller was always looking out of the window.

"Jolly, and that's so, I declare!" said Jerry; "but whoa! we've got there." Johnny was tired by this time—he couldn't pull up hill. He wiped the sweat from his forehead, and the two boys examined the new sled with exceeding satisfaction.

"There's old Betsey taking home Miss Penny's wash," said Jerry, as he bobbed round the nearest corner, just to see who might be coming; "hasn't she got a tug, though, with that basket! Let's give one little, soft snow-ball—on her back, you know!"

"Let's give that great basket a ride," said Johnny; "you pull some and I'll pull some. Say, will you? Mother says she's real good!"

It was soon settled with poor Betsey that the heavy basket should be transported to the new sled, and that the double team should, "honor bright," be "dreadful careful not to spill off a single piece, or to let a drop spatter on the clean, sweet things." Of course it was more a frolic than a task, that half-mile journey; but the washerwoman, relieved of her burden, was already at Miss Penny's gate when the boys arrived.

"And I don't know what good mothers ye belong to," said Betsey, in her gratitude for the help; "but it's blessed boys ye are to save such an aching from a poor woman's back. My blessing goes with ye, and the pretty, bright sled, and the best of good fun in your play!"

"Thank you!" returned Johnny. "Thank you!" repeated Jerry; and then the boys both concluded that it must be dinner time, and more too.

"Well, Johnny," said his mother, when the dinner was over, and Johnny had finished the story of his adventures, "I am glad you and Jerry got on so well. I thought you would, my son, if you only tried a little."

"But didn't his fun get a spoiling, though, mother? He meant to get me mad when he pitched me into the snow; but I spoiled that, I guess. He meant to make me upset him so he could give me a rubbing in the snow; I thought I'd spoil that, too. And then we both spoiled old Betsey's backache, and 'twas good fun, as good as she blessed us for. Oh, I like Jerry well enough, mother; he's real strong at a pull!"

"My dear child," said the mother, "you may always remember that the best way to learn to like anybody, and to have a good time with him, is to be as kind as you can always, and when he is wrong, to do some especially pleasant thing for him, and with him. So you see, Johnny, there's more than one way to spoil things, and a great deal of badness—bad fun and mean mischief—may be spoiled by taking a little pains to do somebody a good, or give somebody a pleasure."

I never heard that Johnny and Jerry had another quarrel all the winter.—Advocate and Guardian.

The Farm and Garden.

NEED FOR IRRIGATION IN THIS COUNTRY.

It is an established fact that the greater portion of the cultivated lands in the older settled States are so far exhausted of their natural fertility that they afford no profit to the farmer, whatever the crop raised, without the addition of some foreign fertilizing material. To enrich them in the most economical, and at the same time most effective way, has been largely the study of the last quarter of a century. Scientists have sought for that subtle something that would replace the missing ingredient in the soil, and practical men have experimented with the same end in view, both aiming to raise maximum crops on a partially exhausted soil, with a minimum outlay for manurial compounds. Hence it has come to pass that more than fifty different kinds of fertilizers, some of them natural, some of them artificial, and others a mixture of the two, if they are anything, have been put upon the market and sold to the farmers to supply this need, everywhere felt and as yet largely unprovided for.

What our farmers absolutely require is something applied to the soil that shall not only be cheap, but lasting. It must be cheap in order to enable the worn-out East to compete with the rich virgin West—the only thing favorable to the East being that the poorer soil is nearer market than the richer. It must be lasting, inasmuch as the margin is so small, at the best, that constant and increasing applications would tend, at least, to the absorption of what profit there is, or make it needful to adopt the suicidal policy of ruining one part of the farm to keep the other in a state of passable fertility.

The experience of thousands of years in the Old World, and centuries in this, has demonstrated that, whether the climate be wet or dry, water distributed over the earth, under favorable circumstances, is the most natural, cheapest, most lasting, in short, taking all things into consideration, the best producer of vegetable growth in existence.

Let us glance at the reasons that underlie this fact. All soils, or nearly all, contain matter which on solution becomes plant food. Water acts as a solvent, and, when brought into occasional or, what is better, constant contact under proper circumstances with this matter, this food is prepared by the action of the water, as it can be in no other way, for the plant's use.

More than this, chemical analysis has demonstrated that the water of lakes, rivers, brooks, springs, and even wells, contains mineral and, most of them, vegetable and animal matter, both in solution and suspension, to a greater or less extent. Suppose that a single gallon of water contains fifty grains (no unusual circumstance) of the above substances, and that two thousand gallons are discharged each twenty-four hours, for sixty days, upon three acres of land. More than eight hundred pounds would have been thus deposited, all of which is fertilizing matter in a soluble, available state, laid at the roots of plants for their absorption and elaboration; and these are the reasons, briefly, why irrigation so promotes vegetable growths.

Now as to availability. Few countries are better situated to carry out a system of irrigation than ours. Commencing with our northernmost New England frontier, and taking the six Eastern States, portions of New York and New Jersey, and thence northward and southward of the Alleghany Ridge, and there are millions on millions of acres where the water, coming from the hills and the mountains, could be directed from its natural channel, and made to subserve the most desirable of all purposes—making two or ten spires of grass grow where one grows now, thus adding to ours and the world's wealth, and, what is better than either or both, bringing profit to a business that is frequently prosecuted at a loss, and thus content and happiness to numberless homes.—Independent.

KICKING COWS.—A few years ago I had considerable experience with kicking cows, and by far the best remedy out of quite a number that I tried was the strap or surcingle drawn tightly around the cow, just in front of the hips and close to the bag. Tighten it up till she does not attempt to kick. I never knew it to fail; you can gradually loosen it until it will be sufficient simply to lay it on her back. But be cautious and do not loosen or leave it off until she makes no effort to kick with it, tight or on. Kick she cannot, with the strap tight. The first cow I tried it on was the worst I ever saw. With both hind legs tied together she would kick backward like a horse; then, in addition, one fore leg was tied up, and she would stand on the other and kick with both hind ones, as soon as an attempt was made to milk her, till she tumbled down; then would get up and kick again until tired out; so the milk was generally left on the stable floor, and it was decided to dry her up and beef her as soon as possible, though an extra cow. Seeing the surcingle remedy in the Country Gentleman, I tried it and effected a cure.

If somebody would only discover an equally good method to subdue a kicking horse, it would be a great benefit. The Ruzey method generally succeeds; yet it frequently fails in the worse cases.—C. H. S., Ionia, Michigan.

RUST IN WHEAT.—A Remedy.—A Virginia farmer, in a communication to the Southern Farm and Home, thinks he has found the means of preventing the rust in wheat, by top-dressing in March with wood ashes, putting on about twelve bushels to the acre. He says that in a season of drought in nearly all the wheat-growing sections of the South, while all his neighbors' crops were ruined by rust, his escaped by the use of ashes. He considers it an [illegible] for the rust, and that he has found it the means of preventing rust in four out of five of his crops. No doubt the ashes will be found a most valuable manure for this and almost all other crops, and if, in addition thereto, they will prevent the rust also, it will be more than ever desirable to save and secure all that it is possible to reach.

ROOT CROPS.—Every farmer should have an acre or more of each of the following roots: Mangle wurtzel, sugar beet, carrots and parsnips. Next month will be time enough to give the necessary directions as to their culture; but in the meantime all preliminary preparations should be made. The manure suitable for an acre will be ten loads well-rotted dung, a compost of equal parts of such dung and marsh mud, or two hundred pounds of guano. A half bushel of either of the roots named cut up, and fed to each cow, will keep her well in milk, and be of great assistance to the health of all the stock to which they may be fed.

MELLOW SOIL.—Experiments have shown that a mellow, loamy soil is capable of absorbing in twelve hours, when exposed to a moist atmosphere, an amount of water equal to two per cent. of its weight. This property, possessed by a mellow soil, is one that, in a dry season, is able to give it the power of maturing a crop when a hardened surface would be unable to do so. A surface that is impenetrable to the atmosphere, of course, could not absorb any of the moisture with which the atmosphere is charged. But when rendered free from lumps by repeated harrowings, each change of temperature causes a circulation of air through the mass of soil, which is free then to absorb all the moisture coming in contact with it until saturated.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Williamette Farmer feeds his stock a tablespoonful of sulphur to each animal, with their salt, once in two weeks. When he has done so, no vermin has troubled them, and his cows have not been affected with garget, nor have his sheep with grub in the head. He has practiced this twenty years.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

CREAM MUFFINS.—One pint of cream, three eggs, a pinch of salt, flour enough to make a thick batter.

HORSE RADISH SAUCE.—Grate very small a stick of horse-radish; then with a couple of tablespoonfuls of it, mix a small teaspoonful of salt and four tablespoonfuls of cream; stir it briskly and add by degrees a wineglass of vinegar. Excellent to serve with cold roast beef.

RUTH RUSSELL'S SOAP.—Take twenty-two pounds of potash, twenty pounds of grease and three-fourths of a pound of rosin. Put the potash into the soap barrel first, pour hot rain water on it till all the potash is soft; then put in all the grease but two or three pounds. Add hot water and stir till it stirs readily. The barrel will now be nearly full. Then add the reserved grease with the rosin melted in it. When wanted for use, dip out a quantity and add a third of soft water to it.

DRIED EGGS.—The eggs must be beaten to a uniform consistency, and poured in a thin layer upon polished iron plates, which are placed in a current of hot air; the paste rapidly dries, and must be packed in hermetically sealed cases. When required for use, the dried egg can be dissolved in cold water and beaten to a foam, like fresh eggs. It is said that eggs can be preserved for years in this way, and that they retain their agreeable flavor to the last.—Journal of Applied Chemistry.

Scientific.

CURIOUS EXPERIMENT.—Mr. Kroneing points out the following mode of determining which of two objects seen from a distance is further off than the other: Let the reader suppose two trees, for instance, standing in a line with the eye; if he moves his eye to the right, the tree which is nearer will appear to move to the left; and the other will seem to follow the motion of the eye.

SPECIFIC-GRAVITY TEST FOR POTATOES.—A simple test adopted in Germany for determining the comparative value of different samples of potatoes as food, consists in the use of a saline solution of a certain strength, in which the potatoes are placed, and observing the depth to which they sink. Those which sink the deeper, and especially those that settle to the bottom, are the more valuable varieties; while the poorer qualities float at the top. As this method depends for its principle upon the fact that the amount of the starch in the potato is in the ratio of its specific gravity, a much simpler method of getting the absolute value consists in subjecting the potato directly to the ordinary specific-gravity test, and making the comparisons accordingly.

MR. PROCTOR, by his catalogue of three hundred and twenty-four thousand one hundred and ninety-eight stars, regards the general conclusion of Struve, that the stars of the first nine or ten magnitudes are more densely aggregated along the zone of the Milky Way, as abundantly justified. But, instead of the gradual increase of density shown by his statistics, the chart reveals a distinct aggregation in those regions of the heavens where the Milky Way is brightest to the eye. The stars, therefore, are not gathered toward a certain zone; but into those irregular, cloud-like masses, streams, projections and interlacing branches which constitute the Milky Way, as it presents itself on clear nights to our view. Projections proceed much further from the main body, and are found to lend, in almost every instance, to the regions of many nebulæ.

THE NEW STIMULANT.—Chloral-drinking, according to the physicians, is superseding absinthe; opium and alcoholic stimulants among the better classes. An insidious sedative, its use grows more dangerously on the tippler than more actively intoxicating drinks. The manufacture of this drug is the best evidence of the extent of its use. In Europe its production has become one of the leading chemical industries, and it is sold by the ton. Baron Liebig affirms that one German chemist manufactures and sells half a ton a week. The London Spectator says: 'Taking chloral is the new and popular vice, particularly among women, and is doing at least as much harm as alcohol. The drug is kept in thousands of dressing-cases, and those who begin its use often grow so addicted to it that they pass their lives in a sort of contented stupefaction. Chloral drunkards will soon be an admitted variety of the species.

THERMAL SPRINGS are caused by volcanic heat, according to Mr. H. Woodward, in the Geological Magazine. Water, descending to deep levels of the earth's strata, encounters steam, perhaps superheated, which, though also converted into water by contact, raises the temperature of the stream and causes it to rise to the surface. That hot springs are directly connected with volcanoes is evident from such facts as these: 1. Hot springs exist in all volcanic regions. 2. When not in immediate proximity to volcanoes, they are situated along lines of dislocation and disturbance, once caused by volcanic force, where still igneous forces are in operation below the surface, as in many places among the Pyrenees, Alps and Himalayas. The springs of nearly boiling water at Broosa are along the grand uplift of the Thracian Olympus range. 3. Hot springs remote from volcanoes are affected by them, nevertheless. Thus the "Source de la Reine," at the baths of Luchon, in the Pyrenees, during the great earthquake of Lisbon, was suddenly raised from the low temperature of a tepid spring to that of one hundred and twenty-two degrees Fahrenheit, a point retained ever since. Thermal waters alone contain silica in solution, and deposit the same as travertin, either immediately about the spring or on whatever object they may bathe—as wood, grasses, moss, etc., etc.

AT THE seance on the fifth of February, of the French Academy of Sciences, M. Dupuy de Lome narrated to a crowded assembly the success of the trial trip in his aerostat, built by government direction and support—an announcement, in fact, of the first real progress in aerial navigation. His apparatus, not completed until after the siege of Paris, consists of an ovoid car, firmly held by a double netting; and is provided with a helm; also a two-winged helix, worked by eight men, and capable of producing a velocity of nearly six miles an hour. Inflated with pure hydrogen gas, "Loose all" being cried at one o'clock P. M. on the second of February, the balloon rose with a bound to the height of one thousand eight hundred and fifty feet. The wind was blowing strongly from the southwest with a velocity of forty feet a second. Order was given to set the helix in motion, and to keep the head toward the southeast, thus making, by course, an angle of eighty-five degrees with the direction of the wind. As the balloon rose, the wind increased in velocity to fifty-eight feet a second, at the height of three thousand three hundred and fifty feet. During the whole period of the ascent the apparatus never failed to obey the helm, and held its course staunchly across the wind. At three o'clock the voyagers lowered at the very point predicted by calculation, Mondecourt; and, by turning the head of the car to the wind, alighted without shock, having traversed one hundred miles in two hours.

Thus was demonstrated the stability of the ovoid car and the perfect control of the helm, descent having been effected in a high wind with entire safety, no injury being done even to the fragile arms of the helix. Also that progress may be made at a greater or less angle to the direction of the wind, according to its force, or even against a wind whose velocity is not greater than six miles an hour, with this very apparatus. With a motor of the same weight, yet of double power, twice this rate might be attained. Voyages, therefore, may be undertaken in certain directions with surety of reaching the desired destination; for, with M. Dupuy de Lome's aerostat a trip might be made to Marseilles or Nice in a wind which would drive an ordinary balloon from Paris to Prussia.

THE only way to find comfort in earthly things is to surrender them, in a faithful, carelessness, into the hands of God.

SAVE YOUR CLOTHING! SAVE YOUR LABOR!

ITEMS OF IMPORTANCE TO EVERY HOUSEKEEPER.

THE WOMAN'S FRIEND

WASHING MACHINE!

Only four months since it was first introduced to the New Orleans public, and large numbers have been sold.

It washes a heavy blanket, lusted of rubbing—the only true principle, as time has demonstrated.

A Home-manufactured Article.

THE UNDERSIGNED offers this Machine to the public as the simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating instead of rubbing. It will wash in shirts or 25 ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly Wash, Rinse and Wring 100 pieces ordinary clothing in FORTY-FIVE MINUTES, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread. The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it.

WITHOUT THE LEAST INJURY.

It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and cost less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every machine will do what is represented if the directions are followed.

To verify what is stated, I have obtained a few certificates from responsible parties, which are annexed hereto.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

EDWARD THOMPSON, Manufacturer and Proprietor,

fe22 1m 184 PETERS STREET, NEAR JULIA, NEW ORLEANS.

GREENSBURG, LA., November 1, 1871.

I hereby certify that I have one of the "Rocker or Woman's Friend Washing Machines," and have found it the Machine for country use, as it will wash dirty clothes, such as farm laborers wear rolling logs, etc. Any machine will wash clothes that are slightly soiled. A. W. CARRUTH.

Mr. Carruth, in a letter accompanying this certificate, makes the following statement: "My wife, who understands fully the principles and process of washing, says it is useless to wash ordinarily soiled clothes through more than one hot water, but I could not well embody this in a certificate."

NEW ORLEANS, November 8, 1871.

I take pleasure in stating that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson in September last, gives me excellent satisfaction. I have used it personally, and can say that it will wash the dirtiest clothes and give them a grass-bleached whiteness. I have washed Swiss muslin dresses with it without the least injury. I have washed blankets with it and found (as stated in the circulars) that it gives them a new appearance and feeling. One week, during a temporary illness, my little girl twelve and boy ten years of age done the entire washing. I simply put in the water and soap. I will give any further information I may possess to those interested, by calling at my residence. MRS. A. BOUTHEREAU,
232½ Eighth street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 18, 1871.

MR. E. THOMPSON—Dear Sir: I have used your Washer for the last three months, and as a practical man (scouring daily) I pronounce it the best in the market; I could not spare it. I will explain its merits to any one by applying to P. VOLNEY,
Dyer and Scourer, 89 Bienville street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 7, 1871.

I certify that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson last June, has done the entire washing of my hotel, from the largest quilt and blanket to the smallest collar, ever since, to my entire satisfaction. It will wash clean the dirtiest pieces, and will not damage the most delicate. It has saved me a great amount of labor. Any one can see it in operation at my hotel on Monday of each week.

JOHN REINHARDT,
Proprietor Verandah Hotel, New Orleans.

SYLVESTER-LARNED INSTITUTE
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
102 and 401 Carondelet street,
New Orleans, November 15, 1871.

MR. E. THOMPSON—Dear Sir: Having used for over two months your "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," and tested it most thoroughly under my own eye, I am prepared to say with confidence that it does all you claim for it, if the simple and plain directions are followed. The Wringer especially is a great success. Altogether the Machine and Wringer are wonderful labor-saving machines, and the machine is very properly called "Woman's Friend."

Without it, not less than double our present number of servants would be required to do our work—hence the economy of it is evident. Every family should have one. Yours truly, A. S. PAGAUD.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, and something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequaled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics, in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted to the wants of the South, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly

Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup.

Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.

It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.

For sale by all respectable druggists.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We have again to notice a fair degree of animation in the general market, especially in most branches of the wholesale trade, which are now doing a brisk business in sales to country merchants and city dealers. Sugar has been in fair demand, but light receipts have restricted operations, the sales showing no material change in prices. Molasses also has been in light supply and moderate demand, but without any material variation in quotations, the better qualities, however, ruling in favor of sellers. The medium and better grades of flour have been in fair request and ruled at full prices, but the lower grades have been dull and drooping. Corn has met an active demand, and, the receipts being moderate, has advanced 3, 4@7c. for mixed, and 2@5c. for white. Pork has further declined 12½@25c. ₱ bbl., and bacon has shown no marked variation.

The river is 11 feet 10 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fifteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi....bales.	6,522
Lake	25
Mobile	852
Florida	21
Texas	59
Total	7,479

On Saturday a few sales were made at the opening at previous rates, but later in the day the demand received an additional impulse from the Liverpool and New York dispatches, and the sales summed up 6,300 bales at a net improvement of ¼c. in good ordinary, ¼@⅜c. in low middling, and ¼c. in the higher grades. On Monday, the telegrams being still more favorable, buyers came forward with increased spirit, and 7,800 bales changed hands at a further irregular advance of ⅛@¼c., good ordinary closing at 21@21⅛c., low middling at 21¾@22⅛c., middling at 22½@22⅝c., strict middling at 22⅞c., and good middling at 23¼c. On Tuesday the market was extremely dull. Most buyers stood aloof, and the few who came forward refused to go on unless at a concession of ⅛c. The sales were consequently confined to 1,900 bales, indicating a pretty general decline to the above extent. At the same time the supply offering was more liberal, but failed to impart any spirit to the demand.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 825,895 bales, against 1,133,726 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 800,409 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 133,656 to France, and a decrease of 573,253 to Great Britain, and of 176,664 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	19 @ 20
Good ordinary	21 @ 21⅛
Low middling	21⅛ @ 22

SUGAR.—The market is quiet, with light supplies and limited demand for open kettle. Clarified is very dull. On Tuesday common sold at 7c., good common 7¼c., low fair 8@8¼c., seconds 8½c., good fair 8¾@9c., fully fair 9¼c., strictly prime 10c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—On Tuesday the better descriptions were in demand, but the poor qualities were dull. Inferior sold at 20c., common 30@35c., common fermenting 32½c., fair fermenting 40c., prime fermenting 45@48c., prime reboiled 56c., cistern bottom 60c.

CORN.—On Tuesday there was a scarcity of supplies, and with a good demand prices for white advanced 2½@5c. ₱ bushel. 4,000 sacks sold at 80@85c. for mixed, 96@98c. for white mixed, and 96, 97½, 98c.@$1 for white, the market closing at the outside prices.

OATS.—On Tuesday there was a fair supply and demand, and 2,000 sacks sold at 59@60c. ₱ bushel, a lot of fancy commanding 61c.

PORK.—On Tuesday there was some demand, but at lower rates. 500 bbls. mess sold, in three lots, on the landing and in store, on private terms, 100 at $13.25, and 50 at $13.50 ₱ bbl. It is quoted at $13.25, and is retailing at $13.75.

BACON.—On Tuesday clear sides were in request, and were held for higher prices, but shoulders and clear rib sides were dull. Shoulders are quoted at 5¾@6c., clear rib sides 7½@7¾c., and clear sides 8c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—On Monday 20 tierces choice sugar-cured sold, in two lots, at 11¼c., 100 tierces, in job lots, and 150 tierces, in one lot, at 11c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Tuesday a lot of 150 casks shoulders sold, to arrive, at 4⅞c., and 10 boxes clear rib sides sold, on the spot, at 6c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—On Saturday 100 kegs refined sold on private terms, and 250 kegs do. at 10½c. Tierces are quoted at 9@9¼c., kegs 10@10¼c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON.—Western commands 10½@10¾c., Northern 11@11½c. ₱ lb.

BEEF.—Texas commands $11@$12, Western $15@$16 ₱ bbl. Western is scarce. The market is bare of Northern. It would command $16.50@$17.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 110@110¼, (against 110 at New York,) and closed at 110@110¼, (against 109⅞ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to $500 in American half dollars on Saturday at 108½. There are very few Mexican dollars on the market, but we learn that a large amount is due. American half dollars are quoted at 107½@108¼, and Mexican dollars at 4@4½ per cent. premium in gold.

Special Notices.

Meridian District Conference.

The District Conference of the Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, will be held at Shubuta, Clark county, Mississippi, May 23-26. Bishop J. C. Keener will preside. Services will commence at ten o'clock A. M. on Thursday. All the preachers on the district are expected to attend, and make full and exact reports. The local preachers and lay delegates are also expected to attend.

WM. B. HINES, P. E.

New Orleans District Conference.

This body will meet in the Felicity Street church of New Orleans, April 10, at half-past seven o'clock P. M. On Thursday night a general sacramental meeting and district love-feast will be held. All the members of the Quarterly Conferences in the district are members of the District Conference, and all the members of the churches are invited to attend the business sessions and the special religious services. Besides the election of delegates to the Annual Conference, it is desirable that reports be furnished on the several subjects indicated in chapter 2, section 3, of the Discipline, in order that these important interests may be thoroughly investigated and discussed.

LINUS PARKER, P. E.

Demopolis District Conference.

The Demopolis District Conference, Alabama Conference, will convene at Bladen Springs May 30. Preachers in charge will please be prepared to submit full reports of their charges and all interests connected therewith. Lay members to the Annual Conference will be elected. Will the churches pray that the District Conference may be a great spiritual blessing to their pastors?

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, March 19.—There were further enormous transactions in Erie shares to-day, the price advancing from 49 to 51. The president of the Stock Board announced at the Second Board that he had been officially notified by President Dix that transfer books would be opened on Wednesday, the twentieth instant.

Twenty-nine cases of smallpox yesterday, and on the increase.

Iowa City, Iowa, March 19.—The Clinton Hotel was burned to-day. Ole Bull escaped in his night clothes, and with "that fiddle" under his arm.

New York, March 21.—The London papers have intelligence from Roumania of continued persecution of the Jews at Cabul. The entire Jewish population, consisting of about one thousand, have been fearfully punished, routed, and their synagogues filthily polluted.

Louisville, March 21.—The Ohio Falls Car Company's works, at Jeffersonville, Indiana, burned.—Loss, $500,000; insurance, $300,000, mostly in Northern companies. These works covered five acres of ground. Seven hundred men were thrown out of employment. The workmen lost their tools, and many of them narrowly escaped.

Washington, March 21.—The President submitted Governor Warmoth's proposition to the Louisiana politicians. It involves ten men from each wing, with Marshal Packard, chairman, as a joint committee.

The President disclaimed any wish to dictate, but his language indicated conciliation. The opponents of Warmoth have declined the overture of compromise.

The Supreme Court has dismissed the Kuklux case upon the government's plea of a want of jurisdiction.

New York, March 22.—There were seventy new smallpox cases during the week. The house of A. T. Stewart has been abandoned to a servant, who has a most virulent case.

Jackson, Miss., March 22.—A bill passed the House reapportioning the congressional districts of the State. It gives six districts, but one of which is possibly Democratic—that in northeast Mississippi. The Democrats refused to vote on its passage, and afterward entered a protest against its passage, but were refused the privilege of spreading it on the journals. Some excitement followed this action and personalities were indulged in.

The civil rights bill finally passed the Senate. It prescribes a fine of $1,000 and three years' imprisonment for hotel owners, etc., who deny the colored man equal rights with the white man.

An amendment to the school bill has been introduced, which provides that the entire school management of the State—county, district and municipal—with all its monies, lands and emoluments, shall be under the absolute control of State Superintendent Peas.

Key West, Florida, March 22.—A late arrival from Cuba brings the following news: The insurgents under command of President Cespedes attacked the town of Sagua le Tubamo on the fifth instant, and by a feint succeeded in drawing off the garrison. While the Spanish troops were pursuing Cespedes, a body of another force of insurgents entered the town by a different route, and sacked the place. The movements of the insurgents were successful.

Philadelphia, March 23.—Smallpox deaths for the week, ninety-four, a decrease of twenty-six compared with the previous week.

San Francisco, March 23.—Great Republic arrived to-day. She experienced a terrific storm during the passage, and saw portions of a wreck, supposed to be the United States steamer Saginaw. The weather has been the most severe ever known on the coast of China and Japan.

New York, March 25.—A Havana letter gives a statement of an interview with Dr. Howard, an American physician, who has been sentenced to eight years' imprisonment at Centa, a Spanish penal island near Gibraltar. He was found in the lower hold of a vessel, dressed in the commonest convict duck clothing, an old straw hat, and untanned leather shoes, chained to a file of other unfortunates, one of whom was Don Miguel Michado, an old Cuban planter. The doctor still believes that the United States will yet intercede in an effectual manner for his release from the unjust sentence of the Spaniards.

New York, March 26.—Twelve smallpox deaths reported in the past twenty-four hours. Vaccination continues on a great scale.

San Francisco, March 26.—A slight earthquake was felt last night throughout the State. No damage reported.

The central force of the earthquake this morning was in the Sierra Nevada, east of Visalia. At Visalia the shocks were sufficiently strong to throw goods from shelves and to crack walls. At San Francisco the vibration lasted twenty seconds, but was not felt by more than one-tenth of the population.

FOREIGN.

Kanagawa, Japan, Feb. 20.—The Japanese government has assumed the liabilities of the deposed princes to foreigners for loans of ships and goods. Persecution and deportation of native Christians continues.

Dusseldorf, Mar. 20.—The Town Council Hall, and world-famed Academy of Art, was burned to-day with a number of most valuable pictures.

London, March 20.—Mr. Gladstone, replying to questions in the House of Commons, said that Parliament would be informed at all times of the spirit, aim, direction and policy of the government on all important questions. As far as the Alabama claims were concerned, he believed the speech of her majesty on the opening of the session gave all necessary information. Mr. Gladstone, in conclusion, said it would be impossible for the government to delegate to Parliament the power of making treaties.

Paris, March 21.—It has been proved that Marshal Bazaine dined with Prince Frederick Charles, of Prussia, shortly before the capitulation of Metz.

Rome, March 21.—It is rumored that a treaty is pending between Prussia and Italy, whereby Alsace and Lorraine are guaranteed to Prussia, and Rome to Italy.

London, March 24.—The Observer says Granville's second note is most conciliatory, but states explicitly that England is unable to submit the admissibility of indirect damages to the Geneva board. The dispatch is very lengthy.

City of Mexico, March 15, via Havana 25.—The government forces have driven the revolutionists from the cities of Aguas Calientes, Legos and Zacatecas, and relieved the troops at San Luis Potosi.

In the battle of the second, Rocha, with six thousand men, defeated the united revolutionists with nine thousand, killing and wounding seven hundred, and capturing seven thousand, with all their artillery except three guns.

Martial law exists in twelve States of Mexico.

General Rocha's victory is a death blow to the revolutionary prospects, but anarchy will prevail for a long time.

London, March 25.—The turreted iron-clad Thunderer, carrying four guns of thirty-five tons each, has been launched.

Madrid, March 25.—Don Espartero, notwithstanding his declination, has been nominated for the Cortes from Madrid.

IMMENSE LOSS OF TEXAS CATTLE.

Both the late cold weather and the drought have occasioned an immense loss of cattle in many portions of Texas. Indeed, the stock interest has not received for many years such a severe blow.

According to the Texas papers, it is estimated that two hundred thousand head of cattle have died during the past few weeks in western Texas. The loss has been fearful between the Guadalupe and Nueces rivers.

In Goliad alone twenty-five thousand animals have been skinned, and about an equal number in San Patricio and Karnes counties.

The San Antonio Herald says that in a space of one mile, opposite Helene, one thousand or more animals have been skinned. Within a space of three miles, near Kennedy's Ferry, on the Nueces, five thousand more have died, and many of the carcases have been stripped of the hides.

At last accounts the cattle were dying in Texas at a fearful rate, from starvation. After the cold weather came a terrible drought, and there was literally no grass for them to subsist upon. So the loss of stock in the counties above mentioned, in Victoria, DeWitt, Gonzales and other neighboring portions, this winter and spring, may be estimated at about one-half.

The number of hides which went into the Indianola market since the first of January was sixty thousand. The number received at some other places in February was ninety-three thousand; which, at $4 per hide, gives $712,000 in specie.

This heavy loss to the stock men of Texas is really to be deplored.

MESSAGE FROM THE MIKADO.

The Emperor of Japan has recently addressed his nobles on the subject of education. His message is another striking illustration of the wonderful revolution that is going on in that empire. He says:

"We are of the opinion that the reputation for civilization, wealth and strength possessed by the countries of the globe arise from nothing else than the power of industry and perseverance which characterize their populations; and the reason why their populations develop their knowledge, polish their talent, and give effect to their power of industry and perseverance, is that each individual does his best as a member of the nation. We have lately changed our ancient system, and desire to run equally in the race with other countries. How can we expect to succeed unless the whole population unanimously exerts to the full its power of industry and perseverance? The nobles in particular, occupying, as they do, an honorable and important position, and being the object of the observation of the whole people, are looked upon as models of action. Is it possible to dispense with an extraordinary degree of industry and perseverance on their part, such as will fit them to be the leaders in animating the people? Their responsibilities are indeed grave. This is the reason why we summon you here to-day, in order that we may communicate our wishes to you in person. In order to secure the result of industry and perseverance, nothing else is necessary but to develop knowledge and to polish the talents; nothing else is required but to fix the eyes upon the aspect of the civilization of the world, to cultivate pursuits of actual utility, to go abroad for purposes of study in foreign countries, and to learn practically. It may suffice for those whose advanced age precludes their being able to remain and study, to make a tour abroad, to widen their circle of knowledge by seeing and hearing, thus to improve their understanding. In consequence, too, of the want of a system of woman education in our country, many women are deficient in intelligence. Besides, the education of children is a thing which is connected intimately with the instruction of their mothers, and is really a matter of the most absolute importance. There is, therefore, of course, not the slightest objection to those who go abroad taking their wives, daughters or sisters with them, so that they may learn that the instruction of females in foreign countries has a good foundation, and may become acquainted with the right system of educating children. If you will, all of you, really give your attention to this question, and exert your powers of industry and perseverance, there will be no difficulty for us in advancing in the region of civilization, in laying the foundation of wealth and strength, and in running equally in the race with the other countries of the world. Do you, therefore, take well to heart our wishes, each of you do his best, and assist us in gaining the object of our hopes."

RANDOLPH MACON COLLEGE.

A letter in the Richmond Dispatch, dated Ashland, February 29, says: "The number of matriculates at Randolph Macon College to this date is about one hundred and sixty-five; others are expected daily. Number will probably be increased to one hundred and seventy-five during this term. This is an increase of about thirty over last session. New society hall building is being covered in. It presents a very handsome appearance. One of the greatest curiosities to a bibliogist to be seen in the State is a library of about one thousand volumes recently received from China, direct, the bequest of Dr. Benjamin Jenkins, formerly missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a learned man in the language, and acted as interpreter to the English legation for the latter part of his life. He bequeathed this library to Randolph Macon College with the hope that some of its graduates would be turned in the direction of the benighted East. The collection embraces many very valuable works—some in Chinese and English; of the latter class is Confucius."

It generally takes twenty years of training to eradicate the word "nice" from a woman's vocabulary. "The Falls of Niagara, the psalms of David, and the progress of the human race," says a fond father, "were all nice to my oldest till she got married."

DOLLINGER ON REUNION.

Dr. Dollinger is delivering a series of lectures at Munich on "The Reuniting of the Christian Churches, and the Prospects of their Future Union." In his first lecture he gave a history of the separation of the Romish or Western, and the Greek or Eastern, and of the Protestant Reformation. In regard to the Reformed bodies, Dollinger acknowledged that they were absolutely thrust out from the old church, and that in consequence of that the doctrinal differences had become of greater dimension. Looking at it historically, the Reformation was unavoidable, as the church allowed no room for internal purification, and sooner or later a breach was inevitable. And the Reformation had done good, good to mankind and to the old church, in causing great advance in all territories of human intelligence; but three hundred and fifty years had sufficed to bring out all its benefit, and he thought the time for reunion should come. Such reunion might have many difficulties; but, in the opinion of many, now was the time in which the Petrine and Pauline churches should develop into the Johnian, or, as they said in the Middle Ages, "the church period of the Father and of the Son will be followed by the era of the Holy Spirit." How could this be? Let all church bodies learn of and impart to each other, and let them place the things in which they agreed higher than those in which they differed. Certain it is that the Church's Founder prayed for and willed unity for his disciples, and through this unity it was that the world was to know that the Father had sent him as Redeemer.—New York Observer.

Death of Mrs. Arabel (Wightman) Howell.—We have just learned with unfeigned sadness, says the Southern Christian Advocate, of the bereavement of our beloved Bishop Wightman by the death of his eldest child, Mrs. Arabel Howell, a few days since, at her home near Gadsden, Alabama. During his visit to Macon, last week, the Bishop expressed painful solicitude concerning his daughter, in consequence of intelligence he had received before leaving home; but we cherished the hope that he would be spared the blow which has fallen upon him. The sad announcement we now make will strike a sympathetic chord throughout the church, and will bring to his aching heart the balm which the Comforter imparts in answer to the fervent prayer of God's people. May its richest consolation sustain him and the stricken family under the burden of this heavy blow!

Bishop Doggett is Baltimore.—Bishop Doggett, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, has taken charge of Trinity church until the newly-appointed pastor, Dr. Young, of Nashville arrives. The Bishop preached twice on Sunday last. We had the pleasure of hearing his discourse in the evening, on Galatians vi, 14: "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." It was a masterly effort, and made a fine impression on the large and attentive audience. The sermon in the morning was pronounced, by those who heard it, one of Bishop Doggett's best. It was truly gratifying to find one of our chief pastors so promptly on hand to assume the responsibilities of the charge, and committing himself fully to all the services of the week, as well as the Sabbath. The Bishop will preach on next Sabbath, morning and night.

Doctor Young.—The unexpected transfer of Dr. Young to Trinity church, Baltimore, is deeply regretted by his congregation at Elm street, and by the citizens of Nashville generally. They grieve to lose the doctor and his estimable wife. But their loss will be the gain of others; and the transfer would not have been made by Bishop Paine without such reasons for it as not only justified it in his judgment, but also in that of Bishop Doggett, who was present at the session of the Baltimore Conference, and of Bishop Pierce, by whom Dr. Young was stationed at Elm street, and who was consulted as to the change. All the presiding elders requested Bishop Paine to transfer a minister for Trinity station. Under those circumstances our Elm street friends will, however sorrowfully, acquiesce loyally in the measure.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

"Why makes the sea get angry so often?" "Because it is so often crossed."

For the Advocate.

Superstition and Error, Ycleped A Catholic Locture.

Mr. Editor: There was recently given in this city something that pretended to be a lecture. The speaker was a Catholic priest, and his subject "The Marvelous Ways of Providence." It was a theme upon which great energy and research could have been put forth; but not so seemed to think this lecturer, for behold him, how he mutilates the truth and does injustice to his subject to advance Romish doctrines and errors. He opened his remarks with a preface on the beauties of "our most holy religion," a prelude to which every person who listens to a Catholic father is invariably treated, and gave as an instance of the marvelous an incident:

In Montreal a Protestant (heretic,) happening along a road one day, chanced to pick up a piece of paper, which was a leaf from a book written by Cardinal Wiseman, and its reading so impressed him that he was converted to Catholicism. A peculiar power that leaf must have had indeed.

But then, as the book was in all probability written to ensnare some one, is it anything wonderful that it did so? How much more wonderful was the conversion of a sinner to Christ by hearing, as he passed a simple and unpretending place of worship, the minister thunder forth the exclamation: "And as Christ said unto the people, so say I unto you; What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

But to continue, the reverend father next related the story which some years ago startled the country: that of the publication by a nun of her life in a convent, detailing all the interior uses and unltreatment of such institutions. The lecturer did not deny that such a book had been written, but attempted to prove that the nun only subscribed her name to the things contained therein on receiving a sum of money. Admitted; but then comes the question, What must have been the treatment of the woman if she, after spending nearly her whole life in the institution, snatched a proffered opportunity to give to the world a purport of her life? Was any such measure superinduced by mild discipline? Could she have been treated otherwise than harsh?

The lecturer added also that she afterward made a recantation, and rejoined the Catholic Church. No mention was made, however, of the threats of the priest which effected the same; alas!

Continuing, the gentleman gave another illustration of the marvelous, saying he remembered once of a Welsh woman who had a sick child. All medicines, it seems, had failed to effect a cure of the latter, and its life was despaired of, when at last an Irish nurse told the mother that the only thing capable of saving the child would be the drinking of chalice water. The mother, of course, allowed the child to be taken to church, so that it could drink of the water, and the result was a perfect cure! This so delighted her that she embraced the Catholic religion. To be taken as a fact, that incident has to go along with several heavy grains of allowance; but even admitting its truth, (?) don't it open a royal road to wealth? For, see! couldn't immense quantities of water be blessed, and bottled, and then sold as a complete cure-all? The sums of money that would roll into the coffers of the Catholic clergy would be fabulous if they would engage in this business, and foreclose any necessity at all for praying poor sinners out of purgatory at so much per head! The idea is too good to be lost.

The lecturer did not give his audience, however, any further information as regards this new medicine, but related another wonderful anecdote, which, strange to say, dealt a fatal blow at the healing properties with which, in a former incident, he had invested chalice water, and perhaps saved valuable lives by timely exposure.

There was once, he said, a nurse, (Catholic, of course,) who had charge of a little child, and while out one day took him to a priest's house to see several babies baptized. The ceremony so pleased him that he cried to be baptized also. It was done, and he died in a few hours after. The mother's grief was great, but subsided, however, when the nurse told her that her child had been baptized. Subsequently the whole family embraced Catholicism. For inconsistency these incidents should have the palm.

Having proceeded thus far, the reverend speaker then capped the climax of his wonders, and gave his opinion of the intellectual status of his hearers by a story, for the truth of which he could vouch:

In Virginia there was once a haunted house, which was occupied by a family named ——. No person could enter the building without having their clothing torn and cut to pieces. Fearful cries were heard all over the house, and the furniture destroyed by no perceptible means. A lady entered, through curiosity, at one time, but took the precaution to take from her head a valuable lace cap, and place it with a handkerchief in her pocket, before passing around. When she left the building both articles were still in her pocket, but torn to shreds. The gentleman of the house applied to a Lutheran minister, who came and prayed; but this only seemed to increase the discord. (Hard on the Lutherans.) A Methodist preacher was next called on. He brought a number of his flock to sing and pray, but it did no good, as the devils sent the furniture flying over their heads, and kept on yelling. A conjurer, who was master of his art, was also pressed into service, but still no relief. At last the master was advised to get a priest. The priest came and blessed the house, and quiet was restored! It lasted only four days, however, when it commenced again. The priest was called on a second time, and he told the family that they would have to join the Catholic Church. They did so, and were never troubled again. The speaker closed with the words, "Now that's true;" and probably nine out of every ten of his congregation took him at his word.

And this is what is given to the misguided devotees at the shrine of popery, by those who pretend to be the followers of Christ. "The Marvelous Ways of Providence!" Was ever a title so great a misnomer?

FROM THE WORK.

Rayville, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Editor: I am happy to inform you that the good Lord is with us on the Rayville circuit. I am now within one week of completing my second round on this work, and up to the present writing our membership has been increased by new members and the reclaiming of backsliders—thirty-eight—and we are now in the midst of an interesting meeting at this place, (Rayville.) Our brethren are greatly revived and encouraged, backsliders are being reclaimed and restored to the church, while many who have never been religious are deeply concerned for their salvation. We are expecting this good work to continue and to spread over the entire circuit, and kindle the revival flame on adjacent works; and, indeed, we pray that it may be extended over the entire district. We believe it will. Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Daves, is with us at our present meeting, full of zeal and faith, doing good service for our blessed Master. God willing, we intend to bring up a good report from Lake Providence district to the next Annual Conference. Pray for us. More anon. Your brother in Christ,

James L. Wright

Mr. Editor: Up to the close of the first Quarterly Conference I have received twenty-eight persons as candidates for membership, and some of these into full connection, and have baptized thirteen adults and children. The Lord's work is boldly going on. The old members are receiving fresh supplies of grace, and seem to be "growing in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior." I feel thankful in my heart for the personal blessings God has bestowed, and the displays of his mercies in the pardon of the sins of some of the most inveterate sinners. This is a general revival in town and country, and a part of the country has been under revival influence for about two years.

Two years ago I paid a visit to West Pearl, and, by the grace of God, began the work of preaching for the Lord, while he revived his work. Bro. Singleton kept it up till now, and still "the Lord is with us," thank God.

Bro. White has left some sign in his wake. Would like to see him here again, or any of the New Orleans preachers. Come over, doctor.

Yours, Henry P. Bowen.

A GOOD SERMON.

It should be brief: if lengthy it will steep
Our hearts in apathy, our eyes in sleep;
The dull will yawn, the chapel lounger doze,
Attention flag, and memory's portals close.

It should be wearing a living altar-coal,
To melt the icy heart, and charm the soul;
A sapless, dull harangue, however read,
Will never rouse the soul, or raise the dead.

It should be simple, practical and clear;
No fine-spun theory to please the ear,
No curious lay, to tickle letter's pride,
And leave the poor and plain unedified.

It should be tender and affectionate,
As his warm them who wept lost Satan's fate;
The fiery law with words of love allay'd,
Which sweetly warm and awfully persuade.

It should be manly, just and rational,
Wisely conceived, and well expressed withal;
Not stuff'd with silly notions, apt to stain
A sacred desk, and show a muddy brain.

It should possess a well-adapted grace
To situation, audience, time and place;
A sermon form'd for scholars, statesmen, lords,
With peasants and mechanics ill accords.

It should with evangelic beauties bloom,
Like Paul at Corinth, Athens, Rome.
Let some Epictetus or Sterne esteem;
A bleeding Jesus is the gospel theme.

It should be mixed with many an ardent prayer,
To reach the heart, and fix and fasten there;
When God and men are mutually address'd,
God grants a blessing—man is truly bless'd.

It should be closely, well applied at last,
To make the moral nail securely fast;
Thou art the man, and thou alone will make
A Felix tremble, and a David quake.

DR. BLEDSOE.

Mr. Editor: There is no reluctance on our part to concede to Dr. Bledsoe the distinction he has won for himself as a writer, metaphysician and scholar. Certainly no writer of this day surpasses him in clearness of conception, accuracy of statement, elegance of diction, and force of argument. Our admiration of him began with his publication of his treatise on the will, and we have eagerly read whatever he has since published. His Theodicy has been our text book for years, and in our estimation he has fairly met and signally vanquished the advocates of that system which implies the divine permission in the introduction of moral evil. We have vainly tried, however, to reconcile his opinions with regard to the question, "Why did God create man with a prescience that he would sin?" On page 201 (Theo.) he says: "God does not choose sin, or permit it as a means of the highest good, as if there could be any higher good than absolute and universal holiness." We suppose that Dr. Bledsoe means to assert that there can be "no higher good," etc., and we do not for a moment question its correctness. On page 203 he says: "The highest good of the universe may, no doubt, be promoted in various ways by the redemption of our fallen race, of which we have no conception in our present state of darkness and ignorance. * * * Now, if there had been no such thing as sin, the compassion of God would have been forever concealed from the eyes of his intelligent creatures. They might have adored his purity; but of that tender compassion, which calls up the deepest and most pleasurable emotions of the soul, they could have known absolutely nothing. They might have witnessed his love to sinless beings; but they could never have seen that love in its omnipotent yearning over the ruined and the lost. The attribute of mercy or compassion would have been forever locked up and concealed in the deep recesses of the divine mind; and the blessing and honor and glory and dominion, which shall be ascribed by the redeemed to him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, forever and ever, would not have been heard in the universe of God. The chord which now sends out the sweetest music in the harmony of heaven, filling its inhabitants with deep and rapturous emotions of sympathy and delight, would never have been touched by the finger of God." Again, on page 205, alluding to the practical result of reconciling (uniting) all things in Christ, he says: "This firm and unshaken allegiance of a weak and erring mortal to the throne of the most high God, presents a spectacle of moral grandeur and sublimity, to which the annals of eternity, but for the existence of sin, had presented no parallel." Again, on page 207: "For aught we know, the stability of the spiritual universe could not possibly have been secured in any other way, (than by redemption;) and hence, if there had been no fall and no redemption, the grand intellectual system, which is now so full of confidence and joy, might have been without a secure foundation."

Now Dr. Bledsoe believes, as every reader of the Bible must, that God hates sin—hates it as introducing disorder into the moral universe, as of fatal consequence to the sinner, as irreconcilably antagonistic to his nature, and yet its existence imparts a higher melody to the harps of heaven, gives stability to the allegiance of the subjects of the Most High, and opens the way for the otherwise concealed compassion of the divine nature. He had said there could be no greater good than universal holiness, but he has found that what of glory lay beyond the boundaries of universal holiness is brought to light by the introduction of sin and its resultants, redemption and the displays of divine compassion.

In estimating the comparative glory of the unfallen and the redeemed, it is not to be forgotten or overlooked that our standpoint is necessarily changed. Sin, like a dense cloud resting upon the world, has intercepted the light of God's countenance, the effulgence of his glory; and the whole economy of redemption is but the development of a system in which wisdom and goodness, working in unison with justice, labor to remedy an existing evil. Can it be necessary, or is it philosophic to suppose that this exhibition of the divine character is uncovering those ineffable splendors from the view, of which God, but for sin, must have forever withheld his creatures? that the shock which rent the vire of the temple revealed a benignity and glory which violence only could disclose? From man these were concealed, for his sin had separated between him and God; but sin had not obscured the visions of the angels, or shut them out from that compassion which, with ever-abounding wave, flows out from him "in whose presence is fullness of joy, and at whose right hand are pleasures forever more."

We are not able adequately to conceive what divine depth and grandeur is being revealed to those who have "never left their first estate," nor comprehend the riches of glory which shall be revealed in us; but reason and revelation alike teach us that while the unfallen adore the love which wins us back to our allegiance, they catch from the bosom of God a rapture which rolls over his dominions like a river of life. There shall be joy to the redeemed, for they have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," and the shout of the angels shall echo back that joy; but to them God was ever fully their "all and in all."

There seems to us another fatal objection to the hypothesis of Dr. Bledsoe. Admitting, as we readily do, the individuality of all accountable creatures, and the personal guilt of all who transgress the law, we ask, Will it in any measure mitigate the sufferings of the finally impenitent that they have even indirectly contributed to the stability and glory of the universe by their sin? or that the shouts of the redeemed may not be saddened by the reflection that, but for sin, they had not sounded the depths of the divine compassion, or felt secure in the possession of eternal life? It may be some relief, however, to both to learn (see page 208) that "God, whose prerogative it is to bring good out of evil, will turn the short-lived triumph of the powers of darkness into a glorious victory, and cause it to be a universal song of rejoicing to his great name throughout the endless ages of eternity." We cannot, however, admit this, even though we catch the glow of gladness, almost enthusiasm, which kindles upon the face of the accurate mathematician. Dr. Bledsoe accepts the doctrine of eternal punishment, as taught in the Bible, and has silenced the objections to it upon the ground of justice and the merit of guilt. How, then, can he so triumphantly assert that the dominion of the powers of darkness is short-lived, or that the song of rejoicing shall be universal?

From early life we have avoided the use of those hymns which teach that mankind have gained by Christ more than they lost in Adam; and whether the atonement was an "after-thought," or was purposed "in the counsels of infinite wisdom long before the foundations of the world were laid," it was introduced to counterwork the existence of moral evil in man, and is nowhere represented in the Bible as affording more sublime revelations of the divine nature, or opening up fountains of bliss for man, which, but for this, would have been concealed. In it justice and mercy have embraced each other, and God can be just and the justifier of the ungodly who believe in Jesus. W.

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

In the gospel, as written by St. Matthew, the great commission reads thus: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them," etc. Taking the language exactly as it stands in this quotation, and interpreting it according to the proper meaning of words in the English language, we have no hesitancy in declaring that the commission, as thus given by Christ, was never fulfilled. Lest this declaration should seem too bold and rash at first view, let us examine some of the terms. Christ says: "Teach all nations, baptizing them." What is a nation? "A body of people inhabiting the same country, or united under the same sovereign or government."—Webster. Now, will any man show upon the pages of history, or in the records of tradition, that any one "body of people inhabiting the same country" has ever been taught and baptized? And when we say "body of people" we mean every individual member of that special locality. This explanation applies to "nations" in the singular number, but the language of Christ is in the plural, and greatly increases the difficulty of the case; for if the commission has not been fulfilled in a single, solitary case of a "nation" in the capacity of a nation, of course much less of "nations" in the full possession of organic existence. Well, if the plain, common-sense English interpretation of the terms in the great commission involves an absurdity, and if there can be no facts adduced to prove the fulfillment of the commission as thus interpreted, how shall it be disposed of? The only mode of explanation, then, which can be pursued, so as to relieve the passage of absurdity and defeat, is that which will harmonize it with the idiom of Scripture, especially the parts of Scripture which precede it. Occupying this as our standpoint, we are prepared to explain and defend the truth and propriety of the language of the great commission. And in possessing this qualification we see the unity and beauty of the sacred Scriptures. We also see the oneness of the divine purpose in the organization of the church; and not only oneness of purpose in the divine mind, but oneness in the church itself. Thus, to explain the terms in the commission, we refer to the terms in the covenant between God and Abraham. In this reference we find unity in the term "nations," as it occurs in the commission and covenant. As the term "nations" occurs alike in the covenant and commission, it follows, as a matter of course, that if we explain the meaning of the term in one case we explain it in both. Now turn to the third verse of the twelfth chapter of Genesis, and we read as follows: "And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee (Abram) shall all families of the earth be blessed." Here the inspired writer explains to us the meaning of the term "nations" by that of "families." Hence we are prepared, by this interchange of terms, to read the great commission in the light of revealed truth, so as to set forth the practicability of its inflexible injunctions. Let us read it thus to see its beauty: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all families, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," etc. In confirmation of the above sense as the correct one, we call attention to the practice of the apostles, as recorded in the Acts. In this book there are frequent instances given in which the apostles baptized the "house" or "family," but not one in which they baptized a "nation" as defined by Mr. Webster.

If the foregoing be correct, then we plead the great commission as our authority for the apostolic practice of infant baptism, as well as the only true and successful mode of Christianizing the world. A departure from the instruction of the Lord Jesus Christ, as thus given, involves, as an inevitable necessity, the loss of the divine presence. Consequently the commission dictates both the foundation of authority and terms of practice, in the observance of which we may confidently expect the saving presence of the great Head of the Church. Hence, where the presence of Christ is acknowledged, there is proof of the proper observance of the teaching of Christ. Let us apply this reasoning to the theory of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as set forth in her practice, and we have a demonstration of her correctness in the thousands of happy souls brought forth into light and salvation "by the belief of the truth and sanctification of the Spirit."

CHURCH RULES.

Mr. Editor: There is great laxity among us with regard to our rules. We claim, in our Discipline, to derive our rules from the Bible. If so—and it is not denied—it is certainly the duty of all members to keep them. If we are "taught of God, in his written word, to observe all these rules," then they are just as binding as the Bible itself; not because they are part of the Discipline, but because derived from the Bible.

But again, every one who joins the church does so of his own free will and accord, and by the very act of joining, as well as by actual and solemn promise, agrees to keep the rules. Every violation, then, is a breaking of his own promise. But many not only break the rules, but try to justify themselves by saying that "they do not feel like they are doing wrong—that they cannot see any harm in this thing or that." Suppose they do not feel like they are doing wrong, or that they cannot see any harm in certain things—that does not justify them in breaking a solemn promise. Besides, the interpretation of these rules is not left to every one's whim; they have been explained for us by our ablest and best men, and we must take them as they have been thus explained. In the first place, they were put into the book, many years ago, by the wisest and best men we then had. From then until now the General Conference, composed of the same class of men, has been meeting every four years, partly for the very purpose of examining the Book of Discipline, to see if anything needed correction, and, if so, to take proper steps to have such correction made. Then the whole body of members and ministers have been reading and studying this book all the time; if there had been anything wrong, either in the rules themselves or in the explanation of them, it would certainly have been found out by this time. It seems to me that after our rules have stood such a test for so long a time, and our Bishops—men of acknowledged piety, wisdom and sound judgment—have all explained them in the same way, individual members should hesitate long before they presume to set up their judgment against that of the combined wisdom and piety of the church from its organization down to the present time. The truth is, we never hear the most truly pious members of the church objecting to the rules, or claiming to interpret them for themselves, but only the lukewarm and backslidden—those who desire to be conformed to this world, those who belong to the world in heart, and are a mere clog to the church. LEGISLATION AND TEMPERANCE.

Mr. Editor: A bill has been introduced into the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, which aims to afford more efficient means for the prevention of intemperance. We rejoice at this. The highest ends of government have already been thwarted too long by a mistaken fear of curtailing the liberties of the governed. The protection of the lives and property of citizens is admitted to be the most important object of legislation, yet a nefarious traffic is everywhere legalized, by which the lives and property of thousands of those very citizens are annually destroyed, with impunity. This is done in the name of liberty. We have been monomaniacs on the subject of liberty. In undertaking to avoid oppression, we have protected licentiousness. Antagonistic ideas are apt to run to extremes. Setting out with the falsest of false maxims, "All men are created free and equal," the entire current of our political thought has been vitiated by the poisonous error that lurks in its fountain. The truth is, men are created neither free nor equal, but the very reverse of both. Imagining liberty in itself to be the chief good of human existence, we have sacrificed the weal of a large majority of our citizens to protect the supposed rights of a small minority. We hazard nothing in asserting that more men suffer from lack of sufficient restraint than from curtailment of liberty. Men are oftener governed too little than too much. The fear of depriving a few men of the assumed right of selling poisonous beverages has sent hundreds of thousands to untimely graves. Our whisky-shops have cost more lives and more treasure than all our wars. But lest liberty—that chimerical goddess that holds deadly sway in our frenzied brains—should be offended, all this must be permitted to continue. In refraining from the suppression of intemperance the States of this Union have, from their foundation, been offering their sons, like Hindoo mothers, in superstitious blindness, to the Molock of liberty. If the unlawful sale or administration of arsenic should produce a single death, the life or purse of the offender must pay the penalty of the crime; but if, by the sale of intoxicating drinks, the lives, fortunes and happiness of thousands be destroyed, the seller must be spared as a compliment to the glorious goddess of liberty.

We are glad that the days of this folly seem to be passing away. It will go far toward relieving the land of the blighting curse of intemperance to place its criminality where it properly belongs. The courts of law are beginning to admit what the Greeks declared two thousand years ago, that a drunken man is a maniac; while benevolent associations are reclaiming many unfortunate inebriates by treating them on the supposition that they, and the sellers of the poison that steals their brains, are fitly represented by Eve and the Devil, in the original temptation. While the intemperate are much to be blamed, they are, we think, more to be pitied. Few men drink with the design of becoming drunk. A man, when under the influence of ardent spirits, can no more control his appetite or his actions than a sick man or a lunatic. We hope the Legislature will do something to take temptation out of the way of such. Why should not the seller be made liable for "consequential and all other damages" produced by his selling of liquor, as the bill above alluded to proposes to make him? The owner of the goring ox should pay for the harm done by him.

We had a government during the late war that was strong enough to suppress almost entirely the making and selling of ardent spirits. We would rejoice to find power enough somewhere to do the like again.

A Leaflet from the Wayside of Life.

GOD WILL BE MINDFUL OF US.

It was on a quiet Sabbath morning when, from the City hotel, I strayed with two friends to the —— church, at the eleven o'clock service. After the morning lesson, and a fervent prayer, the minister began to tell how God was mindful of us. The pathway of life was drawn, with its many turns, sometimes gentle, and sometimes abrupt, but all along its devious way, a trial here, a sorrow there, and a blessing yonder; yet, amid and through them all, the providence of God ran like a silver thread, stretching far away across the map of life; that, if affliction sometimes came like a storm and swept from us the dearest of objects of our love, it was still in mercy sent to loosen the cords that were binding us too fast to our moorings in this poor and transitory world. Who that has ever known a sorrow that cannot be told, but has known how suddenly its slumber of years may be broken, and its flood-tide of memory roll o'er the soul? In that dreadful war, when a wanderer at a wayside home, destitute of all save the necessaries of life, death came as a storm, and took from me her and all my little flock, save one. Who can measure the depth of that grief or paint the shadow of that night? To forget had been the care of years, and memory had been trained to tread lightly near its threshold, lest its footsteps might wake its sleeping sorrows. But when the minister told of those storms that sometimes come, and swoop from us those most dear, a cord too deep, too still, was touched, vibrating through all the lanes of memory, and, with a heart overburdened, I wandered again to that wayside home. In its starless night how often had I gazed to trace the silver thread of that Providence who doeth all things well. Long years have elapsed, and the pathway of life has stretched away with alternate cloud and sunshine, but the lost ones of earth have become ministering spirits and angels in heaven. The cord that bound me to the world was rudely broken; but the silver thread that stretches far away in the future of life is now a cord of love that reaches from earth to heaven. Along its line there sometimes come, when life grows bitter and dreary, sweet messages of peace and love, sweet memories, bright days that never end, and whisperings in the ear of murmuring sorrow, that for the wayside home, made desolate by the storm of life, had been built for us a royal mansion in our Father's house. Mr. Beecher and Women Speaking in Church.

Mr. Editor: On Sunday evening, February 11, 1872, Mr. Beecher preached a sermon on—"Do the Scriptures forbid women to preach?" He took for his text First Corinthians xiv, 34, 35: "Let your women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." He assumed that the Scriptures are of binding authority upon faith and practice when its meaning is fairly and finally interpreted, but regarded this command as local, national and transient, and therefore argued that women were permitted to speak in meetings.

On the following Friday evening, February 16, at his prayer meeting, after delivering a lecture on "The Higher Christian Life," two ladies—Mrs. Boardman and Miss Drake—had each something to say.

It occurs to me that Mr. Beecher is "in for it" now, to use a vulgar phrase. He has got the woman of his congregation started.

But there is one hopeful aspect to this matter, if those two ladies are fair specimens of the female members of his church, judging from their remarks on the evening of the sixteenth ultimo. Mrs. Boardman said: "When I was converted my conversion was so marked, so clear, so decided that I never could have a doubt of it. I went on for three years in the ordinary Christian way, battling against my besetting sins. * * * But at the end of three years I was taught a very different way. * * * I found that Jesus Christ would do all that work for me. After I learned this my life was changed. Oh, how changed it was! How calm and serene it became! There was such a resting on Jesus!"

Miss Drake said: "For years I worked and worked to get the Christian graces, and fit myself for salvation by Christ. And oh, how hard that was! My heart ached, and found no rest until I was willing to accept the words of Christ, * * * and trust in him. After that doubts went from me, and there seemed to be a full resting in the righteousness of Christ—in his merits, in his atonement. * * * In this there was peace and joy in my soul."

Judging from these specimens, Mr. Beecher's female members are more orthodox on the subject of conversion, and the help received from Jesus in our religious life, than their pastor. After all, this "new departure" in the Plymouth pulpit may result in good, however we may differ from him in regard to the application of the words of Paul, forbidding women to speak in the church. OBSERVER.

IN MEMORIAM.

REV. JAMES H. AVARA.

James Henry Avara was born in Johnson county, North Carolina, January 29, 1817. His parents moved to the city of Raleigh, North Carolina, when he was about two years old, where he received his education—all he obtained. At about eleven years of age he was taken from school and placed in a gin-shop, as an apprentice, to learn the trade of gin-builder.

His parents moved to Tuskaloosa, Alabama, some time previous to his conversion, which took place at Rock Spring camp ground, near the town of Tuskaloosa, September 23, 1833, about nine o'clock P. M. Some time after his conversion and connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church he was appointed class-leader. Subsequently he was licensed to preach, when he was about twenty-one years old, and recommended to the Alabama Annual Conference, in which he travelled one year. Of his own choice he then retired from the itinerant life to that of local preacher.

He was ordained to the office of deacon in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the town of Canton, Mississippi, by Bishop Robert Paine, December 21, 1847.

He was married in Green county, Alabama, in January, 1840, and moved to Carroll county, Mississippi, in the latter part of the same year. From here he moved to Louisiana in 1861. Again he moved to Mississippi in 1866; to Honduras in 1867; to Texas in 1868—first to Colin county, and afterward settled in Gardon Valley, Smith county, where he engaged in farming and merchandising.

Thinking to improve his failing health, he sold out with the intention of moving to the coast of Texas; but instead of that he moved to the heavenly country—where "sickness and sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more"—December 20, 1871.

During my acquaintance with him I always found him zealous in the cause of God. His piety was deep, solid, earnest. His faith was strong, active, reliant. His love was abiding, fervent, increasing. In his attachment to his friends I knew none more constant. In his love for his family none excelled him. His sympathies were easily touched—he could weep with those who wept, and rejoice with those who rejoiced. His conversation was about the love of God, the salvation of sinners, and heavenly enjoyments. He seemed to live only that he might do good and get good—that he might be more holy. He desired, above all things, "holiness, without which no man can see the Lord."

As a preacher he was plain, practical, and often pointed. His health for some time was such that he could preach but little; but his desire was to do good. As a husband and father he was devoted to the interests of his family. Nothing, however dear, was allowed to come between him and his Savior.

James H. Avara is no more among us. We miss him at home, at church, and in the business walks of life. He can come no more to us, but we can go where he is. His departure was triumphant. He often spoke of the rest of the saints in heaven. A few hours before he died, when I asked him of his future prospects, he exclaimed: "I am nearly home, nearly home!" In his last moments he seemed in an ecstasy of joy—as one

"Quite on the verge of heaven."

The sympathies of an afflicted community and the love of the church are aroused in behalf of the sorrowing and bereaved family. May grace sustain them in this their sad trial, and may the Holy Spirit lead them through life, that they may all be joined together in our Father's house, to dwell with loved ones forever. J. C. ALL LOVE.

This life to me hath ever been
With summer sunshine bright;
Of all, I would not change one scene
That marked it, if I might.
Though here and there some other lot
Than I had wished befell,
Truth never failed, nor love forgot;
All have been wondrous well.

My share of sorrow and distress
Hath been in mercy sent;
But not one drop of bitterness
With all my suffering blent.
I have wept tears of tender grief,
When joy and I must part;
Tears which have brought their own relief
Back to the stricken heart;

And places once so dearly filled,
Around my happy hearth,
Are vacant now; forever stilled
Its once delicious mirth.
But yet my soul does not complain,
Counting its treasures o'er;
Nor would I bring back one again,
If wishes could restore.

Deep in their very loss there lies
What death cannot destroy;
I would not give my memories
For all another's joy.
No! blest beyond what words could say,
Hath been his gentle care,
Who never turned his face away,
Or answered not my prayer;

Who never kept me back from good,
Nor laid upon me ill;
But often, in his mercy stood
Between me and my will.
Life is too short to tell his praise,
My joy in him to prove;
Whose one long lesson, all my days,
Begins and ends with Love.

ANTICIPATION.

When failing health, or cross event,
Or dull monotony of days,
Has brought me into discontent,
That darkens round me like a haze,
I find it wholesome to recall
Those chiefest goods my life has known,
Those whitest days, that brightened all
The checkered seasons that are flown.

No year has passed but gave me some;
O unborn years, nor one of you—
So from the past I learn—shall come
Without such precious tribute due.
I can be patient, since amid
The days that seem so overcast,
Such future golden hours are hid
As those I see amid the past.

Chambers' Journal.

CONVERSION OF CONSTANTINE,

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN EMPEROR.

BY JOHN S. C. ABBOTT.

Early in the fourth century Constantine was Emperor at Rome. Though not a Christian, he had been trained under Christian influences, and revered his pious mother. It was doubtless her example which mainly influenced her illustrious son eventually to embrace the gospel. Through her long life she was the munificent friend of the Christians, traveling from place to place to aid them with her money and her personal influence. She died at the age of eighty years, a true mother in Israel. The great fact of his conversion, or at least of his nominal acceptance of Christianity, is undoubted. The legend of the manner of his conversion has been the subject of a great deal of critical and historical discussion. Without entering into that, or attempting to determine how much credence is to be attached to the marvelous story, we relate it here as it is told by cotemporary writers.

A Roman general, Maxentius, an inveterate pagan, raised the standard of rebellion while Constantine was absent from Rome, in Britain. Two immense hostile armies soon faced each other upon the plains of Piedmont. Maxentius supplicated the aid of the Roman gods, by the most gorgeous ceremonies, and the most costly sacrifices. Constantine appealed to the God of the Christians.

While engaged in this act of devotion, he observed a remarkable appearance in the heavens, where there emerged in wonderful distinctness and effulgence, a cross, with this inscription: "In Hoc Signo Vinces"—Under this sign thou shalt conquer. The miraculous apparition was seen by the whole army. He was pondering the significance of this vision, when night came on. In a dream Jesus Christ appeared to the Emperor with the same cross which Constantine had seen in the heavens, and directed him to have a banner made upon that pattern, and beneath that banner to lead his army to victory over their pagan foes.

With the earliest dawn Constantine arose, and summoning his principal officers before him, informed them of the standard which he wished to have immediately constructed. A slender cross was made by traversing a long pike staff with a cross-bar. This was gilded and encrusted with the most precious gems. A crown of gold and diamonds surmounted the staff. To this there was attached a small silken flag, richly embroidered with gold and jewels, and containing the monogram of Christ.

Above and beneath this silken banner were images in gold of the Emperor and his children. In addition to this imperial banner, which rose over the tent of the Emperor, there were other similar ones constructed on a smaller scale, one for each division of the army. Constantine had also imprinted upon his helmet an image of the cross, and one also upon the shield of every soldier. He summoned several bishops to his presence, that they might instruct him respecting the character of Jesus, his mission and his career.

The twenty-eighth of October of the year 312 had arrived. Constantine had with him but forty thousand troops. When within nine miles of Rome he encountered the army of Maxentius strongly entrenched. A terrible battle ensued. Maxentius was utterly routed. In endeavoring to escape across the Tiber, by the Milvian bridge, he was crowded, by the fugitives, into the river. From the weight of his armor he sank like lead. The next day his body was dragged from the mud, and the soldiers, having cut off his head, paraded it on a pole, while Constantine entered Rome in triumph.

At this time the Roman world had been divided into two portions, the Eastern and the Western. All over both empires the officers of the government were ordered no longer to molest the Christians, but to protect them. Christians were no longer persecuted. Constantine wrote letters in their favor, invited distinguished pastors to his table, appointed Christians to important offices, and contributed liberally to building and repairing churches. He issued decrees urging the observance of the Lord's day, and forbade the cross from ever again being used as an instrument of punishment. The banner of the cross, like the ancient ark of the covenant, was very conspicuously borne before his armies.

Though it was now the wish of Constantine that Christianity should be the recognized religion of the empire, and though he encouraged the worship of the true God in all the ways in his power, still he favored entire toleration. He chose Byzantium as the capital of the reunited empire, giving it the name of Constantinople. Churches rose all over the land. Conversions from paganism became frequent and numerous.

The conversion of Constantine to Christianity was at first intellectual only, not the regeneration of the heart. He was a nominal Christian, like thousands now who do not even profess to be Christ's spiritual followers. There is no evidence that he had been born again of the Holy Spirit, or that he had accepted Christ as his personal, atoning Savior.

But later in his life a tragic event exerted a very powerful influence upon his mind, and produced apparently a deeper and more radical change in his character. As a second wife he married a beautiful woman, named Fausta, much younger than himself. She was about the age of the Emperor's very handsome son, Crispus. Fausta fell in love with this young man. Virtuously he repelled her advances. It is written: "Hell has no fury like a woman scorned." Fausta rushed to Constantine, and accused Crispus of atrocious crime. The imperial father, in the frenzy of his rage, ordered his son to be led instantly to execution. His dead body was hardly in the tomb ere the truth of his wife's guilt, and his son's innocence was made known to the unhappy Emperor. In the delirium of his anguish he ordered Fausta to be drowned in her bath.

"Henceforward for Constantine life was but a dismal day. He never recovered from the gloom of these events. It was said that he never was known to smile again; that for forty days he fasted, weeping and groaning, and denying himself all comforts, and that he erected a golden statue to Crispus, with this simple, pathetic inscription:

"To my son, whom I unjustly condemned."

The cares and sorrows of life tend to lead every thoughtful mind to the religion of Jesus. Constantine had become a world-weary, heart-broken old man, sixty-four years of age. Rapidly increasing infirmities admonished him that he must appear before the judgment-seat of Christ—that Savior whose authority his intellect had been constrained to recognize, but to whom, as yet, he had not fully surrendered his heart.

Deeply depressed in spirits, and sinking beneath his maladies, he retired to some warm springs in Asia. Death was slowly but steadily approaching. Constantine repaired to the church, and, with tears and prayers and deep searchings of soul, sought preparation to meet God. Having obtained, as he thought, the assurance that his sins were forgiven, he assembled all the bishops of the neighboring churches in his palace, near the city of Nicomedia, and, with as much publicity as could be exercised without ostentation, confessed his Savior before men, by publicly uniting with his church, and partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Eusebius, the renowned bishop of Nicomedia, received the royal penitent, and administered to him the sacred elements. It is to the pen of this illustrious bishop that we are indebted for the story of these incidents in the religious history of Constantine.—Christian Weekly.

ROLL all thy guilt on the back, and weep thy sorrows out on the bosom of the Savior.—Guthrie.

ANECDOTE OF ROWLAND HILL.

Rowland Hill was once driven by a storm of rain into a village inn, and compelled to spend the night. When it grew late the landlord sent a request by the waiter that the guest would go to bed. Mr. Hill replied: "I have been waiting a long time, expecting to be called to family prayer." "Family prayer! I don't know what you mean, sir; we never have such things here." "Indeed! then tell your master I cannot go to bed until we have had family prayer." The waiter informed his master, who, in great consternation, bounced into the room occupied by the faithful minister, and said: "Sir, I wish you would go to bed. I cannot go till I have seen all the lights out; I am so afraid of fire." "So am I," was the reply, "but I have been expecting to be summoned to family prayer." "All very good, sir, but it cannot be done at an inn." "Indeed! then pray get me my horse. I cannot sleep in a house where there is no family prayer." The host preferred to dismiss his prejudice, rather than his guest, and said: "I have no objection to have prayer; but I don't know how." "Well, then, summon your people, and let us see what can be done." The landlord obeyed, and in a few minutes the astonished domestics were upon their knees, and the landlord called upon to pray. "Sir, I never prayed in my life. I don't know how." "Ask God to teach you," was the gentle reply. The landlord said, folding his hands: "God, teach us how to pray." "That is prayer, my friend," cried Mr. Hill, joyfully; "go on." "I am sure I don't know what to say now, sir." "Yes, you do; God has taught you how to pray. Now thank him for it." "Thank you, God Almighty, for letting us pray to you!" "Amen! amen!" exclaimed Mr. Hill, and prayed himself. Two years afterward Mr. Hill found in that village a chapel and a school as the result of the first effort of family prayer at the "Black Lion."

A THRESHER.—Walking in the country, says the Rev. W. Jay, I went into a barn, where I found a thresher at his work. I addressed him in the words of Solomon: "In all labor there is profit." Leaning upon his flail, with much energy he answered: "Sir, that is the truth; but there is one exception to it; I have long labored in the service of sin, but I have got no profit by my labor." "Then you know something of the apostle's meaning when he asked: 'What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed?'" "Thank God," said he, "I do; and I also know that now, being freed from sin, and having become a servant unto righteousness, I have my fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life!" How valuable this simple faith in the word of God! and how true is the saying of a deceased writer: "Piety found in a barn is better than the most splendid pleasures of a palace!"

A PHYSICIAN was once returning to his home, when he saw a little child in great peril in the street. Another instant she would have been crushed under the iron hoofs which were almost upon her. At great peril to himself he rushed forward, and, seizing the little one, bore her safely to the sidewalk. Curiosity impelled him to look into the child's face, that he might see if he knew whom he had rescued. Pushing back the little bonnet, what were his feelings to see that it was his own little daughter whose life he had saved. So he who hastes to save the perishing often finds rewards he little dreamed of. "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do with thy might."

THE GIRL AND THE PORTRAIT.—I remember hearing of a girl who went into her master's room, a room not much frequented, to steal. Now, there was a portrait in the room, and the eyes of the portrait seemed to follow her wherever she went, and she felt annoyed by it, and in order that she might steal without this rebuke, she took down the portrait, and cut the eyes out. Poor, silly, wicked thing! If she could have plucked out God's eye she might have sinned without remorse.—Wilson's Scripture Doctrine.

NOVELTY AT HARVARD.—George Bancroft, the historian and United States minister at Berlin, proposes to give to Harvard College a permanent fund, the income of which is to defray the expenses of a traveling fellowship. The fellow is to be selected from the bachelors of arts annually created, and he is to journey in foreign countries, under instructions from the college, for one year. The idea, though new to us, is old in English and German universities.

THE king and the beggar, the rich and the poor, the happy and the miserable, are on equal terms one-thirtieth of their lives.

FOR other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.—First Cor. iii, 11.

"IN ALL PARTS OF PERU," says a recent traveler, "except among the savage Indian tribes, Christianity, at least nominally, prevails. The aborigines, however, converted by the sword in the old days of Spanish persecution, do not, as a rule, seem to have more notion of that faith in the country parts than such as may be obtained from stray visits of some errant, image-hearing friar, whose principal object is to obtain sundry reals in consideration of prayers offered to his little idols. These nomadic friars also distribute execrably-colored prints of various saints, besides having indulgences for sale. As to the nature of the pious offerings from their disciples they are not at all particular. They go upon the easy principle that all is fish that comes into their net. If the ignorant and superstitious givers have not 'filthy lucre' wherewithal to propitiate the ugly represented saints, wax candles, silver ore, cacao, sugar, and any other description of property, are as readily received. Thus it often happens that these peripatetic friars have a long convoy of heavily-laden mules with which to gladden the members of their monastery when they return home.

"The priests in all parts of Peru dress in a very extraordinary, not to say outlandish, manner. One of the lower grade wears a very capacious shovel-hat, projecting as much in front as behind, and looking very like a double-ended coal-heaver's hat. A loose black serge robe covers him all over, as with a funeral pall, and, being fastened together only at the neck, gives to his often obese figure an appearance the very reverse of grave or serious. The superior of a monastery, or the priest in charge of a parish, wears a more stately clerical costume. His hat is of formidable dimensions—a huge, flat, Chinese-umbrella shaped sort of a concern, which cannot be compared to anything else in creation. He also affects ruffles and lace, a long cassock, and a voluminous cloak like many of those of Geneva combined together; black silk stockings and low shoes, and a huge umbrella in red velvet, complete the clerical array of the higher ecclesiastics."—Appletons' Journal.

AVILOQUY.—Birds naturally hold a high position in creation, and with the ancient Romans the leader of an enterprise was known as dux. In our day no one would think of sending a goose in reply to a note, and yet formerly the bird was an auser.

The greatest philosophers among birds are the crows, because they never complain without caws. If our judges during the heated term would own a rookery, they could have frequent opportunities to hear caws; but every crow that is a raven should at once be put in a lunatic asylum.

Chickens should not be allowed to amuse themselves, as it always results in fowl play.

Birds were never known to preach, but the larger species prey continually.

Tame pigeons have no India rubber in their make-up, and yet they are noted for being gutter perchers.

Among birds the rooster is the chorister, and he practices the chromatic scale every morning.

The throats of birds are quite small; hawks, however, often take large-swallows.

Birds are not engaged in the transportation business, nor do they have any expresses, although buzzards and crows are in the carrion line.

In general, birds do not suffer with colds in their heads, yet the smaller kinds are liable to hack, and the domestic fowl to spit.—Hearth and Home.

MISS AMANDA WAY.—The Winchester (Indiana) Journal has the following:

Miss Amanda Way has been licensed as a preacher by the Methodist Episcopal Church, and on Sabbath evening last preached at the Methodist Episcopal church in this city. A larger portion of her discourse was written, and partook more of the character of a well-written essay than of a sermon. The audience was a large one, and listened attentively to the speaker. Miss Way is a pleasant speaker, but she speaks much better without manuscript than with it. We believe she is the first licensed lady preacher in the North Indiana Conference, if not in the State.

THE medical commission sent by the Sultan in Persia, near the Turkish borders, to decide on the character of the pestilence raging there, have reported that it is the regular Eastern plague. The malady takes the form of a slow fever, with typhus symptoms, with bubos under the arms, in groin and neck, carbuncles, and general eruption over the whole body. It carries the sufferer off quickly, attacking neighborhoods and entire families, and is transmitted from town to town. In the region of Persia affected there has been no famine or unusual scarcity of food. The mortality of the scourge, up to the last accounts, had reached nearly five hundred.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PRACTICAL CHRISTIAN WORK.—The German deaconesses in Jerusalem have nursed one thousand four hundred and fourteen patients of nine different sects during the last two years. In their institution, significantly named "Talitha-cumi," they have instructed in the principles of Christianity over one hundred young girls.

BLESSING THE MEN OF THE SEA.—The American Seamen's Friend Society are endeavoring to provide interesting and instructive literature for the men who man our merchant and naval vessels. They have sent out four thousand ships' libraries, containing about two hundred thousand volumes, which are in constant circulation on shipboard.

THE PARIS CHAPEL.—Rev. E. W. Hitchcock, the pastor of the Fourteenth street Presbyterian church, New York, having been appointed by the American and Foreign Christian Union as minister in charge of the American chapel in Paris, and having been invited by the congregation there to accept, has announced to his people his intention of complying with the request.

THEN AND NOW.—The price of a Bible in the time of Edward the First was thirty-seven pounds, while the price of a day's labor was three half pence, at which rates it would have taken a laborer over fifteen years to earn a Bible. The price of Bibles now ranges from forty cents up to $5, while the price of a day's labor is from $2.50 to $4. We cannot too highly appreciate the privilege of cheap books.

A FRUIT OF MISSIONS.—The cornerstone of a suitable and commanding edifice designed for a Protestant college was recently laid at Beyroot, Syria, at which an eloquent address was delivered by Hon. William E. Dodge, of New York, who has contributed liberally for the enterprise. The college is to be open to the natives of all nationalities and faiths, but all will be instructed in the principles of Christianity.

THE FOOCHOW MISSION.—Reports have been received of the eleventh annual meeting of this mission in China of the Methodist Church. The work is under the care of four missionaries from this country, four ordained native elders, two ordained native deacons, ten unordained native preachers, and fifty on trial. They number now one thousand and seven members, and six hundred and fifty-three probationers. An interesting and hopeful feature of the mission is the increasing readiness of the people to support the mission work. Three of the native preachers now trust themselves entirely to native support.

IT IS a singular fact that the Jews, who are generally thought to be extremely rigid in adhering to old customs and precedents, are divided into three schools of belief or practice in this country. One is of those who are conservative of old forms and habits in synagogue education and worship; another of those who, in education and synagogues and worship, conform to progressive American ideas; a third of those who, under the name of Ritualism, propose to drop all the externals of Judaism, and retain only a pure Deism, not differing essentially from the absolute religion of Theodoro Parker, or that of the Society of Free Religionists.

THE Rev. W. C. Van Meter, of the "Home for Little Wanderers," New York, has been commissioned by the Bible and Publication Society to undertake a special mission to the children in Rome, and endeavor to do in the capital of Italy and of the papacy what he has so successfully done here. His own repeated visits to Rome, and the earnest representations of those who knew Italy and its needs, have assured him that his plans are not only practicable, but pre-eminently adapted to effect a most urgent work. It is expected that the expense, $10,000, will be sustained by general contributions, without drawing on the society's funds.

THE New York correspondent of the Episcopalian states that at the present time the Roman Catholic population of New York amounts to 400,000 souls, for whom there are only forty churches. The combined so-called Protestant population today amounts to 600,000, to accommodate which there are no less than 380 churches. In other words, Protestants have one church edifice for every 1,500 persons, while the Roman Catholics have only one for every 4,400 persons. But this is not all. The actual accommodations of the forty Roman Catholic churches amount to only 56,000 sittings. Our own church alone has 60,000. It is very clear, therefore, that there are physical reasons for Roman Catholic crowds. With the same church accommodations, it is very questionable whether Roman Catholics would maintain that aspect of superior devotion which some quote.

AMERICAN PEACE SOCIETY.—This institution was formed in 1828. It derives its life and inspiration from Christianity. Elihu Burritt, in a recent address at Northampton, stated that the last year the United States paid $5 for taxes imposed in consequence of war for every cent raised to carry on the great religious enterprises of the age; that eighty-five per cent. of the yearly income of Great Britain is expended in the payment of war taxes. The object of the Peace Society is to illustrate the inconsistency of war with Christianity, to show its baleful influence on all the interests of mankind, and by the use of the pulpit, the platform, the press, and various other instrumentalities, to produce a strong public sentiment in favor of settling national difficulties by peaceful methods.

A LARGE CHURCH.—The Plymouth church, Brooklyn, New York, Rev. H. W. Beecher, pastor, has a membership of 2,116, of whom 206 were received during the year ending December 10, 1871. The receipts of the church during the year were $85,778, of which $56,774 were from pew rents, and $29,004 for charitable purposes. Rev. Mr. Halliday has acted as an assistant to the pastor in various ways, and especially in the matter of visitation—has made 2,311 visits and attended 568 meetings, funeral services, etc. The Bethel mission, connected with the church, is fitted up with every convenience, and will accommodate more than 1,200 persons. It is specially intended for the working classes, and they take advantage of its opportunities largely. It is in use every day and evening of the week.

A PEKIN correspondent of the North China Herald (received by the French mail) gives an account of a violent attack by a mob on the American missionary. One of the American missionary societies (the writer says) had succeeded in planting a station in Yujok, a large city about eighty miles west of Pekin. There was some difficulty in getting possession of the premises, after the lease had been drawn and the advance money paid. There has been considerable opposition and persecution clearly traceable to the officials. On a recent Sunday the Rev. Mr. Pearson was interrupted while preaching, and such a hostile spirit manifested that he thought it wise to withdraw. He was, however, followed and waylaid, thrown down, beaten, and pelted with stones. When he reached home his clothes were soiled and torn, and the blood was running freely from wounds in the face and head. What notice the American government will take of this affair remains to be seen.

GABOON.—West Africa.—Rev. Albert Bushnell, of Gaboon, gives a most interesting account of the work of God in his field, in the last Bible Society Record. He says: "I may thankfully add, the word of the Lord is having free course and being glorified here at Gaboon, where it has long been preached and read. About thirty are indulging the hope of having recently passed from death unto life, one-half of whom were received into the church at our last communion season. Our chapel is crowded, and two evenings in the week I devote to the guiding of inquiring souls to 'the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.' And we hope and pray that these mercy-drops may be only precursors of an abundant shower that is to refresh all of this moral Sahara, where we have so long been sowing the gospel seed. Will it not encourage the hearts of the patrons of your society, and stimulate them to greater zeal, to know that they are co-workers with us in this good work in dark Ethiopia?"

THE American and Foreign Christian Union have prepared a circular, containing testimonials from missionaries and others, to the superior effectiveness of the work of a Union society in papal and Greek Church countries, over that of any society supported by a single denomination only. Miss Rankin, of Mexico, writes, December 5, 1871: "A united front can only compete successfully with such a formidable foe as the Romish Church. Unity is the boasted bulwark of the papacy, and is it not highly important that Protestantism, the only true religion, should assume the same aspect in the deadly encounter with this awful foe of God and man?" Dr. Kalopothakes, of Greece, says, September 5: "I am a thorough Presbyterian in principle, but if I should present myself under a denominational name I would at once lose half my influence." Dr. Van Nest, of Italy, in December: "It is most important, in the face of popery, that we Protestants should present a united front; and it would be a great misfortune to Italy to have our several denominations entering the field with various and conflicting agencies." A correspondent of the London Times wrote from Madrid, May 4: "The Spaniards cannot understand the niceties of distinction between Churchmen and Dissenters, Baptists, Methodists, Plymouth Brethren, etc., and they are apt to look upon them as so many mortal enemies to each other." Opinions are also given, of divines and religious organizations of several denominations, corroborating these views.

THE RESURRECTION.

This doctrine is peculiar to the Scriptures. It is found nowhere outside of divine revelation. It stands upon the single testimony of the word of God, without anything in reason or nature to confirm. It has distinguished the faith of God's people always. The Old Testament speaks of it. Job, David, Isaiah, Daniel refer to it as a subject of hope and confident expectation. In the New Testament it is more clearly exhibited, and especially in connection with the resurrection of Christ. It is presented simply as a fact of revelation. The Savior's resurrection is a matter of fact, adequately attested by witnesses, and as predicted by the pen of inspiration. No other evidence is sought. The power of God is adduced as the ample cause. This is the only argument apart from the testimony of witnesses. It is not a thing incredible "that God should raise the dead." Christ shall change our vile body, and fashion it gloriously, "according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself." All the difficulties that may suggest themselves are met by this single rejoinder. It is not incredible that God should do it. The wondrous power, the marvelous working which is able to subdue all things can accomplish this.

Inspired men need no other argument. God has declared that the dead shall be raised, and he is able to accomplish the mighty event. In the discourse in the Corinthians Paul does not attempt to prove the resurrection from analogies in nature, but merely to illustrate the difference between the body as it now is and as it will be. "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" If the resurrection brings back the grossness, infirmities and appetites of the present vile body, it would be a curse rather than a blessing. Belief in the moral evil of matter led many to deny the literal resurrection, and to resolve it into a figurative and spiritual import. The Manichean heresy of the third century, and the Swedenborgian of our own times, existed in effect in Paul's day. But a literal resurrection involves neither sensuality nor sin. Such is the apostle's argument. The dead seed springs up into a plant of beauty. There is, even here, a difference in the flesh of men, beasts, fishes and birds. There is a difference in the glory of the heavenly bodies. These allusions are to illustrate the difference between the natural and the spiritual body. "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power." These familiar phenomena may serve to illustrate the difference between the body in its present condition, and the body as changed and glorified in the resurrection, and by them a popular objection was met; but they prove nothing as to the fact that the dead shall be raised. The vicissitudes of night and day, of winter and summer, the death and revival of vegetation, the worm living afterward in the brilliant butterfly, are analogies and types which in some degree exhibit the power and illustrate the processes by which the resurrection is attained, but they do nothing more. It is purely a disclosure of revelation, and outside of the Bible there is no intimation or assurance that the grave shall ever give up its slumbering dust.

The resurrection of Christ may be regarded as the crowning miracle of the gospel, and as its sufficient authentication. If he did indeed rise from the dead, he is sealed thereby as the Messiah and the Savior of the world. He was "declared to be the Son of God, with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." This is the grand demonstration, and as such it was proclaimed by the apostles. If this be not true, the whole of Christianity is a delusion, and Christ was an imposter, and not a Savior. Christian faith and experience are intimately connected with it. Salvation is grounded upon it. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." From the preaching and writings of the apostles it is evident that the first and fiercest battles for Christianity were fought upon this ground. The resurrection of Christ vindicated and established the entire system. A crucified Savior, to be an object of faith and hope, must be also a risen Savior, triumphing over death, and ever living at the right hand of God.

His resurrection is also vitally connected with the doctrine of a general resurrection. "Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's, at his coming." He rose as the second Adam, as the representative and Redeemer of the race. The translations of Enoch and Elijah were intimations of what might be; the reviving of Christ assures us that all that are in the graves shall come forth. The redemption of the body is the completion of his work, and his most impressive title, in a world of death and graves, is "the resurrection and the life." His resurrection brought life and immortality to light as no words or promises could ever have done. The believer's life and hope are bound up in the resurrection of his Lord. The Spirit which sanctifies and comforts his soul is an inward earnest and assurance. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by (or because of) his Spirit that dwelleth in you." And this passage serves to explain another profound declaration of Paul: "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." To know the power of such a resurrection, and to attain to it, is the loftiest object of Christian endeavor. There is a fellowship of suffering, conformity to death, and the knowledge of this resurrection power, and these are the preliminary experiences to the resurrection longed for. A holy life thus aims distinctly at the resurrection as the final bloom and fruition; and the power of this resurrection is the Spirit which dwells in us. As a motive and object, a distinction is implied between the resurrection of the just and the resurrection of the wicked. It is to avoid the shame and everlasting contempt, "the resurrection of damnation," and to secure the resurrection to eternal life, for which the Christian strives. This hope is interwoven with the entire religious life, it is assured and foreshadowed by the work and witness of the Holy Spirit, and is essential to that fellowship with Christ which begins in suffering and holiness, and ends in partaking of his glory.

POOR ROMANISTS.

BY JEFFERSON HAMILTON, D. D.

"Every King in Europe has now abandoned the cause of the Pope."—Catholic World.

The kings of Europe have known popes and popery for a long time, and known them well; they know their virtues and their vices, and if there was any conservative and healthful influence in or about them, they would be very glad of their assistance in upholding and giving strength to the State. But they have ascertained, after long trial, that if their people are to be intelligent and prosperous, they must shake off the incubus of political Romanism; and Romanism is never itself when it is not in politics.

It is a noticeable feature of the age that the longer and more intimately nations have known Catholicism the more anxious they are to break its yoke.

But if the Pope and his friends were engaged in the same work that Peter and Paul were engaged in, they would care very little whether kings smiled or frowned; the guarantee of their success would be found in their commission and their work. It is only when a church acts the part described (Revelations xvii, 2, and xviii, 3) that the coldness of kings is painful. Let Romanism become chaste and virtuous, and fit for kings and rulers.

The Irish World, commenting upon the above extract, says "that all the temporal sway ever wielded by the popes was acquired from the people." Just so; not from God, nor by his will, but from the people; and the "people" have become tired of the abuse and corruption of power by popery, and have determined to take back their usurped rights. Let the tools of the Pope be quiet and calm. Just as soon as the people get tired of self-government, and think that the poor old man in the Vatican will do a better part by them, by a "paternal government," they will come humbly begging him to resume his fatherly control, and reopen his dungeons and inquisitions, and bring out the fetters and chains for them. It may be they will be ready for this in a year or two; and then what a shout from the republicans of this country! There is nothing like biding one's time. The Irish World is trying to convince Romanists that popes are their protectors against kings. They are, just as wolves are protectors of sheep against dogs; aye, and if they dare say so, against republics also. They dread liberalism a thousand-fold more than they do monarchy. The minions of the Pope are in Antwerp at this hour, plotting for the overthrow of republicanism and the re-establishment of monarchy in France. This teaching of the World is the sublimity of impudence and mendacity. Let the editor go to Italy, Spain or Austria and teach this doctrine, and see what his reception would be!

The World is combatting an idea which, it says, is having its effect upon some of the young of the Catholic Church, viz.: "That the Irish are an inferior race." Protestant Irish are a noble people, and are received cordially in any land; but their poor countrymen, who are debased and enslaved by popery and priests, are, many of them, a very different people. If they would but shake off that incubus, they too would rise. It is not race, but the scourge of a spurious and debasing system that keeps them down. Look at the differences, aye, the contrast, between the north and south of Ireland—in the whole appearance and character of the people.

THE new Methodist church at Ocean Springs, Mississippi, was dedicated by Bishop Keener on Sunday, the seventeenth instant. It was also the quarterly meeting for the circuit, and there were services on Saturday and Sunday. The presiding elder of the district, Rev. C. F. Gillespie; the preacher in charge, Rev. E. J. Taylor; and Rev. U. B. Philips, of the East Pascagoula circuit, were present. It was our privilege to be in the neighborhood, and to hear an excellent sermon by Bro. Gillespie on Saturday night. Bishop Keener preached on Sunday morning, and after raising $300 to pay off the remaining indebtedness, the house was appropriately given to God. A fine collection, considering the inclement day, and what had already been contributed by the congregation. The church is a very handsome structure, neat and complete, outside and in, and costing altogether $1,500. A cottage has been rented for the preacher, and a permanent parsonage will probably be purchased before long. An interesting Sunday school is organized, and doing well. This is the only Protestant church at this point, and will accomplish much good. The church is centrally located on a valuable lot given by a German brother. The congregation on Sunday morning were surprised and delighted to see on the altar-table a very rich and beautiful communion service and baptismal bowl—the considerate and generous gift of Mrs. W. R. Stuart, of New Orleans.

LETTER FROM BISHOP PIERCE.

MR. EDITOR: A controversy between Bishop McTyeire and myself, in the church paper, would not be comely or profitable. I will not reply in detail to his "remarks," yet feel that I ought to say something.

Some things in his article I deeply regret, both as to tone and innuendo; but, for various reasons, I forbear comment. Side issues are not important to the main question. Let them pass—for what they are worth.

My chief object was to set myself right, because, by the accidents of current history, I was put in a false position. Candor required that I should speak for myself, and thus remove a wrong impression. By various writers and reporters it had been published that the Bishops favored the project of the Memphis Convention. For one, I do not; and I thought it honest to say so, and, at the same time, modest to give a reason or two for my opinion.

Different views on a given proposition do not destroy unity. "Our general superintendency" is a unit in everything "requisite to the same." We love each other. We love the church. Our labors are common; our administration harmonious. But in the world of thought it would be marvelous, well-nigh a miracle, if we did not differ in opinion about many things.

When the "address" to the General Conference in 1866 was presented, only four Bishops were present and signed it. Bishop Soule and myself were absent. In 1870, when a similar recommendation, on ministerial training, was read in private councils, on objection made by me, after free discussion, it was ruled out. So I am consistent in the records, albeit I am "in a small minority." Fortunately for the church, the little minority was sustained by a very decided majority when the question was brought by committee before the General Conference. And so I believe we stand to-day.

Now, with due deference to all concerned, and without suspicion of motive or imputation of disloyalty, I do think the movement at Memphis directly in the face of General Conference action, and that the church cannot with propriety adopt the plan till the Conference shall reverse its judgment. The thing proposed is not an "individual enterprise," and if anybody, dazzled by the grandeur of the scheme, were disposed to make a heavy contribution to it, and asked my advice, I would turn it in another direction, or at least suggest the propriety of waiting awhile. But the point is, corporate action of the whole church is invoked. All the Conferences are invited to combine. To my mind the proposition read thus: "True, the General Conference has disapproved this thing, but we are bound to have it, and the rest of you may come in, aid and partake, if you will. Very glad if you would." I do not like this kind of "spontaneous action."

We are told that eight Annual Conferences were represented in the convention. That is so—in a sense. But to my certain knowledge some of them are not committed by Conference action to the programme of the convention. Alabama is not, (unless we Bishops "locate" at Greensboro.) North Alabama is not. The appointment of delegates was a mere courtesy in response to a messenger inviting them to be present for consultation. I (though presiding) did not "protect" them, because the Conference was sound on the question, and I was too polite to interfere with a mere civility. Little Rock adopted the Southern University for the present, and is patronizing it. She will hardly give up one which cost her nothing for an experiment for which she will have to pay heavily. "The location," I ween, will be on the wrong side of the Mississippi to awaken much enthusiasm in Arkansas or White River. As to North Mississippi I am not posted, but think when the work of elimination is complete, Tennessee and Memphis will remain the only decided, hearty partners in the concern; and of these the pulse-beat of interest will rise or fall somewhat with "location."

It is said "my notions" about colleges will "puzzle the brethren." The puzzle, I trow, is in their simplicity and directness, and the difficulty of centralizing them by better ones.

The personal commendations the Bishop lavishes upon me reminds me very much of Anthony on Brutus. The irony is exquisite—shows talent; but neither tickling nor ridicule will decide the issue between us. Though pronounced "wise," I am fully persuaded that wisdom will not die with me. Nevertheless, I venture a few more notions. Hope they will not puzzle anybody.

University education is not a, certainly not the, desideratum in Southern Methodism. Church schools in every city and every circuit—at least in every district—would be far better, in my judgment. The mission of Methodism is to the masses of society—not to the select few—a favored class. University education is confined of necessity. Very few can attain unto it. What it is not adapted to boys, the young, the immature, the untrained. There must be very thorough preliminary preparation and development to profit much by the University system. Besides, such an institution must be the outgrowth of an old, dense, rich population. High culture can never be general. To reach it requires time, talent, money, leisure. Exalted, varied scholarship is rare in any country—always has been, always will be. It is Utopian to dream of its commonness. No scheme, unless it could abolish the tax on bread, enrich the multitude, reverse the laws of common life, and re-endow the human race, will ever make science and literature a common heritage. The learned class has multiplied in the progress of the world—will multiply still; but many of us and of our children have neither time nor capacity for great mental acquisitions or achievements. We common people hope, however, by some schooling and study, reading, thinking and observation, to be respectable, and to serve a generation, after all, not wiser than ourselves.

On the basis proposed, I do oppose the "Central University," because its success would be the partial, if not total, ruin of institutions vital to the church, and dear to the Conferences. I am not ready for the sacrifice. For popular use, for general purposes, I do not think the University "an improvement" on the college system. The diffusive benefits of local patronage here and there outweigh the advantages of a higher grade restricted to a few. True, some of our colleges are "weak and starving." So with some of our preachers—alas! But combinations of all the works into one would hardly relieve them. We must not kill them to wipe out the shame of their poverty. Our missions are meagerly supported. We will not cast them off. Our Publishing House is in trouble, too. Much of all this is incidental—the fire, the war, the loss of property. Because thousands are scarce—yet urgently needed—will we inspirit the church by asking for "millions?"

The Bishop twits me with the embarrassments of Emory College. He charges me with addressing myself "ad collegium," "ad populum," "ad clerum," so he tries it ad hominem. Now, brother, did you intend that as "the unkindest cut" of all? Well, I forgive you—you were only searching the joints of the harness to find, if possible, a "very tender point." But, Bishop, Emory has done well. When you presided in Georgia her contributions helped you much in manning the work. I am sorry that stress of weather should have constrained you to make a point of her misfortunes. I am proud of Emory and her history. Before the war she was ably officered, well endowed, and full of students. Now she has a noble faculty, large patronage—never better; but her endowment is gone, and her house a ruin. But the institution lives, will live—does not mean to die or to be killed. So of Randolph Macon, Wofford, and the rest. After all their struggle, labors and fruits, to say to them, "You are weak and starving; we are going to put a big, fat trout into our Methodist pond and gulp you all down," is not very "generous."

When I wrote of the "rapid growth" of this University idea, I did not refer to the development of public favor in its behalf. Not at all. Far from it. I meant just this: A little resolution at Lebanon, in October last, to invite the co-operation of three contignous Conferences in setting up a University by the middle of the following January, developed, expanded, into a scheme including all the Conferences. The committee of the Tennessee Conference went beyond the design of their appointment when they sent messengers to the Conferences beyond the Father of Waters. The convention was self-called—without power, original or delegated. I do not mention these things by way of censure. By no means. I am only showing the progress of the plan. I cannot tell whereunto it may grow. The brethren met for consultation. I was invited to be present, and I submit that it is not disrespectful to differ with them in opinion. If I had been there I should have opposed the prevailing view; and I do hope it is no offense to say I do not like their plans. If the reasons which control my judgment strike other minds with force, very well; if not, why I, at least, will not quarrel.

It is my deliberate opinion that the college is better suited to our wants than a University, properly so called. If they were suitably located, we have none too many. I concede there have been blunders and jealousies among us; but time, experience and the necessities of the case will adjust these matters.

I do wish very much that I could "locate" and endow a college in Arkansas. The Conferences over there need it. It would give them character and influence in their State. My suggestion in the former letter was no new thing to the brethren there. They are able now to make a fair beginning, and will soon be able to consummate the enterprise, if they will only combine. By the blessing of God upon them, these Methodist colleges will furnish to the Conferences educated men, ripe, and ready for the work, without any of the delays and risks of a stereotyped theological training. Virginia and Georgia are examples and illustrations of the truth of this remark. Bishop McTyeire himself is a specimen, and it would be hard to exaggerate his value to the church. But unless I am mistaken in my diagnosis of his mental aptitudes and tendencies, he would have been utterly spoiled by three years' arbitrary training in a professional school. He would have been stiff, cold, dry, powerless. But graduating young, thrust out on a circuit, brought into contact and sympathy with the people, he is every inch a man—sentient, genial, earnest, effective everywhere and always.

He "infers" that I would not cooperate in locating the Central University. I did not say so, or intimate it. As the convention had no right to appoint me, and only requests me to act with others, I certainly should feel at liberty to decline. I do not say I would. I leave that open for future developments. In the meantime I am not troubled on that point, as I believe the treasurer is to report half a million in hand before the question comes up.

As to the theological school, I am against that, out and out—toto cœlo. This letter is too long to discuss it now. It is proposed, I know, in a modified form, having checks and limitations. But I am afraid of the thing. It cannot be controlled. It will run into the old groove. It will encroach upon our economy at several vital points. It does not suit our system nor our exigencies. There are marked differences in the circumstances of the Wesleyans and the Methodist Episcopal Church, and of ourselves. I have no evidence that it has worked well with them. I have heard to the contrary. At any rate, I prefer facts and fruits to theories and eulogies.

The Bishop seeks to convict me of inconsistency, because, with these views, I yet insist upon the Course of Study, and the four years' examinations. Even so. I believe in study—life-long improvement. I would have the "educated" man to study, learn more—"go on to perfection." But I do not want a man shut up in a seminary, lectured and molded by a given pattern, till all individuality is destroyed; rather let him study and develop, mentally and ministerially, in the field of labor and service—in contact with the people, and the events and observations of an actual, active campaign. If there be any truth in history, or the philosophy of mind, or the magnetic power of kindred sympathies, this is the better way to raise up a band of practical, effective, useful ministers. (For proof, read the history of American Methodism.)

Many "leading laymen"—educated, intelligent Methodists—agree with me in these views. Others think differently. I am honest. So are they. I do not wish to thrust my particular ideas upon the church in any offensive way.

I certainly do not love to write, and hope not to trouble you, Mr. Editor, any more on this subject. If, however, a discussion should arise, let there be no sharpness. "We be brethren."

MINUTES.—The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference are gotten out in good style by our very competent secretary, Rev. C. F. Evans. Typography and paper are good, and the preparation of copy and proof-reading have been done with much accuracy and taste. Let the Minutes be circulated and read. Every member of the church in the bounds of the Conference should ponder them well.

Obituaries.

MISS AMANDA M. BROOKS was born October 26, 1819, in the State of Mississippi; was married to Robert McCane, in Louisiana, March 5, 1840, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the summer of 1853.

She was called away from the mysterious shadows of time to the grand realizations of eternity, January 31, 1872, leaving weeping children and friends to mourn her loss.

"Thou art gone to the grave, but we will not deplore thee,
Whose God was thy ransom, thy guardian and guide;
He gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore thee;
And death has no sting, for the Savior has died."

JAMES E. BRADLEY, P. C.
FLOYD, LA., March 12, 1872.

SISTER ELIZA J. LOPER, daughter of Bro. William Bridges, died near Brandon, Mississippi, February 9, 1872, aged thirty-four years, two months and eight days.

Sister Loper was a truly pious woman; embraced religion early in life; united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, where the pure light of her Christian life shone brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Like the gentle stream, she glided tranquilly along the straight and narrow path marked out for the humble Christian. Neither the sunshine of prosperity nor the clouds of adversity could induce her to waver in her faith, or falter in her duty. Being a devoted Christian, she could but be a kind wife, an affectionate mother and a faithful friend. She possessed in an eminent degree that charity which suffereth long, and is kind. Through a long-protracted illness patience and resignation were her manifest characteristics. When nearing the shallow which overhangs the dark and turbid waters of the mystic Jordan, she exclaimed: "How long! how long!" Being asked what she meant, she replied: "Before Christ and his angels come after me." She was buried on the twelfth, at Garlandsville, Mississippi. May her husband, children and many friends live so as to meet her where parting is unknown.

L. P. MEADOR.

DIED, at his residence in Barbour county, Alabama, on the morning of the fourteenth instant, Rev. JOHN WEAVER, for many years a faithful minister of the gospel in the Methodist Protestant Church. Bro. Weaver was born in Warren county, Georgia, and removed to Alabama many years ago. He was a good man, truly pious, loved by all who knew him, and most by those who knew him best. Modest and unpretending, he passed through life without any attempt at display, but labored earnestly to do good in his allotted sphere. He was for several years a member of the Alabama Annual Conference, of his church, and retired from the active duties of the ministry when age and increasing infirmities compelled him to relinquish its arduous labors. He was faithful in all the relations of life. As a minister of Jesus, esteemed and loved wherever he labored; as a husband and father, affectionate and devoted; as relative and friend, true and trusty; as citizen and neighbor, unexceptionable and honored. His hospitality was of the New Testament type, warm and generous, and his guests always felt themselves at home with his pleasant household.

His end was peaceful and happy. Although a very great sufferer for some nine and a half months from an affection of the heart, and often seemingly in the very article of death from extreme difficulty of breathing and great pain in the head, yet he never complained; though from the severity of his sufferings he often expressed a wish to sleep in Jesus, that he might be freed from the pains he was enduring, and go to see the King in his glory on high! Death had no terrors for him, for he knew in whom he had believed, and that he was able to keep his soul unto everlasting life in heaven.

When his departure was near at hand an aged Christian sister came to see him. With a smile upon his wasted features he remarked: "Well, Sister ——, forty years ago you and I covenanted together to pray for each other, and I have never failed to do so. God bless you, and grant that we may meet in heaven at last!" He sent messages of love to all his children and grandchildren, bidding them an affectionate farewell, and exhorting them all to meet him in the holy, happy land of rest. Just before he died, an affectionate daughter hearing him, as he awoke from his sleep, murmuring about home, came to him, when he remarked: "Well, I thought I was at home at last." "Yes, pa," said she, "this is your home." "No, my dear child, this is not the bright, beautiful, shining home, so white and pure, that I thought I had reached. I see now that I am yet in my earthly home, but it will not be long until I am in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." These were about his last utterances here, and between the hours of four and five on the morning of the fourteenth of February, 1872, without a struggle or a groan, his happy spirit winged its flight from earth, and its sins and its sorrows, to the paradise of God above!

Thus, in the eighty-fourth year of his age, he "ceased at once to work and live;" and the next day the sacred remains were laid on their last rest in the cemetery at Clayton. May the Lord of the widow and fatherless watch over our aged Sister Weaver and all the members of the family, and bring them to a happy meeting "in the city of angels and God!" "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

"Yes, the Christian's course is run,
Ended is the glorious strife;
Fought the fight, the work is done,
Death is swallow'd up of life!
Borne by angels on their wings,
Far from earth the spirit flies,
Finds his God, and sits and sings,
Triumphing in paradise."

F. L. B. SHAVER.

Methodist Protestant, at Baltimore, Maryland, and Southern Christian Advocate, at Macon, Georgia, are respectfully requested by friends of the deceased to publish the above obituary.

BRIG. GEORGE G. FONTAINE was born in Vicksburg, Mississippi, August 28, 1839; was married to Miss Mollie De France, of the same State, September 18, 1861, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South during the same year. In 1867 he moved to this (Carroll) parish, and engaged in merchandizing for a short period. He finally studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1870, with much hope for his future career as a jurist. But he fell a victim to death's fatal arrow almost at the sunrise of his practice.

His sickness was of brief duration, for the angels were in haste to convey the priceless gem to embellish the wondrously glorious crown of salvation. With calm confidence he resigned himself to the Savior, and moved forward with the celestial "side conduct," fearing no evil.

He has left behind a precious wife and three little ones, with numerous friends, to weep over his early death. He was an exemplary member of our branch of the church—the recording steward of this circuit, a faithful member of the Sabbath school, a loving husband and father, and an agreeable Christian gentleman.

Our first Quarterly Conference, which was held at this place from the seventeenth to the nineteenth ultimo, honored his pleasant memory by the usual preamble and resolutions of sympathy and love. Although our church here has lost a light, eternity shines brighter, and the way there seems less gloomy. JAMES E. BRADLEY, P. C.

A True Friend.—"Another Richmond in the field," cried Richard; but for the sake of history and truth, be it known, the one proved at least an overmatch for the vaunting king; and so, despite the multifarious bitters that flood the deluged markets of the country, Price's Great Specific overshadows them all. With loud acclaim, the sonorous echoes of which reverberate through all the land, until the mighty mountains, answering the seaboard, give back the glad response from hill to dale, from river to lake, and both of these again to grand old ocean, that rolls it on for aye! With billowy roar the people hymn the praises of Price's Celebrated Aromatic Bitters. They have tested its efficacy, tried its virtues, and shrined it, like an idol, in the very heart of faith. Indigestion no longer waits upon their appetital indulgences. Dyspepsia breaks no more upon their enjoyable repasts. Nervousness avaunts; debility, that crouched within them, shrinks at the metamorphose of the giant strength, and the load of suffering under which they writhed is thrown off, as with the agile grace and power of an athlete. They care not for the recognition of other preparations, content to know and feel that they have found in Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters the true balm they have heard so often prated of in Gilead.

NEW AND DESIRABLE!

A Sunday School Geography,

with Seven Colored Maps, Fifty-six Lessons on the same, and a Pronouncing Vocabulary of the Names of all the Places mentioned in the Bible.

Each lesson is brief, and can be recited in five minutes; after which the class will proceed with the other lesson in the usual way. The maps illustrate the whole Bible History in chronological order.

We have examined and heartily commend the Scripture Geography for Sunday Schools, by the Rev. George A. Starkweather. The maps are constructed after the best models, are founded on the latest results of Biblical study, and bring forward the great epochs of Scripture history in their proper chronological order.

The author's system of question and answer in making use of the work is the right one; it shows both teacher and learner how to teach and how to learn; but it does not do all the work for them. It is impossible to overstate the value of such helps to the acquisition of a knowledge of the Bible.

Geography and chronology are the eyes of history, and the Scripture studied with such means of illustration as this Scripture Geography supplies will be found to be vivid, graphic, and in a sense altogether new.

We ought not to doubt the success any more than we do the utility of such a publication.

E. G. ROBINSON, D. D.,
President of Rochester Theological Seminary.
H. B. HACKETT, D. D.,
Professor of Biblical Literature.
R. J. N. BUCKLAND, D. D.,
Professor of Ecclesiastical History.

It seems to me to fill a place not occupied by any similar work, and answers a demand long felt by the more advanced Sunday school instructors.

REV. GEORGE W. CLARK,
Author of Clark's Harmony of the Gospels.

"To be able distinctly to locate the incidents of Scripture history goes very far toward a clear comprehension of the sacred narrative."

This little volume furnishes just this aid; and on this account it will be invaluable to Sunday school teachers, scholars and ministers.

REV. J. STANFORD HOLME,
Pastor Trinity Chapel, New York City.

"We judge that a thorough study of this little book would be an admirable preparation for either teachers or scholars."—Christian at Work.

"Vast numbers of people are very deficient in the knowledge of the geography of the Bible, and a work like this is well worthy of their study."—Christian Secretary.

"The author's plan is to furnish the means for studying Scripture Geography as that of the Modern World is studied in the schools. The book will prove useful to many outside of Sunday schools, who wish it for reference only."—Chicago Standard.

"The author's system of question and answer in making use of the work is the right one. We cannot overstate the value of such a help."—St. Louis Central.

CORAL ISLANDS.

BY FANNY R. FEUDGE.

Among the wonders of creation, scattered so profusely over sea and earth and air, none are more strangely fascinating than the Coral Isles of the South Seas, with their blue lagoons and circling reefs, their fringed borders, and vast submarine forests, over which play the restless waves of a transparent sea. They are at once so fairy-like and weirdly-beautiful, yet so mysterious in origin, so gigantic in extent as compared with the feeble powers of the tiny architects—so grand, so gorgeous in color, and so varied in form and structure. Almost every diver makes fresh discoveries, and throws new light upon these "palaces of the daughters of the sea," as corals were termed by the Greeks; and dangerous as are such pastimes, those who have once forced their way to these fairy halls find them too fascinating not to be visited again.

While gazing at the wondrous creations of these marvelous little builders, one may almost give the reins to fancy and imagine what he will. There are wheat sheaves, cabbage leaves, mushrooms, ferns of endless variety, roses, single and in clusters, vine leaves, stag horns, ears of corn, oak leaves and acorns, majestic lilies and tulips, and a thousand other apparent imitations of vegetable and animal nature. Then there are grottoes and fairy bowers, golden, azure and sapphire halls, grouped, colored and adorned with inimitable grace and beauty.

This matchless exhibition of nature's own handiwork is painted in every hue, from the delicate rose-tint to bright crimson; the royal purple, fringed with gold; forest-green, mingled with autumn's mellow tints of russet, yellow and red; heaven's own blue, or a mingling of azure and gold like the summer sunset; and more beautiful than all, the pure, virgin white, with the faintest possible rose-tinge—a just perceptible blush as of conscious loveliness.

Over all this beauty play unceasingly the frothy waves of grand, hoary old ocean, dashing and sparkling in rainbow tints, glittering and dancing in the sunbeams, and breaking in diamond-like spray over the frail bark of the adventurous explorer of these magic realms.

We might view with less of wonder this lavish display of submarine beauty, were man the architect—he of boundless resources and many inventions, who brings together the distant corners of the earth, and makes even the lightning subservient to his will—or were it directly the workmanship of the Creator, we should see in it but another exhibition of the power and goodness of him who speaks a world into existence, yet stoops to clothe in their exquisite loveliness and fragrance the lilies of the field; but when we regard it as the work of a tiny insect, scarcely perceptible to the naked eye, it is marvelous indeed.

These little insects, called zoophytes, or plant animals, from their seeming to form a connecting link between the animal and vegetable kingdoms, are in form very like a little oblong bag of jelly, with one end closed and the other open, and surrounded by tentacles or arms, six or eight in number, set like the rays of a star. The coral, or madrepere, is the secretion of these minute polypes, and in its orifices they reside, protruding their mouths and tentacles when under water, but withdrawing, by sudden contraction, into their holes if molested or exposed to atmospheric influence. Age after age they labor, myriads dying and other myriads filling their places, till they form immense reefs and islands stretching over thousands of miles, and becoming the permanent abodes of whole races of human beings. Most of the islands of the Pacific, as well as those belonging to Australia, are the creation of these tiny insects, and the number of these coral isles is constantly and rapidly increasing.

It was formerly supposed that the coralines built up from the very bottom of the ocean, but careful investigation has shown that they cannot live at a greater depth than about thirty fathoms, and consequently that their deposits are first made on submarine rocks or mountains. There in these ocean depths, hidden away from the sight of man, the little insect toils on for its brief life, faithful to the purpose for which it was created, and, dying, leaves its work to its successor. By and by, by whole ages of steady perseverance on the part of the tiny architects, the reef shows itself above water; then they cease building, and sand, which being easily thrown up by the action of the sea, rises to the top, mingles with sea shells, floating leaves and branches, and the feathers and guano of sea birds, till a soil is gradually formed. Seeds, dropped perhaps by some little bird on its winged passage across the waters, or wafted thither by the passing breeze, spring up, and soon the little isle is covered with verdure, adding yet another to these beautiful oases of the deep blue sea—another fair, peaceful Eden, soon, perhaps, to be polluted by the crimes and cruelty of human savages.

In the formation of a single coral reef several species of the polypes are engaged, each seemingly content with the sphere to which he is best adapted, and tranquilly plying his silent trade in ceaseless oblivion of the busy world beyond.

These coral banks are found in all stages; some in deep water, entirely submerged beneath the blue waves; some sending forth a stray branch here and there, or showing a few bare rocks above the surface without the least appearance of vegetation; while others are covered with soil, stray seeds and fruits, as of the cocoanut, bread-fruit and pandanus, and others have taken root, and the whole island is crowned with verdure.

The specimens we see in this country, in cabinets of curiosities, or used in the manufacture of ornaments, are broken off by divers from the submerged ledges.

Almost all nations seem to vie with each other in their appreciation of coral, either as an ornament or an object of devotion; while sages have speculated and naturalists disputed about its origin and properties. Zoroaster regarded it as possessing certain talismanic influences in driving off evil; and Pliny tells us that coral was as highly prized in India as were pearls in Rome. Be that as it may, the historian himself evidently knew little of the nature of this wondrous creation of the zoophyte of the Mediterranean and South Seas, since he describes it as a marine plant bearing crimson berries!

It was not until 1723 that its true nature was ascertained by the investigations and experiments of Jean Andre de Peyssonel, and many years later before his theory was generally received. The Chinese, Japanese and Arabs, and indeed all the nations of Asia, Africa and the Indian Archipelagoes, highly prize coral as an ornament, and are most skillful in fashioning of it flowers, wreaths and chaplets for the decoration of their persons. The Persians use it for talismans, and deem it specially efficacious in announcing the approach of disease, and showing how any sickness will terminate, growing very pale if a fatal termination is at hand, and assuming its natural ruddy hue as the patient becomes convalescent.

Who would think that the product of so tiny an insect would create such a stir among scholars, feed the vanity of so many fair women, furnish employment to hundreds of thousands of mechanics, and constitute the dwelling places of whole races of human beings? Yet so it is; and we may learn, hence, that God has made nothing in vain, but in wisdom and mercy laid the foundation of all his works.—Little Corporal Magazine.

FABLE FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

THE FOX OUTWITTED BY THE HARE.

One day in the middle of winter a hare and a fox took a walk together. It was during a hard frost; the ground was covered with snow, and there was moving about not even a mouse or a rabbit.

"This is hungry weather," said the fox to the hare; "my limbs ache with cold."

"It is, indeed," answered the hare; "not a morsel to be found anywhere. I could almost eat my own ears if I could only manage to get them in my mouth."

In this hungry mood they trotted along side by side. After some time they saw a peasant girl coming toward them, with a large basket in her hand, and out of the basket came the smell of fresh rolls.

"I'll tell you what we will do," said the fox; "do you lie down at your full length on the ground and pretend you are dead. When the girl comes up she will put down her basket and pick you up for the sake of your skin, for hare skins make capital gloves. While she is doing this I will run off with the bread basket, and we shall have something to comfort us this cold day."

Puss did as Reynard bid. He lay down and pretended to be dead, while the fox hid behind a snowdrift. Soon the girl came up, observing the hare with its legs stretched out, put down her basket as the fox had said she would, and stooped to pick up the hare. In a moment the fox jumped out of his hiding place, snatched up the basket, and was off with it like a shot across the fields, and Puss, coming to life again, scampered after her companion, leaving the poor girl entirely in the lurch. But the fox showed no inclination to stop and share the rolls with the hare; he evidently intended to eat them all himself, of which the hare didn't at all approve. However, he did not utter a word until they came up to a small pond; then he said to the fox:

"How nice it would be if we could catch a dish of fish, too. Then we could have a fish and white bread, just like the great folks. Suppose you dip your tail in the water; the fishes, which have not much to bite at now, may hang to it; but you must not lose any time, or the pond will be frozen."

Reynard thought some fish would be a great relish with the rolls. He went down to the pond, which was on the point of freezing, and hung his tail in. After a few moments the tail was fast frozen in, and the poor fox was a prisoner. Then the hare took the bread basket from under Reynard's nose, and ate up the rolls, one after another, as coolly as possible, saying to him: "Stop there now until it thaws; you have only to wait till the spring comes; wait for the thaw;" and then he ran off, and left the fox barking after him like an angry dog chained to a post; and this is the reason that foxes and hares are enemies to this day.

SIR WALTER SCOTT WROTE: The race of mankind would perish did we cease to help each other. From the time that the mother binds the child's head till the moment some kind assistance wipes the dew of death from the brow of the dying, we cannot exist without mutual help.

WORTH OF THE SWEET POTATO.

BY MR. H. W. PETERS.

The sweet potato is a tender, perennial plant, of the "Morning Glory" family; is a native of China and the Indies, and was imported into and cultivated in England as early as 1597. It now forms one of the most important crops of the South. In the Carolinas, and other extreme Southern States, its yield is enormous—five hundred bushels to the acre is not an unusual crop—but they are greatly inferior in quality to those grown in the latitude of Memphis and its vicinity. Two hundred bushels to the acre is considered a very satisfactory yield here; yet we have known our friend John Harbert, who lives in the suburbs of Memphis, to average three hundred bushels to the acre on a twenty-acre field. Mr. Harbert is acknowledged to be our most successful sweet potato grower. He never fails to keep them the year round; never sells any until spring, and disposes of the bulk of his crop in May, June and July, thus always getting a remunerative price.

The earlier varieties can be grown with some degree of success in the Middle and Western States, but they never mature in the extreme North.

It is a matter of surprise when we consider how imperfect our knowledge is of this valuable esculent. Its nomenclature is so little known and understood that it would be almost impossible to order from a distance any particular variety (except the yellow yam) with a hope of getting what you want. The names sweet potatoes are known by are almost as numerous as the different localities in which they are to be found. We do not find this to be the case with the Irish potato, whose home is further North. The peachblow, pinkeye, russet, Goodrich, rose and many others are recognized and known throughout the whole country. We don't see why this should not be the case with the sweet potato. If our agricultural societies would give us less horse-racing, pigeon-shooting, dog-shows, baby-exhibitions and other nonsense, and turn their attention more to subjects of this kind, it would certainly accomplish more good for the country. Who ever heard of any one planting sweet potato seed with a view of testing and improving varieties? This is a wonderful age of improvement! See how much has been accomplished for the North in improving her great staple—the Irish potato—by such men as Prof. Goodrich, A. W. Harrison and many others.

The sweet potato crop is, without doubt, worth as much to the South as the Irish potato is to the North. As an article of food, it is not inferior to any crop we grow. It can be produced at comparatively little cost; is very palatable and nutritious. Horses, cattle and hogs eat sweet potatoes freely. Considering our dependence on the Northern and Western States for so large a portion of our provisions and food, we should certainly give this great crop more consideration. Another great evil, as we conceive, is the universal practice of using the small tubers for our plants. Our best authorities agree that the same laws that govern in the reproduction of animals hold equally good in the vegetable kingdom. Who would think of using nubbins for seed corn, or saving seed from the small, indifferent cabbage that might not be desirable for the table? Would you breed your mares to ponies if you desired to raise large draught horses? We think this a subject well worth our consideration.

Much has been said and written as to the best mode of preserving the sweet potato through the winter. Some contend that banking is the best; others think cellars or caves are the best places to keep them. It is the opinion of some that the tubers should be thoroughly dried before putting away to keep. We have had no little experience, and can say with confidence that it is a matter of no consequence whether they are dry or wet when put up to keep at digging time. They are then full of sap, and always go through what is termed the sweating stage very soon after being put in a heap. During this stage they become quite wet, and should have plenty of air. This will last until some time in December, when they should be closed up and kept dry, and at a temperature of forty-five to fifty-five degrees Fahrenheit. If these rules be observed, it matters not by what method they are put away, they will keep from digging time until digging time again. We hope our practical men will take this subject in hand, and that our sweet potatoes will not be behind in the great advance now being made in every direction.—Southern Farm and Home.

THE ORCHARD AND FRUIT GARDEN FOR MARCH.

Many fruit trees will be purchased this month, and we would give a word of caution against the common practice of ordering large trees. A small, well-grown tree, with an abundance of small roots, is greatly to be preferred to a tall, many-branched one, with its large roots chopped off in the digging. Shriveled trees, that have become dried during transportation, should be placed in a trench and covered, root and branch, with fine mellow earth. In about a week they will be found to have regained their original plumpness, when they may be taken out, properly trimmed and planted. Plant whenever the soil is ready, taking care to first trim mutilated roots, and shorten back the top. Insects should be looked after. If small cottony spots, looking like mold, are seen, they are the too common woolly aphis; and for this the best remedy is the soft soap wash, which may be applied with advantage, even if no insects are visible. Make as strong as it will work. It removes not only insects and their eggs, but parasitic plants, and loose bark as well. Grafting should be finished up this month. Grape-vines that were laid down last year should be uncovered as soon as possible. In planting new vines, cut them back two or three buds before planting. Cuttings of currant, grape and raspberry are to be set out as soon as the soil is ready. The soil should be pressed firmly around the lower end of the cuttings. Raspberries need early planting, as the shoots push early, and are liable to be broken off if they have made much growth. Shoots will push on old and young fruit trees now, just where limbs are not wanted. A slight rub now will remove it; but, if left a year, the knife must be used. Rub off these shoots when young, and save cutting hereafter.

PLANTING APPLE SEED.—Apple seed may be planted either in the fall or early spring. The soil should be well prepared and deeply pulverized, and thrown up in beds three or four feet wide. The rows should be at such a distance apart as to allow of cultivation with the plow. The weeds and grass must be kept out from the very first, and not allowed to have the mastery for a single day. The seed may be sprouted a little before planting, by keeping them during the winter mixed with their bulk of sand, and moistening them a little before the time arrives to plant. Whenever the germ makes its appearance at the points of the seeds, which is called pipping, the sowing must begin, and should be done as quickly as possible. The covering should be slight, and the earth should be mellow, and not disposed to bake.

RUST IN WHEAT.

It is at present well established that rust in grain is produced from the spores of a microscopical fungus growing upon the barberry and various rough-leaved plants, alder, etc. These, falling upon the leaves of the cereals and other grasses, develop very rapidly, and in turn yield the summer spores of a similar character, by which the affection is propagated with inconceivable quickness. The winter spores, which are produced last, form on the first-named plants other fungus growths the next year, and thereby secure the continuance of the rust from season to season. The proper methods of preventing grain from taking this affection consist, first, in extirpating the barberry and other trees mentioned from the vicinity of the grain fields; next, the grain should be cleaned with the utmost care, so that no seeds of the fungus-bearing plants may be introduced into the field in the sowing, and thus aid in the development of the disease; and, finally, no manure should be applied to the grain fields in which any straws are mixed that have come from rusted plants; and, in fact, straw of this character should be burned as the most effectual method of protection against the spreading of the disease. If used at all as manure, however, it should be kept for grass lands or fields in which grain is not raised.

SWEET PORK.

It is beyond a doubt that cleanliness has much to do with the flavor of pork. The filthy state in which many fattening hogs are kept has a tendency not only to give a rank taste to the meat, but to render it positively unwholesome. A very common mode of penning hogs at this season is in a rail pen, without protection from the weather. The consequence is, that such pens are not fit to keep a living animal in; wet and filthy, cold and uncomfortable as they are, hogs will not take on fat, and a great proportion of the food is wasted while they are kept in them, while the filth, a considerable amount of which the hogs will consume, must be detrimental to their health and to the health of those who eat their flesh. It is not only safer but more economical to give fattening animals good shelter and dry beds and litter, and keep them quite clean. The labor will be well repaid.—Practical Planter.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO PRESERVE BOOKS.—It is not, perhaps, so generally known as it deserves to be, that a few drops of any kind of perfumed oil will secure books and manuscripts from the deteriorating effects of mold and damp. The species of leather so extensively used by bookbinders owes its powers of withstanding the effects of these destructive agents to the tar of the birch tree—betula alba.

CLEANING WINDOW BLINDS.—Strong soap will destroy green paint more readily than other colors, having the same effect that it has with grease. Many rooms are soiled by the ignorance or carelessness of washwomen in the application of strong soap water. Much better use whiting on the soiled places and weak solutions of soap in cleansing, by which the luster will be preserved.

TO KEEP YEAST SWEET.—Boil half a cupful of hops in a pint of water for fifteen minutes; strain the liquor hot on two-thirds of a cup of flour and a spoonful of salt. After this is cool enough not to scald, add a little good sweet yeast, and set it in a warm place to rise. When it is light pour it into a glass bottle, fill it entirely full, cork tight, tie the cork down with a cloth, and set it away in a cool place where it will not freeze.

When you take out any yeast to use, fill the bottle entirely full again, after the effervescence has subsided, with cold water in which a little flour has been scalded and cooled, tie down the cork, and set away as before. I use water half the time to fill up the bottle with, and flour and water the other half.

When the bottle has been used for several times, and the yeast grows weak, boil a few more hops, pour the liquor hot on a little flour and salt, let it cool, and add this to the yeast in the bottle, instead of adding cool water; when you open the bottle set it into a dish, for it will foam over; as the yeast grows weaker in the bottle by the addition of water, use a little more of it in mixing bread.

The great secret is in keeping the bottle full, and corked tight. There seems to be just enough air penetrate the cork to keep the yeast in good working order. I suppose potato yeast or any other kind of liquid yeast may be kept in the same way, but I have liked this kind too well to try any other.—Correspondent New York Tribune.

Scientific.

Gas was discovered in 1739, but it was only devoted to illuminating purposes in 1792; it was first permanently used for illumination at Manchester in 1805; two years afterward gas was introduced into one of the streets of London, and from that time its use has been extended throughout the world. What we owe to the services of this valuable invention would be a long tale to tell; but what if gas is to be superseded by something at once more intrinsically valuable, and yet, strange to say, cheaper? There is a probability of this, at all events. A French chemist, it is said, has discovered a new light as superior to gas as gas is to oil. The new oxyhydric light has been most successfully exhibited at the Crystal Palace, London, and the new light is so powerful that it actually causes a flame from gas to cast a shadow. The oxyhydric light is white, clear and healthy.

Prof. C. A. Young's observation of the most remarkable outburst on the surface of the sun ever witnessed by astronomers, presents, probably, the strongest evidence yet obtained for the eruption theory of the protuberances. A variety of facts, however, tend to confirm this hypothesis. Mr. Proctor considers the evidence furnished by microscopic and chemical analyses of meteorites in favor of the supposition that matter is propelled from the sun and the stars with such force as to pass beyond their systems. Prof. Zollner observed brilliant linear flashes passing over the whole length of the dull spectrum on which the prominences were seen. Mr. Ranyard infers from Mr. Burton's polariscopic observations of the zodiacal light that it consists of matter in particles so small that their diameters are comparable with the wave lengths of light, or of matter capable of giving specular reflexion. And Mr. Stokes regards the polariscopic observations on the corona itself as implying the existence of minute metallic crystals, moving agreeably to the eruptive theory. This testimony of the same phenomena in both zodiacal light and solar corona, by independent observers, is a point of highest interest, and singularly attests the probability of expulsion.

In three recent lectures published by Helmholtz on the eye, while extolling its perfection as an instrument in the mode in which we use it, he points out its various defects: the blind spot; the blind lines and striæ corresponding to the vessels; its incapacity to focus equally red and violet rays; the want of uniformity in its refraction, as indicated by the lines that appear to proceed from a star, etc. He discusses the various colors of the spectrum, and represents this not in the mode usually adopted of a circle, with segments of various sizes corresponding to the several primary colors, but as a triangle, of which green, violet and red occupy the angles, and blue, yellow and purple the sides, white having an eccentric position near the yellow. Violet, which he was formerly indisposed to regard as a primary color, he again admits; and he seemed inclined to advocate, as best explaining the phenomena of color blindness, the views of Young—that there are special nerves for perceiving red, green and violet rays—an opinion that is less surprising, says Nature, in view of Brown Sequard's conclusions in regard to the number of channels for special sensations contained in the spinal cord, and which is also supported by the remarkable specialization shown by Helmholtz himself to occur in the branches of the auditory nerve, indicated by the phenomena of certain defects of hearing.

The New Explosive.—Dualin is working its way to power. A correspondent of the Tribune describes some of its effects:

"Two pounds of dualin were laid upon the top of the largest piece of limestone rock that could be found in the neighborhood. The rock probably weighed between ten and twelve hundred weight. The powder was simply laid upon the top of it, with the wire, and covered with two shovelfuls of earth. The electric machine connected with it was carried to a safe place on the other side of the field, and the operator simply turned the handle. The explosion which followed was terrific. Strange to say, there were no falling fragments of the rock to be seen or heard, but only, after the sharp report, a small cloud of dust and white smoke like steam. The effect upon the rock was to pulverize it. There were perhaps half a dozen good-sized pieces left, but none larger than a man's head, and the rest was powdered and mashed into the hole where the rock had been. Such a terrible power has the dualin that it would seem to be unfit for breaking quarried stone, on account of the waste that must necessarily ensue. It was very natural for a spectator to say, as one of the party did: 'Why, where has the rock gone?'" It does not "go off" by the match, or concussion, or friction. Only electricity releases its terrific forces. What it is is still a secret. But it is evidently something of the Vril sort.

Facts About Fermentation.—The little organisms which cause fermentation are soft and wet; moisture constitutes a great part of their substance, and in a dry medium they cannot live. Applications, therefore, of a mere drying process are among the most important agencies for preventing fermentation. Germs of putrefaction or decomposition may be present in fruit, but if we merely take away the greater part of the moisture, we render the substance incapable of decomposing. Among the agents which serve for that purpose, there are some which abstract the water, not in a state of vapor, but in the liquid state. If we put a piece of fresh meat in contact with salt, or rub it over with salt, the salt gradually absorbs the water. The action is truly a drying action upon the meat, and it is effectual. In like manner, it is known to many persons that sugar is used just as salt. Ordinary jam—fruit and sugar which have been boiled together for some time—keep better if the pots into which it is ponred are tied up while hot. If one pot of jam be allowed to cool before it is tied down, little germs will fall upon it from the air, and they will retain their vitality, because they fall upon a cool substance; they will be shut in by the paper, and will soon fall to work decomposing the fruit. If another pot, perfectly similar, be filled with a boiling-hot mixture, and immediately covered over—though, of course, some of the ontside air must be shut in—any germs which are floating in it will be scalded, and in all probability destroyed, so that no decomposition can take place.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the several Southern States, Text-School Books which should be entirely unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern the facts of history and science—of School and College—Text-books and educators named below, which of the most eminent citizens of ing the necessity for a series of tirely unsectional, impartisan, and should not be offensive to the people—which should present only are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. W. W. GOODWYN,

No. 52 Gravier Street,

DEALER IN

Stoves and Tinware of All Kinds.

While he is prepared to furnish, at the lowest rates, Cooking and Heating Stoves of all the various styles and patterns sold in this market, he makes a specialty of the following, to wit:

Cottage, Cricket, The Best, Relief, Gray Jacket, and Diadem.

These Stoves are sold under a guarantee, and may be returned if they do not perform well.

Note by P. M. Goodwyn.—Lack of health has obliged me for a time to give up my regular calling—that of the ministry. In the meanwhile, in order to do what I can for a support, I have engaged as an assistant in my brother's establishment, as above advertised. And I take this method of soliciting from among the readers of the Advocate—many of whom are my personal acquaintances and friends—a share of their patronage whenever they may have need of anything in the above line. Orders sent through their merchants, or to either of us direct, will receive prompt attention. mh7 6m

MEDICAL.

INDIAN TURNIP COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM,

FOR THE CURE OF

Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various Affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients.

The Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm completely cures the most inveterate cases of Bronchitis, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Pulmonary Oppression, the Spasmodic Nervous Disorders which attend certain forms of Coughs, Sore Throat, and generally all cases of Inflammation of the Respiratory Organs. It has a soothing action upon the Cough, facilitates expectoration, checks the spitting of blood, and relieves fits of Asthma. In this last disease the Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm has been given with the greatest success. Its use in Whooping Cough remarkably relieves this distressing affection.

Prepared and for sale by

B. LAPLACE, Druggist,

Nos. 24 and 26 Elysian Fields street, and the principal Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans. mh21 1m

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

20 Baronne St., New Orleans.

Caution to the Public.—Be sure to get the right article.

Among the references are Hon. S. Belden, Attorney General; Hon. C. O. Dugue, Ex-Judge District Court; General Thomas M. Scott, of J. Pinckney Smith & Co.; Rev. L. P. Hentz, Lutheran Church; Captain J. J. Rivera, foreman of the Bulletin office, and many others nn30 6m

TO THE AFFLICTED.

The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly

Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup.

Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.

It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.

For sale by all respectable druggists.

E. P. DUCONGE, Proprietor,

fe29 2m 39 Chartres street.

MANY IMPORTANT CURES of Paralysis, Rheumatism, Consumption, General Debility, Female Diseases, Weakness of Generative Organs, and chronic diseases generally, are being made at 156 Carondelet street, New Orleans, by the EQUALIZER, which distributes equally all over the body a perfect circulation of blood. Send for circular.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We notice a fair degree of animation in the general market, especially in most branches of the wholesale trade. Stocks of goods are ample and, being mostly of direct importation or bought from manufacturers at minimum rates, are offered at New York prices or less, presenting great inducements to purchasers.

The river is 10 feet 9 inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-second instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	11,507
Lake.....	12
Arkansas.....	680
Mobile.....	1,511
Florida.....	4
Texas.....	158
Total.....	14,078

On Saturday buyers came forward with a better spirit, and prices assumed more steadiness and firmness, the closing quotations showing an advance of $\frac{1}{16}$c. in the inside figures for low middling. In fact, the general advantage was on the side of the factor, but without any other quotable variation than the above. At the same time a considerable portion of the business was at prices showing no improvement. The sales embraced 4,250 bales. On Monday the movement was partially suspended by the storm, and the sales were confined to 650 bales, partly at concessions of $\frac{1}{8}$@$\frac{1}{4}$c., without which buyers could not have been induced to come forward. On Tuesday, the storm having subsided and private telegrams from New York reporting an improvement, which was subsequently confirmed, the market opened with a more cheerful feeling and quite an active demand, enabling factors not only to recover the weakness of the day previous, but to realize a slight improvement on Saturday's figures for strict good ordinary and low middling. Prices, nevertheless, exhibited considerable irregularity, strict low middling, for example, selling as low as 21 $\frac{5}{16}$c., and as high as 22c. The movement was animated throughout the day, and resulted in sales of 5,900 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 845,774 bales, against 1,165,955 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 838,497 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 131,087 to France, and a decrease of 590,008 to Great Britain, and of 181,391 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Sugar.—The supplies are light, as usual, at this season of the year, and the demand is fair for open kettle sugar. Clarified continues dull. The sales on Saturday and Monday were at 5@5$\frac{3}{4}$c. for inferior, 7(@7$\frac{1}{2}$c. for common, 7$\frac{1}{4}$@7$\frac{3}{4}$c. for good common, 8$\frac{1}{4}$@8$\frac{3}{4}$c. for low fair, 8$\frac{1}{2}$@9$\frac{1}{4}$c. for good fair, 9$\frac{3}{4}$@9$\frac{1}{4}$c. for fully fair, and 9$\frac{3}{4}$@10c. for prime.

Molasses.—Louisiana continues in good demand, with light receipts. On Tuesday inferior fermenting sold at 25 (@35c., fair fermenting 42$\frac{1}{2}$c., fair not fermenting 45c., cistern bottom 52$\frac{1}{2}$c., and prime reboiled 52$\frac{1}{2}$c. ℔ gallon.

Corn.—The supplies have been liberal, and in excess of the demand. On Tuesday the demand was active, and 22,000 sacks sold at 75c. for mixed and yellow, and 80c. for white.

Oats.—On Tuesday there was a good demand, and 7,000 sacks sold at 55c. for ordinary, 56@57c. for prime and choice, a lot of choice commanding 58c. ℔ bushel.

Bran.—On Tuesday 425 sacks sold in lots at $1.60 ℔ 100 lbs.

Pork.—On Tuesday 60 bbls. mess sold at 13.37\frac{1}{2}$, and 48 bbls. heavy mess at $13.75 ℔ bbl. It is retailing at $13.75@$14.

Bacon.—The market is quiet but firm, with a fair stock on hand. On Tuesday 100 casks sold, in lots, at 5$\frac{1}{4}$c. for shoulders, 7$\frac{1}{4}$c. for clear rib sides, and 8c. ℔ lb. for clear sides.

Hams.—On Tuesday 40 tierces sugar-cured hams sold, in two lots, at 10$\frac{3}{4}$@11c. ℔ lb.

Dry Salt Meat.—The market has continued quiet, with very little in first hands. On Tuesday 40 casks and 25 boxes shoulders sold at 4$\frac{7}{8}$@5c. ℔ lb., and 2,100 lbs. at 4$\frac{1}{4}$c. for shoulders, and 5$\frac{1}{4}$c. for sides and hams.

Lard.—On Saturday 100 kegs kettle-rendered sold on private terms. Tierces are quoted at 9$\frac{1}{2}$c., kegs 10$\frac{7}{8}$@10$\frac{1}{4}$c. ℔ lb.

Breakfast Bacon.—Western commands 10$\frac{1}{2}$@11c. ℔ lb. Northern 11 (@11$\frac{1}{2}$c.

Beef.—Texas commands $11@$12, Western $15@$16 ℔ bbl. Western is scarce. The market is bare of Northern. It would command $16.50@$17.

Corn Meal.—On Saturday 100 bbls. sold at $3.90, and on Monday 300 bbls. sold at $3.75 ℔ bbl. On Tuesday 700 bbls. sold, in lots, at $3.75@$3.85. It is now held at 3.87\frac{1}{2}$@$3.90, and retailing at $4.

Cow Peas are quoted at $2.50@$2.75 ℔ bushel, wholesale and retail. They are dull.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 110@110$\frac{1}{4}$, (against 109$\frac{7}{8}$ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates, (against 110 at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to $2,300 in American half-dollars on Saturday at 108$\frac{1}{2}$, and $500 on Tuesday at 108$\frac{1}{4}$.

Special Notices.

Meridian District Conference.

The District Conference of the Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, will be held at Shubuta, Clark county, Mississippi, May 23, 24. Bishop J. C. Keener will preside. Services will commence at ten o'clock A. M. on Thursday. All the preachers on the district are expected to attend, and make full and exact reports. The local preachers and lay delegates are also expected to attend.

Wm. B. Hines, P. E.

New Orleans District Conference.

This body will meet in the Felicity Street church of New Orleans, April 10, at half-past seven o'clock P. M. On Thursday night a general sacramental meeting and district love feast will be held. All the members of the Quarterly Conferences in the district are members of the District Conference, and all the members of the churches are invited to attend the business sessions and the special religious services. Besides the election of delegates to the Annual Conference, it is desirable that reports be furnished on the several subjects indicated in chapter 2, section 3, of the Discipline, in order that these important interests may be thoroughly investigated and discussed.

Lewis Parker, P. E.

Demopolis District Conference.

The Demopolis District Conference, Alabama Conference, will convene at Bladen Springs May 30. Preachers in charge will please be prepared to submit full reports of their charges and all interests connected therewith. Lay members to the Annual Conference will be elected. Will the churches pray that the District Conference may be a great spiritual blessing to their pastors?

S. H. Cox, P. E.

WANTED.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1872. NO. 14.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—The tariff bill has been substantially adopted, with free tea and coffee. An amendment is now pending to abolish all internal tax except on whisky, tobacco, etc.

NEW YORK, March 28.—The bark Nimrod was burnt off Bermuda on the nineteenth instant. Of seventsen persons on board only ten were saved. The vessel was loaded with naptha and kerosene, and an explosion from some unknown cause took place in that portion of the hold behind the main hatch, and running aft beneath the cabin as far as the stern. It is believed the captain's wife and daughter, a young girl, were in the cabin at the time of the explosion. When the fire was seen from the harbor of Bermuda it was too late to render assistance.

NEW YORK, March 29.—The Japanese minister, Mori, denies the report of recent persecution of Christians in Japan.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 29.—The recent earthquake throughout Nevada was the severest within the recollection of the Indians. Not a single brick building or adobe is left standing in some sections. Many springs were stopped and others started.

Great fissures in the earth were produced. The force of the earthquake was spent in comparatively unpopulated districts. Many lives were lost.

LOUISVILLE, March 29.—General Humphrey Marshall died here last night, of pneumonia.

A slight earthquake was felt this morning at Paducah.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 29.—The President has formally declined to interfere in any manner in Louisiana politics. The closing interviews were somewhat brusque.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 30.—Advices from the volcanic country north of Mojovo river show that the recent earthquake was terrific. Twenty-three persons were killed and thirty wounded at Lone Pine; fifty houses were demolished and the town ruined.

NEW YORK, March 30.—The smallpox is increasing in Brooklyn, and the hospitals have been enlarged.

The coroner's jury over the lady who died in a dentist's chair gave a verdict that death was caused by asphyxia. They condemn the manner in which the gas is manufactured, and the careless manner in which it is administered.

LOUISVILLE, March 30.—The first through train of the Louisville and Cincinnati railroad, passing over the iron railroad bridge at Cincinnati, leaves here to-morrow at four o'clock. Trains will thereafter run regularly by this line from Louisville to New York.

NEW HAVEN, April 1.—The few returns received from the towns in this county show that the losses and gains for each party are evenly distributed. In Meriden the Democrats make a net gain of seventy. The vote is generally lighter than last year.

The entire Republican State ticket is elected beyond a doubt.

JACKSON, Miss., April 2.—The civil rights bill, introduced under the guise of a railroad charter, passed the House, and now awaits the action of the Senate. It is the general belief that Gov. Powers will not sign it, but will let it lie over to the next Legislature.

NEW YORK, April 2.—Seventeen cases and seven deaths from smallpox yesterday.

Prof. Morse's death is momentarily apprehended.

Prof. S. F. B. Morse died at his residence in New York city at seventsen minutes before eight o'clock this evening.

Seventeen new cases of smallpox reported to-day, and seven deaths. A physician publishes a card, expressing the belief that the disease is propagated by national bank bills.

HARTFORD, April 2.—Jewell's majority will not exceed two hundred, with the possibility of a failure of an election by the people.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, March 28.—At a meeting of the Internationalists of this city last night there was much excitement, and the proceedings were disorderly. A fight occurred, in which pistols were used, and one man was shot.

The troops dispersed a mob yesterday in Grenada.

BERLIN, March 29.—Prince Frederick William of Prussia will visit his mother-in-law, Queen Victoria, at Baden, where the Queen will remain until after Easter.

LONDON, March 29.—A coal mine explosion killed eight persons. Eleven others were fearfully burned.

ROME, March 30.—Father Gavazzi, the well-known priest and politician, contemplates visiting America, and expects to sail some time during April.

PARIS, March 31.—The National Assembly took a recess yesterday until the twenty-second of April. Previous to adjournment President Thiers addressed the Assembly. He guaranteed the maintenance of internal order, declared that the army was faithful, and assured the chamber that no interruption of peace was threatened from abroad. In the course of his speech he intimated that France was not entirely isolated: she was not without alliances.

MATAMORAS, March 31.—News from Camargo to the twenty-ninth reports General Trevino at that place preparing, in conjunction with General Quiraga, to move on this city with two thousand men and six pieces of artillery.

General Cortina, after his defeat at Barqueria, being unable to reach Reynosa, attempted to join the government troops in the interior, with what success is unknown.

The rumored capture of General Rocha by the revolutionists, near Zacatecas, is still without confirmation.

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE ITEMS.

The Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, after a harmonious session of seven days at Warrenton, Virginia, adjourned to meet again in Baltimore on the first Wednesday in March, 1873.

The statistical report was presented and read. It shows a membership of 23,095, an increase of 899; number of scholars in Sunday schools 19,391, an increase of 1,429; number of Sunday schools 383, increase 29; conversions in the schools 808, an increase of 32. The report of the joint board of finance was received. They paid 90 per cent. of the assessment to each claimant, and raised for this purpose $3,018.37, and for Bishops' fund $1,236.28. They ask for these funds next year $5,500, and ask that the Conference order that the collections be lifted by the third quarterly meeting, and that at next Conference, on the passage of character, each man be required to report in open Conference whether he has faithfully fulfilled his duty and raised his assessments, and that envelopes be supplied to every charge to use during these collections.

The report of the Committee on the Book and Publishing Company of Baltimore City was presented and adopted. It is proposed to raise a capital of $50,000, in five thousand shares at $10 each.

Rev. Dr. Sargent, with much emotion, asked a superannuated relation, after reciting his service, extending over forty-seven years, during which fifteen were spent on circuits, eleven on districts, and twenty-one in stations. The doctor said it was very painful for him to ask this relation, but ill health demanded it. The Conference unanimously granted it by a rising vote.

The report of the missionary treasurer was read, reporting receipts of $4,530.56, and a division of 55 per cent. was made to the claimants on that fund. Several speeches were made enforcing this claim upon the finances of the church.

GROWTH IN GRACE.—Grow in grace; because this is the only way to be certain that you have any grace at all. If we aim not at growth in grace, we have never been converted to goodness. He that is satisfied with his attainments has attained nothing. He that sees so little of the promises of the inward, transforming, elevating influences of grace, as to think that he has attained all he can desire, has never understood the first elements of the Christian life. No! we are begotten to a life which aspires after perfection; we have desires awakened which nothing but complete holiness will satisfy. He who says he is content with his progress has never set out to heaven.—Robert Hall.

A TABLE of the daily wages paid in this country for mechanical labor shows that for nearly all kinds of handicraft work the average rate of wages is higher in the New England States than in the Middle, the Western or the Southern States.

IT IS IN VAIN to hope to please all alike. Let a man stand with his face in what direction he will, he must necessarily turn his back on one-half of the world.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

Special correspondence of the Advocate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: Our people, as a whole, are wofully ignorant of the facts pertaining to the great Indian problem now being solved. As to the present condition of the Indians, and what is being done for them, and the details of the service, most people know nothing at all about them, and the doctrine of extermination is adopted by many from a want of just such information as we hope briefly to give.

The Indian service for years had fallen largely into the hands of those who made of it a merchandise, and, it is said, not one dollar in ten of the liberal appropriations annually made by the government was applied for the benefit of the Indians. Some two years ago a new policy was adopted by the President. All the Indian reservations were put into the hands of the various religious denominations of the country, and the appointment of all agents and employes was left to these bodies, thus securing, as far as possible, not only honest, but conscientious Christian men, who, while they discharged their duty to the government faithfully, would endeavor to civilize and Christianize these wards of the nation. The success they have so far met with is all that could be expected, and if the experiment (if such it may now be called) is permitted to work itself out, our Indians will, at no distant day, be as valuable as any other class of our population. To the Methodist Church was assigned the following agencies—In Oregon: Warm Spring, Siletz and Klamath; Washington Territory: Yakana Skokomish and Quinnielt; Idaho: Fort Hall; California: Hoopa Valley, Round Valley and Tule river; Montana: Blackfeet, Crow and Milk river; and in Michigan, the Ottawas and Chippewas. From most, if not all of them, the reports are encouraging. Your correspondent visited quite a number of their reservations during the past summer, and has received letters from many of them since. The agent at Warm Spring reservation, Oregon, says that when he took charge of it he found the Indians in a very destitute condition; not a pound of grain or any vegetables on the reservation. The half-starved, naked people subsisted on roots, fish and berries. The result of the change was that, during the first year of his operations, the Indians harvested four thousand bushels of wheat, and a large amount of vegetables of all kinds. With regard to their moral condition he says: "A more degraded set of beings, I am sure, did not exist." Had they been left to their own wild natures they could never have fallen so low in the scale of humanity. The employes were living with Indian women in a state of adultery; drinking and gambling was practiced universally by Indians and employes, and polygamy was allowed to an unlimited extent. He says: "We now have a Sabbath school that will compare favorably with any in the country. Our large and commodious school house is filled every Sunday for church service by old and young, anxious to hear God's word, and quite a number are professing Christians. Our day school is a grand success; fifty-seven Indian children are in attendance daily, with a prospect of its increasing to seventy, and the children are making greater progress than in any other school I have ever seen. Our girls' boarding school will be ready for occupancy very soon. We intend to teach, in addition to the regular English branches, sewing, knitting and all kinds of domestic work. All the employes are Christian, married men, except two, and they are highly moral men, and not a drop of liquor is allowed on the reservation. At Simcoe reservation, where are located the Kliquitat and Yakima Indians—once the most dangerous and warlike in the northwest—there are now almost two hundred comfortable houses, with barns and outbuildings—all built by the Indians—two churches, built entirely by Christian Indians, and several thousand acres of land under successful cultivation. They own some twelve thousand head of horses and cattle. About a thousand of the Indians are not only civilized but Christianized, some two hundred and fifty adults being professing Christians. The women do no more of the out-door work than white women similarly situated do. The farm labor school is a grand success. The boys, cultivating some eighty acres of land, raise enough to supply the wants of both their own and the girls' boarding school. During one winter the boys made twenty-eight sets of harness, besides many of the shoes worn in the school. The girls' boarding school, under charge of a Christian woman, is also very successful. In it, besides the rudimentary branches of an English education, the girls are taught sewing, knitting and all kinds of domestic work. These schools number some fifty scholars, and, but for the want of means, might just as easily be two hundred. All the employes on the reservation—some twenty in number—are married, and professing Christians, and all take part in the work of Christianization. Two of the Indians have been licensed to preach, and have met with much success in their Christian labors. Many of the Indians, who have persistently adhered to their own Indian religion, are now coming in and asking for land, and express a desire for Christianity.

At Skokomish the new agent has only been in possession a few months, yet he has brought upon the reservation a large number of Indians belonging to it, who have never before made it their home, and has inaugurated a system that cannot fail of good results. He writes very encouragingly of the prospect. Their school is as large as his present funds will permit; but he looks forward to a considerable increase. In California the agents have had many difficulties to contend with, yet there has been much improvement. The Montana Indians are comparatively wild, but they have been kept at peace, and the surest way to keep them so is by honest dealings with them; and this, we think, has been secured. So we have equally favorable reports from many of the other agencies.

At Tulalip great progress has been made. The female boarding school and male farm labor school have some fifty scholars who show considerable proficiency in all the rudimentary branches of an English education. The men are largely engaged in logging, farming and other work, in which they are as successful as their white competitors. A Methodist missionary, speaking of Grande Ronde agency, on which are the celebrated Rogue River Indians, once so cruel and warlike, says when he first went there he found them naked, and living principally on grasshoppers and sunflower seeds. Now there is not an Indian on the reservation that wears a blanket—all are neatly clad. There is not a wigwam on it—all live in comfortable houses; many speak English, and the men and women all work and live just as their white neighbors do. At Sunrise many talk English, all live in comfortable houses, and dress as white men and women. Some are educated, and all are engaged in farming or some other kind of labor. Bishop Clerkson says: "We have to-day more pious Christian Indians in Nebraska than we have of white people."

So I might cite many other cases. Hundreds of tribes, once warlike, are now settled down to civilization, and many are Christianized. In fact in every tribe in which Christian missionaries have been at work the result is all that could be expected. So of the wild Indians under the new policy. The Sioux, Piegans, Gros Ventres, Shoshones and others are at peace; and even the wild Sioux, Comanches, Cheyennes and Arapahoes have done no deeds of violence within the region of civilization. The Snakes, who two years ago were on the war path, have, many of them, come upon their reservation, and over a thousand in one day cut their hair, threw off their blankets, and decided to be white men.

As to the warlike Apaches we ask a suspension of public opinion until fair opportunity is given for the trial of the "peace policy."

We desire the support of the Christian sentiment of the country for this humane policy, inaugurated by the President, and carried out jointly by the Board of Indian Commissioners and the Secretary of the Interior, knowing that it cannot fail of good results. T. K. C.

LITTLE JESSIE had been doing something which her mamma had told her she mustn't do. She had been eating currants, and, of course, got her mouth all stained. That's the way she got found out. Her mother said: "You know you were forbidden to eat currants!" "But, mother, Satan tempted me!" "Why didn't you say, Get thee behind me, Satan?" "I did say, Get thee behind me, Satan; and he went and got behind me, and pushed me right into the currant-bushes."

AN APPEAL.

To the Lovers of Progress and Methodistic Truths, Greeting:

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS—In the economy of God it falls to the lot of all communities, as well as individuals, at times to feel the effects of want, both spiritual and physical. Now it so happens that just at this time the Methodist Episcopal Church South has no house of worship at Gainesville, Alabama. The house (church) was used by the army during a part of the war and was made no better by this use, and it became unfit for occupation about three years ago, and was sold last year. The Methodist society at Gainesville, Alabama, is small and poor, and has not been able to build a church; but, feeling keenly alive to the necessity of having a house of their own to worship God in, they have arisen in their strength and secured about three-fourths of the money needed to have a neat church—a house for the children of the church—and they now most respectfully, affectionately and urgently ask the friends of the common cause to help them. One thousand dollars more will enable them to have the house so much needed. This little band of Christians has done well in securing $3,000, for they are poor people; and now it is believed that there are brethren and friends through our sunny South who will come to the aid of this struggling Methodist church. Send any amounts, through any safe channel that may be best suited to the parties giving. Address me at Gainesville, Sumter county, Alabama, and I will promptly acknowledge receipt of same.

In the bonds of Christian love, I am your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. GILL,
For and on behalf of the M. E. Church South at Gainesville, Alabama.

A NEEDY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the last issue of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE that all of our Methodist churches and Sabbath schools in the city are in a prosperous condition, and are conducting the exercises in a princely style. Can they not spare the poor country church and Sabbath school in our little village a little out of their abundance? We are laboring hard to build up a church and Sabbath school under many disadvantages, the principal one of which is poverty. We have no suitable place in which to hold Sabbath school or public worship. We are now using a small school house, but how long we can have even that house, to use for that purpose, we cannot say, for it is now for rent, and we may be denied the free use of it any day. We are trying to build a church (one of our good citizens, Mr. J. M. Bach, has given us a lot,) and have some $600 or $700 subscribed. May we not hope to get aid from our good Methodists in New Orleans to accomplish this object? We have even asked for this refused library books from some of the Methodist Sabbath schools in the city for our own, with no success. In this way good deeds may be made fruitful. We have struggled hard and begged harder to get together a small lot of library books, Testaments, etc., to make our school attractive. If the good Methodists in New Orleans wish to do a good act, just ask them to give a little of their wealth to help the churches and Sabbath schools in the country, especially in Amite, thereby bringing adults and children into the folds of the Methodist Church.

The National Publishing Company's Bible Again.

MR. EDITOR: Having sent you, a few weeks since, and article on the National Publishing Company's Bible, in which certain errors in the mention therein made of the Methodist Episcopal Church South were pointed out and complained of, I am glad to be informed, and cheerfully do the company the justice to state that a new edition of their Bible has been published, in which those errors do not exist. The publishers say the errors alluded to occur only in an "old and small (not numerous) edition." As, however, they do not propose to recall the old edition, and replace it by the new and corrected one, those persons having the old edition can prevent the perpetuation of the errors pointed out in our former article by erasing in their copies the passage we therein quoted.

This Bible contains quite a number of interesting and instructive pictorial illustrations of the utensils and altars of Moses' tabernacle and Solomon's temple, together with various tables of useful information.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

AROUND THE WORLD: Sketches of travel through many lands and over many seas. By E. D. G. Prime, D. D. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872.

Dr. Prime is an accomplished writer and a true traveler. Devoting a year to the journey, and arranging everything beforehand, he made all his connections most accurately. The volume gives a fresh and most recent view of the great world-belt which embraces the nations and countries of greatest interest and influence of the present and past. Numerous engravings add to the interest of the work. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

THE AGREEMENT OF SCIENCE AND REVELATION. By Rev. Joseph H. Wythe, M. D. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1872.

The aim of the author is to show the harmony of the principal doctrines of Scripture with a true scientific investigation of the teachings of nature. As far as we have examined the work, it is well and judiciously written, and convincing in its arguments and conclusions. It is written in plain language, and calculated to interest and instruct all classes of readers. The volume contains a valuable glossary and index. 290 pages, 12mo. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

TWENTY YEARS AGO. From the journal of a girl in her teens. Edited by the author of John Halifax Gentleman. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872.

All about what a girl saw in France, and what she thought of French scenery, society, politics and people. It is a girl's journal, edited by the experienced pen of Mrs. Craik. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

THE ADVENTURES OF OLIVER TWIST. By Charles Dickens. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872.

BARNES' NOTES ON FIRST CORINTHIANS, published by Harper & Bros., is a duodecimo of 319 pages, in the same style and binding as the volumes heretofore issued. The Notes on First Corinthians are more extended than those on the Gospels, and are generally of a practical character. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MAGAZINE, VISITOR and LITTLE PEOPLE for April are to hand, and no smell of fire upon them. Dr. Haygood never sent out a better budget of Sunday school literature than this.

ARTHUR'S LADY'S HOME MAGAZINE and the CHILDREN'S HOUR for April are, as ever, the very best magazines in their line.

THE GALAXY, LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE and LE BON TON for April have been received; also the Southern Field and Factory for March.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE and GOOD WORDS for March are to hand, and both fine numbers of two of the best republications which we receive.

ARTHUR'S LADY'S HOME MAGAZINE and the CHILDREN'S HOUR for March are both fine numbers.

A Sudden and Sad Bereavement.

Our readers, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of March 28, have already learned from the secular papers of the death of Mrs. Lee, wife of Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee, presiding elder of the Richmond district. Mrs. Lee had been in delicate health for several months, and latterly she suffered much from severe attacks of asthma. On Monday night, the eighteenth instant, she had such an attack, which lasted several hours. About three o'clock A. M. she found relief, and slept quietly until seven o'clock, when she rose and took breakfast, which she said she enjoyed more than she had done for some time. As the day was bright, she concluded to spend it with a friend in Ashland, and was making her toilet when she complained of slight nausea and some headache; after awhile she grew worse, and a physician was sent for. When he arrived she was insensible, and remained so until her death, which occurred at half-past one o'clock on Tuesday, the nineteenth. Our dear friend, Dr. Lee, was ignorant even of her illness until he reached Ashland, when the sad news was gradually broken to him by friends who accompanied him to his darken and bereaved home. The shock was terrible, and but for the sustaining grace of God he must have sunk under it. Need we bespeak for our brother the earnest prayers of all brethren and friends throughout the country?

THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1872.

IN THE EVENING.

All day the wind had lowlier blown the dust.
All day the wind had swept across the plain.
All day, on rustling grass, and waving trees,
Had fallen "the useful trouble of the rain."
All day beneath the lowering, dreary sky
The dripping earth had cowered sullenly.

At last the wind had sobbed itself to rest.
At last to weary calmness sank the storm.
A crimson line gleamed suddon in the west.
Where golden flecks rose wavering into form.
A hushed revival heralded the night.
And with the evening-time awoke the light.

The rosy color flushed the long gray waves;
The rosy color tinged the mountain's brown.
And where the old church watched the village graves,
Wooed to a passing blush the yew trees' frown.
Bird, beast and flower relenting nature knew,
And one pale star rose shimmering in the blue.

So, to a life long crushed in heavy grief,
So, to a path long darkened by despair,
The slow, sad hours bring touches of relief,
Whispers of hope, and strength of trustful prayer.
"Tarry his leisure," God of love and might,
And with the evening-time there will be light!

All the Year Round.

MEMOIR OF REV. THOMAS NIXON.

The life and ministerial labors of Rev. Thomas Nixon, late of the Mississippi Conference, constitutes no inconsiderable chapter in the history of early Methodism in Mississippi and aojoining States. He was born in Kershaw district, South Carolina, October 22, 1793, and died in Raymond, Mississippi, March 4, 1872, in the seventy-ninth year of his age and the sixtieth of his ministry. While young his parents moved to Tennessee, and settled on Duck river, in Manry county. His parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of uniform and fervent piety, and his father was a preacher. In his seventeenth year he was converted and joined the church at Mount Pisgah, in the county where his parents resided, in May, 1810. His change from unbelief to saving faith in Christ, and from sin to holiness, was clear and satisfactory, and he entered on his new life with unspeakable comfort and heavenly joy. While warm in his first love he began to feel inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel, which soon resulted in his being licensed; and at the Tennessee Conference held at Fountainhead, November 1, 1812, he was admitted on trial in the traveling connection, and was appointed, without a colleague, to Somerset circuit; tho following year to New Madrid; and at the Conference held at New Chapel, Logan county, Kentucky, September 29, 1814, he was received into full connection, ordained deacon by Bishop Asbury, and appointed to Lee circuit. At the succeeding Conference, held at Bethlehem church, in Wilson county, Tennessee, October 20, 1815, he was transferred to the Mississippi district, and appointed to Wilkinson circuit, with instructions to report the following fall at a Conference to be organized in the Mississippi Territory. This district was far remote from the main body of the Tennessee Conference, being separated by the intervening Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes of Indians. The General Conference of 1812 had authorized the Bishops to organize a Conference in the Mississippi Territory, which would have been done but for the war of 1812-15, between the United States and England. This war rendered traveling so dangerous through the Indian nations that the Bishops could neither come to Mississippi, nor could the preachers here visit the sessions of the Tennessee Conference. During the war the Mississippi preachers held three informal Conferences, in which they transacted all the usual business of an Annual Conference except ordination. The General Conference of 1816 renewed the order for the formation of a Conference in Mississippi, and in the fall of that year Bishop Roberts convened the preachers in the Territory at the residence of William Foster, on Pine Ridge, in Adams county, and organized them into an Annual Conference, thenceforward known as the Mississippi Conference. At this Conference Thomas Nixon took his seat as a member, and was elected to the office of elder, and ordained by Bishop Roberts. Bro. Nixon, to the end of life, often referred to the leading incidents of this Conference, and to his eight colleagues, who, with himself, composed the body, with great interest and affectionate delight. He was appointed to Attakapas circuit, and returned the second year, being the only preacher in 1818 west of the Mississippi river, except Ashley Hewit. At the Conference held at Ford's church, on Pearl river, October 29, 1818, he was appointed to Amite circuit. At the next Conference he received his appointment to a new circuit, called Alabama, with indefinite latitude and longitude, sufficient to tax the most robust constitution, and was at liberty to go anywhere in the Territory of Alabama where his services were in demand. His circuit grew into a district, and the next year he was appointed presiding elder of Cahawba district, and also in charge of Cahawba circuit. After the Conference of 1821 his name disappears from the roll of traveling preachers, and he sustained a local relation until the Conference held at Vicksburg, December 13, 1833, when he was readmitted, and traveled successively the Bayon Pierre, Madison and Raymond circuits—the latter two years—when his domestic circumstances again compelled his location. He remained local until the Conference held at Brookhaven, Mississippi, November 23, 1866, when he was readmitted and appointed in charge of Crystal Springs circuit. The next year he was a supernumerary on Cayuga circuit, and the following year in charge of that circuit. In 1870 and 1871 he was a supernumerary on the same circuit, and at our last Conference he was placed on the superannuated list. Thus we see that the sixty years of his ministry were spent, twenty in the itinerancy and forty in the local corps.

On the ninth of May, 1824, he married Miss Elizabeth Rolls, on Pearl river, a lady every way qualified to make him a suitable companion. By this marriage he raised a large family of children, eight of whom, the writer thinks, are yet alive. Soon after his marriage he settled near where Cayuga now stands, in Hinds county, Mississippi, and in the same vicinity spent the remaining years of his life. Having lost his first wife, he married Mrs. Cynthia Dean, November 17, 1847—another estimable Christian lady, who survives him.

Bro. Nixon was a man of fine personal appearance, rather above medium size, and built for strength and endurance. Like most of the itinerant preachers of his generation, he was self-educated so far as theological and pulpit attainments were concerned. His mind was well balanced, and above mediocrity. He was not boisterous in the pulpit, like many of the men of his early days, but he had a clear, sonorous, pathetic, easy-flowing delivery, and, when fully in the spirit of praying and preaching, his voice was decidedly musical. He was well versed in Methodist theology and ecclesiastical economy, and was prepared to explain and defend the doctrines and usages of his church at all times. He utterly ignored the sophomoric balderdash which, I am sorry to say, we too often hear from the pulpit, and depended solely on "prayer and the ministry of the word" for success. He was more like John than Peter: his ministry was that of love more than of reproof and alarm; yet he did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. The statistics show his success as a traveling preacher by the increase in membership on the circuits he traveled, and by the numbers collected on the new charges he organized. As a local preacher he was always decidedly industrious and useful. Wherever he lived or labored he was a pillar of strength to the church. Like most of his colaborers, he had to preach the gospel mainly at his own expense, and, having a large family to rear and educate, he was compelled to devote a large portion of his valuable life to secular pursuits. But, considering his perpetual outlay of thought and time and labor in the interest of the church, he succeeded well in temporalities, and was in good circumstances until broken up by the results of the late war. His ruling desire—to "finish the ministry which he had received of the Lord Jesus"—was strong to the last, and it was with great reluctance that he submitted to be placed on the retired roll. But his work on earth was done. His Master determined to call his toil-worn servant from labor to rest and refreshment. He had occasion to visit Raymond on business, where he was suddenly attacked with colic, which soon involved his kidneys, and, after lingering a few days, he breathed his last on the fourth of March, 1872. During his attack his mind was stayed on God, and his faith was steady and vigorous. Just as he was ready to step on the other shore he sent back the triumphant shout for the consolation and encouragement of surviving friends: "All is well! Jesus is with me!" What an outlook he was permitted to enjoy in the close of life!—his little Conference of 1816, of nine members, and a church membership of about twenty-two hundred, having become the nursing mother of nine other Annual Conferences, well furnished with thousands of itinerant and local preachers, and with multiplied thousands of worthy church members!

I shall not write over one or two more memoirs of my early co-laborers in the Mississippi Conference, at most. They are nearly all gone, and I am almost alone in the earth. Precious brethren! How often does memory call up from the long past the happy days we have spent together. But our happy union is not ended. It will soon be renewed, never to be broken any more.

For the Advocate.

A BIBLICAL SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: We take it for granted that when Methodists understand each other there can be but one opinion, at the main, on the subject of an educated ministry. It is contradictory and absurd to presume otherwise of a body which has done more than any other church to diffuse education among the people of this continent. Other churches may claim that they have, in a narrow sphere, cultivated a higher form of education; but certainly none can compete with Methodism in the matter of its general dissemination among the masses.

The zeal, energy and wisdom displayed by our body in this cause is one of the distinctive features and crowning glories of our work. Surely, then, it is absurd to debate the matter, whether or not it is consistent with our wishes and the genius of our system to aim at an educated ministry.

Our wise and great men, who have appeared to oppose this thing, have not really opposed it. They have, by wise and moderate measures, done more than any one else to promote it. They have merely opposed rash, extreme and impracticable opinions upon the subject. They have endeavored, by restraints, to guide the current of progress into natural, safe and successful channels. A nation, except in a supernatural sense, is not born in a day; nor does anything, except a mushroom, grow up in a night.

It is a great injustice to some of the greatest and most useful men of Methodism to charge them with opposition, nay, even reluctance, to the very highest standard of ministerial education attainable and safe, while compatible with the occupancy of the widest field, and the accomplishment of the most good by our church. They have, with true wisdom, merely deprecated a fungus growth upon our system. Taking it for granted, then, that an educated ministry, with certain expedient and wise qualifications, is desired by every Methodist—nay, going still further, and asserting that the term Methodism, in its literal as well as in its most comprehensive meaning, contradicts the opposite notion—let us consider in this article what is the object, in relation to the matter of ministerial education, to be pursued, and how it is to be attained.

If it be not an insult to the common sense of the readers of this paper to make so palpable a distinction, we will state that object to be not ministerial education for itself, but a ministry efficient and sufficient for the work. Obvious as is the distinction, some have failed to see it, but have clamored for a highly educated ministry per se, without recognizing the other and higher object to which the question of education must be subservient.

Our object, then, is as high a standard of education among our ministry as is compatible with the cry from numberless Macedonian fields.

With this qualification the motto of Methodism on this subject is: "Excelsior."

The question now is, How is this object to be reached? By what system can the most men be educated, suitably educated—that is, educated to meet church purposes—our church purposes; not educated on any accepted ideal system, ancient or modern; finally, cheaply educated?

Now, the course of study adopted by our Bishops is well selected and comprehensive, and, if compassed and well digested by candidates, would help them on vastly in their mental and theological culture. To adopt such a course of study, to set the undergraduates at work upon it, and give them such adventitious help as possible, has been hitherto all that our church could do, under the circumstances. But can we not, ought we not, to do more from this time forward?

There are two classes of men concerned: First, those who have the mental energy and moral stamina to be independent of our aid—men who will be men, whatever obstacle opposes. Such were Winans and Steele—names often fallaciously cited in favor of the "Brush College" system of education. Such men are exceptions. They can get along, nay, perhaps, do better—acquire an original, more vigorous tone of mind—without the assistance and restraints of a school. The second and largest class, however, is composed of mediocre men, who must have help and direction. They are the most useful members of the ministry. Undazzled by ambition, saved from injurious eccentricities of opinion by the lack of a highly-wrought imagination and subtle speculative powers, they move steadily onward in the old paths of the orbit of Christian faith and duty. But then their feet must be placed in these paths, and they must be steadied until they acquire sufficient intellectual momentum and practice. To carry some untrained minds through the course of study, without aid, as they go along, would be like leading a man blindfolded many, through the Cretan labyrinth, and expecting him to remember his route. Like a dyspeptic who eats a hearty meal, there is a vast waste through lack of assimilation.

The question is, How can such men be helped, most efficiently and cheaply helped? Perhaps by a Bible school, not a theological seminary, which, in its usual acceptation, is repugnant, and justly repugnant, to the genius of Methodism, and incompatible with its work. It would be impossible for our church to carry on its work, and require of its ministry the long years of costly training demanded by the customary theological schools. Such a training, it is true, fits some men for peculiar works, but it would unfit the large number of Methodist preachers for theirs. It is not our policy to encourage in too many the attainment of those artificial and scholastic tastes and manners which would lessen their usefulness in many fields.

We need such a school as is capable of assisting our undergraduates through the course of study, or some equivalent course, in a two or three years' term, coming to it with the "ordinary branches of an English education." We need a school capable of squaring a man by rough-hewing; capable, by its lectures, its daily contact of mind with mind, its literary and theological atmosphere, of making the student feel at home, to a certain extent, in the domain of theological lore, in the pulpit and field of polemics. Such an institution might have, first and most important of all, a chair of English literature, a chair of theology and polemics, a chair of mental and moral science, with kindred branches, and a chair of Hebrew and Greek, the course under the last purely voluntary. Such a school would be competent to the instruction of college graduates, and, what is more important, those entering with only the ordinary branches of an English education. The first could take a two years' course in languages and theology; the latter class could embrace the course in three years, or, taking only a partial course, in two years. How much preferable such a training, in many respects, to a collegiate education. A college course requires, without the considerable preparatory culture, four years of study. Besides, in such a school as we are describing, the training is specific. Of course, if a man can get the collegiate preparation, so much the better. But how few can afford it.

We repeat it, such a Bible school is especially for the benefit of those who have had few educational advantages. Is such a school practicable and cheap? If each Conference could raise $5,000 it would give a fund of $150,000. $30,000 could be appropriated to buildings, library, furniture, etc., making an humble beginning, leaving a balance of $120,000, which would yield, at eight per cent., nearly $10,000. Four professors would absorb $8,000 of this, and a steward $1,000.

The duty of the steward would be to provide for and administer the boarding department, and to make every month a pro rata distribution of the cost of keeping up the department. In this way, by economical management, the cost of board and washing to each individual of one hundred boarders would not be more than $8 a month, or $72 per year or session. It would be comparatively easy for each scholar or his friends to raise this amount. Now, with the present state of mind in the church on the subject of ministerial education, it would be easier to raise $150,000 for such an institution than $50,000 for any secular school or university, and this would be the best nucleus for the university.

FROM CALCASIEU.

MR. EDITOR: Having made one round through this missionary field, it may not be amiss to give you some geographical items in regard to it. Lake Charles, the county seat of Calcasieu parish, is on the eastern shore of the pretty lake bearing the above name. It is as yet but a "wee" place, but with the speedy construction of the railroad to Texas, now in pregress, there will be an influx of people. Around the village are some ten sawmills, with planing and shingle machines. Some million and a half of capital is invested in mills, steam-tugs, schooners, timber wheels, and stock to work them. The Calcasieu river, one of the most beautiful in the State, flows through the lake, and, after leaving the lower part of the same, meanders softly through open prairie for some sixty miles, and then mingles with the open sea. The lake is on the divide between the grand forest of naval pine to the north, and the great natural meadows lying to the southward.—Around the lake are found extensive plantations of the orange and other fruits; over the meadows roam vast herds of native cattle and horses, and the river bears many a sail, transporting the products of the mills and returning supplies. Captain Daniel Goss, a native of Germany, and largely engaged in the lumber business, with a commendable zeal, has introduced quite an immigration from the "Fatherland." The colony is prosperous, and their industrious habits tend to make them valuable nicks in the business of the place. This people are worthy the notice of Bro. Ahrens.

Going northward from this point the road crosses the river, and the west prong of the same, over gently undulating ground, amid forest solitudes. Away from the creeks which feed the river it is an unbroken array of pine, through whose lofty tops the breeze sweeps, making a sad melody, much like some plaintive dirge sweetly played upon the organ. Houses are far apart, the settlers seeking locations some distance from the main line of travel. This adds to the somber shading of the picture, and the stranger almost concludes that he has reached the outposts of life. But let him follow the preacher to some sequestered nook of the woods, enter the plain log-house, and he is soon made to realize that man hath a passing habitation even here. As one advances, passing ceaseless marshes, ridges and depressions, the country becomes higher, and clear, swift-running creeks, whose waters are cool and sweet, and whose trout and perch would satisfy the palate of any epicure, become frequent. The lands on their borders are very productive, but subject to partial overflow in the spring, yielding five hundred pounds of cotton or fifty bushels of corn per acre. It is found, however, that the pine woods are of a superior quality for agriculture, and some good farms are being opened in them. Immigration from Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi is coming in freely, and the new-comers are a noble set of people. Many of them have grace in their hearts and praise in their mouths. The coming fall, if Providence permits, will bring us a much larger accession to our population, judging from the tone of numerous letters.

This is emphatically a poor man's country—lands cheap, water abundant and of the best, the people hospitable and ready to help the industrious immigrant, the soil kind and fruitful, and in point of health, can be no better anywhere.

Religiously, the state of things may be classed as fully fair. The same defects are found here that we find in other sections, but the same blessed Jesus lives to impart life. If we are weak, he is powerful, and only waits our petitions to send us strength. When assailed by temptation, his compassion can be touched, for he hath suffered with our pleadings, and under his wings there is still security. Truly his presence is needed. The seed planted by Parvin, Harp, Ivy, Byrd and others has not all died out, though it needs watering by the Holy Ghost. Oh! what precious words do I hear about these brethren. May they not faint nor grow weary in the gospel, for though they have sowed in tears and amidst privations, there is a multitude of stars gathered by them for the crown of Jesus. Some are gone before, others linger on this side of the stream, but light shines in their face as they mention the above names, and they hope to rejoin them in their Father's home.

I received into the church one of Mr. Spurgeon's Sunday school pupils. He is a promising young man, and is doing much good. His hope is to join the Conference the coming year and work for Christ. His grandfather was one of Mr. Wesley's preachers. Some good has been done—more expected; but advertising is, in religious matters, not always best.

INDAMORA.

EXTRACT

From the Annual Report of the Woman's Union Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, for 1871.

A lady of Baltimore sends us the following, which we publish most cheerfully.

At the suggestion of Mrs. E. C. Thomson, of the Episcopal mission in China, an appropriation for the support of five girls in the orphanage at Shanghai, beginning January, 1871, has been for the past year sent to Mrs. Lambuth, of the Methodist Church South in that place, who has had charge of the school during Mrs. Thomson's visit to this country. Rev. and Mrs. Thomson are now on their return voyage, and hope to resume their work in January next. In applying for aid in establishing this orphanage Mrs. Thomson says: "Mr. and Mrs. Lambuth have been personally and intimately known to me for sixteen years, and I can say with confidence that they have ever been most zealous and faithful workers. The society cannot make a wiser use of their money than by supporting a teacher, Bible reader or scholars."

Of these, the Rev. Mr. Lambuth writes: "We find that $40 in gold will support one boy or girl for one year, supplying everything that is necessary—teaching, boarding and clothing. I would like to increase the number of girls to twelve.—Buildings for the girls' school will cost about $250 or $300. They now occupy the old school room formerly occupied by the girls of Mrs. Lambuth's old school, for which we pay $6 a month. They will continue there during this year (1870). The school is getting on well. We have one Bible woman, who is in the employ of the mission; she resides in the school rooms. We have another young woman preparing for the work of a Bible reader. There is also one of Mrs. Lambuth's old scholars preparing to be a teacher in a girls' day school which we wish to open by and by. Eighty dollars in gold would be sufficient to open a school of fifteen or twenty girls for one year. The school will be near where they can attend the morning and evening services of the orphan school."

Mrs. Lambuth has sent a photograph of the school, marking those whom we support, and describing their characters, etc. Of the Bible woman she says: "She exerts a good influence by talking and praying with the children. She visits people in the neighborhood, urging women to listen to the story of the Savior and other Bible histories she has learned. Then on the Sabbath she does a good work by bringing in a congregation of women and children to listen to the preaching." She adds: "I should feel it a great satisfaction to see the Home for Orphans well established, and the fund raised for its support at home."

Extracts from Letters of Mrs. Lambuth, dated April, 1871, on Receiving a Donation for the Orphanage through the Woman's Union Missionary Society.

"Your welcome letter greatly encouraged our hearts to try and gather in a few more children to be taught the way of everlasting life. The Chinese New Year is now at hand, and the school will be dismissed for two weeks, after which we will select two girls upon whom to bestow your generous gift. Please let us know by next mail what names you desire given to the children, so that I may report of them in order. Surely your society shall be blessed of the Lord, for Christ's daughters are very degraded, more than her sons even, need instruction. It is the mothers, more than the fathers, who teach their young to worship idols, and think of them as having power to help or curse their efforts; and not until the daughters are taught Christianity can we hope for a nation turning to God. Let the young daughters be gathered into Christian schools, and when they come to preside at their hearths great good will come."

"We are doing our best for girls of some promise into the orphanage, and I trust we will be successful. The first two selected are doing quite well—one of these can well indeed. She has learned the Lord's Prayer, and seemed to repeat it before going to bed as well as after getting up in the morning. She is learning the characters on pieces of red paper, and will go on with these until she has learned four hundred of them. Who shall have her begin to read catechisms, and such books as Watson upon Line, Henry and his Notes, etc., together with the Bible, and side reading books, they will, of course, learn how to cook, sew, embroider, etc.

"As soon as we get all the money a kind friend from Philadelphia promised to photograph them for you. I trust you will feel encouraged, and pray that much good may come from your gifts to these dear children."

A TEACHING INCIDENT occurred recently in a village where quite a revival is in progress. The pastor, at a prayer meeting, requested all who were Christians to go into a room by themselves, while those who professed in religion, but not professed it, were desired to remain for a season of special prayer. One boy offered up short, fervent prayer for the forgiveness of their sins, and for aid to live a life of holiness. It was a solemn time, and it seemed as if each one present must forget self offer a prayer. At last a little boy of six years, with clasped hands, fervently repeated the Lord's Prayer, and was followed immediately by his sister of three years with "Now I lay me down to sleep." Among these babes in Christ, in the simplicity of childhood, had not their petitions, the room was filled as if an angel's voice had been heard, and not a soul remained unmoved, all feeling that they were at the very door of heaven.—Congregationalist.

MUCH excitement has been created in Protestant Paris by the vote for the Presbyterial Council. The voters were 2,138, the absolute majority 1,070. Six of the Evangelical candidates have been upset. Two others, one of them M. Coquerel, failed through not having a relative majority; but they were placed on the poll than any of the Rationalists. The result is hailed with satisfaction.

DON'T cram the child at school; it is bad for the brain; don't cram it at table—it is bad for the stomach; both bring doctors' visits.

THY KINGDOM COME.

Thy kingdom come. Great need I have,
Thou knowest,
Good Lord, that thy strong kingdom come to me;
Lest I should sink still nearer to the lowest,
And lose the few faint stars that now I see.

My kingdom, Lord—its glory is departed,
Its palaces are low, its skies are gray;
And I have lost my way—an listless-hearted,
"Thy kingdom come" is all that I can say.

Thy kingdom, in its purity and beauty—
Free-blowing airs of heaven—come to me!
Nay, thou shalt rather seek it in thy duty,
"Mid the dull waters of life's restless sea!"

Good Words.

TO A ROBIN.

Sweet little bird! along the path
Where fallen leaves and flowers lie,
Thy mellow song sweet music hath
To turn the shadows in mine eye.

Full of strong life, thy voice is heard
Amidst so much that speaks of death,
Singing when every other bird
Is mute in my garden saith.

When it shall be my time to die,
Come to my window, little bird,
That I may say a last "good by,"
And hear again this song just heard.

THE ANGEL-FACE ON MAN.

A MEDITATION.

"And all that sat in the council looking stedfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel."—Acts vi, 15.

Yet I think we may say that there are certain things common to the angel-face on man amid all the endless variety of type and form; certain things which we may look for (with at least but little exception) on all the faces which carry on them any image or resemblance to higher worlds and holier creatures. And by the mention of these we shall make the subject quite practical.

Brightness.—We cannot be wrong in supposing that there was something luminous on the face of Stephen which was seen by those who "looked stedfastly" on him. Some hovering splendor, or some more settled halo. As we say, "a light upon the face." We always associate brightness with the angels, and their appearances. If they come like common men, wearing humanity for disguise, (as they did to Abraham on the plain,) the veiled brightness soon begins to shine through. If they come in their own nature, and proper state, then "the countenance is like lightning, and the raiment white as snow." If Stephen's countenance had been dull or sad on that day, this in the text had never been recorded of him. Why should any man wear darkness or heaviness on his face? There is something in the world which we may learn, there is something from God which we may have, that will change all to brightness. Not indeed to brightness such as the angels above live in, and constantly behold. There are some things to weep over; there are many things to fear. This is a world of cloud and shadow. But the heaven in which the cloud floats is larger than the cloud, and all full of light. Shadows are melting things, and even while they continue, the very fact that they are seen to be shadows argues the presence and prevalence of a superior light. The true philosophy of life is this—to get the light within ourselves—the light of God, for without that all must be dark; and then to get the habit of looking for and seeing the light everywhere, according to that profound and beautiful scripture: "In thy light shall we see light." If I know that I have a Father in heaven who watches over all his children, and over me among them, who forgives while he condemns my sin, who strengthens the purpose of goodness in my heart by immediate touches and inspirations of his Holy Spirit, who provides for all my need, who cares for me in all my cares, who leads me and guides me, all blind and sorrowful as I sometimes am, in an everlasting way; and if I also know that he is the Father of the world, and holds it in constant rule and in constant training, leading it on through rainy days and wintry weather to the summer that is coming; if I know that he hates all the world's vileness and yet pities its miseries, and rules everything for its ultimate good, which he has bound himself by word and oath and covenant to secure—then why should I be sad? If it be true that there are foreshadows of evil which will certainly come, it is yet more true that there are foresplendors of good which will as certainly come, and come not to flicker for moments, but to stay for ages, and even for evermore. Therefore I will not go into the caves where the doubting dwell, and where the fearful mutter their apprehensions, and where the willfully sorrowful cherish their miseries. I will walk the open plain where light shines, although often checkered with shadows, and set face to the upward way, although passing storms sometimes hide it from view. Since I may, I will wear the angel-look of cheerfulness, and live in the light of God.

Calmness.—Stephen was preternaturally calm; and calm in a scene of the utmost excitement. There had just been eager disputation. False witness had been given against him. The people had been "stirred up" to fever heat. The council was in wrath. False men stood there confronting him to swear away his life; and yet he is as calm as if he were in an evening meeting of disciples. "What matters it?" he seems to have thought. "I have spoken the truth. I will speak it again if I may, and by God's help, so keep my spirit in the truth that all this turbulence and commotion shall remain outside of me, while I possess my soul in patience, and breathe in the serenity of the angels." The test of a man's soul-state is often thus made very practical in life. He is tried by the pressure of the hour, and by the hurry of the happening events sometimes even more than by the general aspect of affairs. And it is not enough to have a general cheerfulness as the result of a survey of life and the world on the whole. There must be superiority to particular disquietudes, and a keeping of the heart in the stillness of grace, in the great and deep peace of God in the very presence of any immediate agitations. It need not be disguised that this is sometimes a matter of supreme difficulty. Present things and living men are so powerful, especially when they are heated and eager! To be calm when the atmosphere of the time and place is at fever heat, and the passions of others around are in full play, seems almost like being inhuman. No; not inhuman, but superhuman—Christlike, gracious. And no one can hope to get the angel-face who furrows and flushes his own with daily excitements, and yields without a struggle to particular temptations in the hope that a general obedience will get him through. The peace of God is to keep the heart and mind, as a garrison is kept. Surely "the helmet of salvation" should keep the head cool and quiet. The very feet should be "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." "Stand, therefore," as Stephen stood, when anger burns, when falsehood lies, when cupidity grasps the shining dust, when pleasure sings that you may dance, when earth is magnified, when heaven is slighted. Look above, look beyond. Bring heaven the nearer, and dwell in its eternal calm while these fretful things flow by. Yet this calmness had nothing unsocial, unbrotherly, inhuman in it. It was not, in Stephen, the sign of a mystical abstraction of the spirit from men and their ways and interests. Perhaps no man in the assembly was more intensely interested in what was going on than he; certainly no one had a kindlier concern for the real well-being of all who were before him. We may well suppose that Benignity shone out in that wonderful arresting face, and that this was one feature of the angel-look on which they could not but gaze. Without this there could be no resemblance to an angel of God, still less any resemblance to God himself or to his dear Son. This is the one thing which, less than anything else, could be absent. This is the family likeness. For "God is love," and if he could assume any visible form, love and kindliness would shine conspicuously there. And God so loved the world that he gave his Son, who, in being his Son, is also love; and all who become children necessarily wear the image. And he that loveth not is not of God, and cannot wear an angel-face. A man without love, without bowels of compassion, without inward fountains of human tenderness, without a heart that broods over the world in some measure like the heart of God, is without the chief feature of the great family likeness. The devil is great. The devil wears a kind of shattered splendor on his face. The devil is intellectual. The devil is calm. But there is no working of pity in his heart; no flush of benignity on his face; and by a long course of rebellion he has forgotten how to love. But those who, like Stephen, learn the lesson at the feet of Christ, and practice it among men—even among those who have no answering affection, even in the presence of their enemies—those who return good for evil, and love for hatred, who forgive all who trespass against them, as they are themselves forgiven of God, and seek the salvation of souls as men seek gold—they put on the image of the heavenly, they look like their brothers of the upper kingdom, they look like what they are—the children of the King!

Lest there should be any thought of pusillanimity in all this, we add, as another feature of the angel-face, Fearlessness. A faithful fearlessness to truth and duty, without regard to any present personal consequences. In Stephen's case those consequences were most threatening. Indeed, they proved to be what we call "fatal." But in the nomenclature of heaven fatal sometimes means vital. To the cowardly, life is death. To the fearless, death is life. Not that that issue hangs near us usually in ordinary life as the result of obedience. Courage often means safety, escape from petty annoyances and molestations, and entrance openly upon a wider and freer way. And in the highest sense it always means safety. He is safe who, on just grounds, can respect himself, who feels that he is bearing witness to the truth, who gives no place to traitorous suggestions of compliance for comfort's sake, who refuses to bend his spirit to the rule of circumstances, or to take mould law of guidance from "society," who, although he never wishes, often dares to be peculiar, who subjects the present to the future, and holds this vain world and this fleeting time cheap, in comparison with grander worlds and everlasting duration. If an angel were here, to live for a while the life of a man, you would see what it is to be brave. You would see him pass through sorrows smiling, his heart borne up already with foretaste of the after-joy. You would see how easy it would be to make what we call "sacrifices," and how they would all be entered in his life-book as so many advantages gained. You would see how little he would care for the murmurings of men, for the stirrings up of the people by this or that, for threat, defiance, death itself. The death-gate would be to him a very goal, by entering which he would regain life for evermore. Now all this is just what you may be. The celestial courage is attainable in terrestrial scenes, if not perfectly yet in large measure, and those who attain it will, by so much more, put on celestial resemblance, and look on human scenes, as it were, with the face of an angel.

We venture to give one touch more to this picture. He who would have the angel-face must look high and far. He must learn to look not so much at things, as through them, to see what is in them, and what is beyond. In a little while Stephen "looked steadfastly up into heaven." There is a look for a mortal man to give! A look which, in his case, was well rewarded, for "he saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. And said, Behold! I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God!" And that look gave him final victory. Men were gnashing their teeth beside him, and stopping their ears against his words, and crying with loud voice, and rushing upon him with one accord, to bear him away on the angry flood of their passion to a violent death. They did not know that to him the pains of death were over. He was already dead in spirit. He had "looked" himself into heaven. He had entered yonder gate of jasper. He had trodden the streets of gold. In a moment he had gone beyond all starry splendors, into God's pure glory, and had heard the rewarding welcome from the Savior's lips. But this was not the first time he had looked into heaven. Ever since he became a believer he had been looking that way, and after Jesus had left them and gone thither he had scarce looked any other way. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth"—where Christ sometimes standeth, as to Stephen, in token of all needful help-giving to those who look. "Things above!" You find them everywhere—in daily duties, in commonest things—but it needs the angel-eye to see them. Always look within, look through, look above, look beyond, look far on. Be an angel, or be a child in this; for the little child is not unlike the angel in its looking. Did you never see it on the little face—that calm, dreamy, distant look, that pierces quite through your world, and transcends all your ideas of prudence and care and duty with a sublime indifference, which is none the less grand that it is so simple? Of course a child cannot be said to have an angel's thought. It has not even a man's. Yet in some respects the child is nearer the spiritual world than the man is. It is more than a poetic fancy that "heaven lies about us in our infancy." Children come out of the kingdom of heaven. They come from God, who is the center and glory of that kingdom, and, all unconsciously, they behave themselves as those who are not yet far from home. They are in the fields nearest the home. By the least hint or suggestion they will look back to the door, and even think it not impossible to go in. They believe what they are told. Words of God, angel-visits, ghosts, wonders—are all taken literally. They have no difficulty in believing. The difficulty comes, alas! but too soon. The dream-like glory and freshness of the morning-time fade away. The world becomes all materialism. Knowledge lords it over faith. Experiences destroy simplicity; and amid the dust and hurry of secular things the wonders of eternity are veiled and hidden, as the great snow-mountains are often covered with mist and cloud. Then at night often (happy they to whom it is so) comes a clearing time. The true day begins to break at sunset, and the shadows flee away. Then the old child-faith comes back, but in a higher form. Then it is found that matter is the shadow, and spirit is the substance. The soul begins to look through to look high and far, and on the dying beds, and in departing hours, you find again the child-look—the angel-look on the face of the mortal man who is just putting on immortality. But although this is a sketch but too faithful of the course of many a life, it is not the course we are intended to run. It is not intended, surely, that we should lose the battle of manhood, or wage it doubtfully, because, through divine grace, we may collect our forces, and calmly retire into eternal safety at the last. It is intended that we should be victorious all the way, that we should walk by faith and not by sight, that we should pierce through disguises, and blow away the thick delusions of life with spirit-breath, as the north wind clears the sky, and "look," with angel-face, "not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."

Practically the most important thing is yet to come, viz.: How all this may be—how we may wear the angel-face among men. Of course it is quite vain to attempt to put it on directly, and by mental intention, as a soldier puts on his armor, or a king his royal robe. To put the matter plainly, could anything more absurd be conceived than this, that a man should say: "Now I am going to look like an angel!" If he is not like the angels, he never can look like them. If he has not got something of the angel soul, he never can wear the angel-face. You may think that the subject of this meditation is a kind of outward superficial subject—not more than a branch of the fine arts of religion. It is really intensely inward and spiritual. It points to a state of things within, so clear and strong, and spiritually vital, as to affect the outward appearance, and find there perpetual expression. Facial brightness, if you have it—and you may have it with any kind of features, plain, rugged, storm-beat; sunshine is nowhere more beautiful than on rough rocks—what is it but an overflowing from the light of God within? Calmness on the countenance is index to peace in the soul. Benignity appearing in the features is the flushing out of indwelling love. And so of each particular trait. Never mind the face. Forget, if you will, that you have a face. I believe one face is just as good as another, or almost as good, for the expression of divine sentiment and emotion. Keep soul-brightness, and the smile will, somehow, ripple through. Keep soul-peace, and fear or misery will not settle on your face. Steel your heart with heroic purpose, and you will never go with bloodless lips and coward eye. Love God with heart and soul, and strength and mind, and your neighbor as yourself; and you will never need to think of putting up a face-advertisement of what will be found within. The poor will bless you, and the fallen will look up in your face, as they looked in the face of Christ, and see pity and help written there; and the children will play about your knee; and the very dogs will come to eat of the crumbs that fall from their master's table. But don't think about the face itself. If you try to put any particular emotion into the features, it will not be surprising if the very opposite emotion should come instead. Try to look grand, and you may make yourself little. Try to look innocent, and (although you may not remember a single sin) the general consciousness of guilt may seize you and put its color into your face. Have the angel within, and leave all else to come, as it will. Or, as we have it in the context, and in the case of Stephen, be "full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," i. e., be a Christian man, through and through, in belief and practice, among fellow-disciples, among worldly people, and the Lord your God will put his "beauty" on you, in one or other of its many forms, and in some supreme moments of life, in suffering, in trial, in death, may give your friends beholding you the privilege and joy of looking, as it were, upon the face of an angel. Amen.—Alexander Raleigh, in Sunday Magazine.

The Rev. J. Campagnac writes that an association has been formed at Monghyr, India, consisting of some ninety persons, Mohammedans, Hindus and Bengalis, who are dissatisfied with their own religion, and wish for a reform. He has been chosen president. They meet once a month, and have lectures on the evils of their respective religions. Mr. Campagnac has lectured four times. He has also two classes meeting weekly in his house for the purpose of studying the New Testament.

Men plant prayers and endeavors, and go the next day looking to see if they have borne graces. Now God does not send graces as he sends light and rain, but they are wrought in us through long days of discipline and growth. Acorns and graces sprout quickly, but grow long before ripening.—Beecher.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

It is stated that nine-tenths of the people of Wales go to some place of worship, and that three-fourths of the children attend Sunday school.

The total amount of subscriptions for the Presbyterian Hospital at Philadelphia, leaving out Mr. John A. Brown's endowment fund, now reaches $92,150.

The Rev. Dr. Veeder, a graduate of Union College, a student at Princeton and Alleghany Theological Seminaries, and for many years a Presbyterian preacher and teacher in California, is a professor in the royal college at Jedo, Japan.

A new article has been added to the constitution of Switzerland, prohibiting the revival of the Order of Jesuits and the societies connected with it, forbidding all action in the church or schools to their members, and prohibiting the establishment or re-establishment of monasteries and convents.

The Company of Revisers of the Old Testament concluded their ninth session on the twenty-third of February. In the course of their ten days' session they reached the twenty-second verse of the twenty-fifth chapter of Leviticus in the first revision. The New Testament Company, at their seventeenth session, were engaged on the eighth chapter of St. Luke's Gospel.

The Rev. Dr. Clark, of the American Board, writing in vindication of the missionary policy, gives a few illustrations of the material civilization which the missionaries are diffusing in their fields of labor: "One missionary at Harpoot, for example, has ordered for natives in that region more than a hundred fanning-mills. Indeed, all sorts of implements for use in agriculture and in the mechanic arts and school furniture, to the amount of thousands of dollars a year, are passing through the missionary house at Boston, ordered and paid for by natives, at the instance of missionaries. A mowing machine has just gone to South Africa; the first reaping machine to Central Turkey; seventy-five sets of outline maps for the schools in Ceylon, and $100 worth of the same to Eastern Turkey."

The following, taken from a private letter of Kevork, one of the native members of the church at Oorfa ("Ur of the Chaldees,") suggests a class of specific objects for our prayers: "Twelve Protestant families," he writes, "from our church and congregation have gone into the country, to a place about twenty miles north of Oorfa, to live by cultivating the soil. The name of the place is Agaj Khan, and it is in the direction of Severek. It is a well-watered and beautiful place. But they say that the region is uninhabited, except by wandering Koords, living in tents. They will, therefore, be exposed to some danger. These persons being all enlightened, and knowing how to read, we hope that they will be the means of evangelizing those parts. But they will need the help of prayer. Others propose to form another colony, as soon as they secure a place."

A correspondence has recently taken place between the Bishop of Capetown and the Rev. Dr. Faure, moderator of the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa, with reference to the union of the two churches. The Dutch Synod first passed a resolution in favor of union. The Dutch Synod resolved that it was ready to consider the subject. Then the correspondence began. Bishop Gray claimed the acceptance of the inspired Scriptures, of a written liturgy, and of the necessity of creeds, as points of agreement. The Dutch objected to the English Prayer Book and episcopal rule. The correspondence at last turned into a learned controversy on the parity of bishops and presbyters, and on the acceptance of the Book of Common Prayer. The Dutch, finding organic union unattainable, proposed exchange of pulpits, united prayer and co-operation in the circulation of the Bible, and other forms of Christian activity. These, the Bishop declared, would not do, because "whatever it is that keeps us apart unfits us, in my estimation, to be at once safe and outspoken teachers of each other's people."

Spain.—Rev. J. M. Lang communicates some very cheering intelligence, through the Church of Scotland Record, respecting the church in Spain. He says: "At this moment there is an organized, fully joined together and compacted Spanish Christian Church. Already between thirty and forty places of worship, attended by thousands of Spaniards. Pastors peacefully administering ordinances, ordaining elders and deacons, discharging every part of the ministerial work; 'a great door and effectual' standing open in Andalusia especially. And all this since September, 1868. As Queen Isabella fled from Spain, some quiet, humble men, who had waited the Lord's time on the Rock of Gibraltar, entered Seville. Headed by Senor Cabrera, they lifted up their voice with strength. Free now to declare the word of God, the demonstration of the Holy Spirit was with them. It is the language of strict and sober fact to say that a great excitement was raised in the minds of many; and although the intensity of the excitement has subsided, who that looks at the Spain of 1871, and compares it with the Spain of 1867, can do otherwise than exclaim: 'This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes!'"

Evangelical Association.—The thirty-ninth annual session of the Conference of the Central Pennsylvania Evangelical Association was held in Baltimore last week. Bishop J. J. Esher, of Chicago, presided. The business of the church was transacted with dispatch. All branches of the Conference are in a flourishing condition. The church, of which this Conference forms a part, took its rise in the year 1800. It is Methodistic in doctrine and discipline, has grown very rapidly, numbering at present fourteen Annual Conferences in the United States and Europe, with several very flourishing missions on the Pacific coast, embracing a total membership of about 80,000, with a traveling ministry of about 700. The church, besides supporting her missionary and other benevolent operations, has several flourishing literary and theological institutions where her ministry may be educated, two weekly religious journals, several monthly magazines, with the usual Sunday school and tract literature. The Central Pennsylvania Conference embraces within its limits the central portion of Pennsylvania, portions of Maryland and the District of Columbia, representing a membership of about 10,000, and 70 or 80 ministers. The Committee on Finance reported $872 to be distributed among Conference beneficiaries. The different districts and circuits were readjusted. The Committee on Statistics reported as follows: Conversions, 2,296; accessions, 1,919; number of members, 9,468; number of church edifices, 136; probable value, $207,600; parsonages, 20; probable value, $22,250; amount of missionary collections, $3,889.11; number of Sabbath schools, 113.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, March 16.

Nearly all the civil and religious reforms in Russia may be traced to the publication and distribution of the Bible in the Russian vernacular. A correspondent of the Eglise Libre states that in 1820 an edition in the language of the people was prepared by the Russian Bible Society; but the translation was found to be defective, and the edition was therefore suppressed. Thirty years passed away without further action, until the accession of Alexander the Second, surnamed the "Liberator," brought an awakening of desire and effort. The word of God was at once placed within the comprehension and reach of the people by a large number of editions, authorized, and sent out by the presses of the synod which governs the Russian Church. Bible societies were immediately formed for the purpose of scattering the gospel in all parts of the empire. Two illustrations will suffice to show how deeply engaged the followers of Christ are in the work of spreading the knowledge of Jesus throughout that land. A priest who had the charge of religious instruction in a military school of St. Petersburg started a Bible society among his pupils, and succeeded in getting them heartily interested in the work. When the young officers came to be dispersed by their service through all the extent of countries under the Russian rule, from the confines of China to those of Germany, still remaining members of the society by a special edict of the Emperor, wherever they went they distributed the Bible, collected contributions for its diffusion, enrolled new members, went to the doors of churches with the gospel, attended the numerous fairs and fetes of this country, entered inns and cafes, everywhere bearing the word of life, for sale to all who were able to buy, or as a gift to the poor. Their reports, full of encouragement and joy, reveal the fact that the people are eager for the word of God. The ladies of Moscow have formed a society for the distribution of the Scriptures in the valley of the Volga. During the summer season they take their stations on the large steamers which ply up and down this river, which, as is well known, is the longest of Europe, and waters the most fertile and populous parts of Russia. Here they spread the word among the crowds of passengers, which are continually renewed. Others station themselves in the villages on its banks, until their supplies are exhausted. In like manner the few lines of railway are improved by Christian ladies, who give themselves to the work of attending in the waiting rooms at stations, offering the gospel of salvation to those who come and go. By these and many similar means a network of societies extends over the empire to its most remote bounds, whose aim is to secure a speedy and wide circulation of the Bible.

THE SPIRITUAL PROCESSES.

The progress of the soul to God is marked by several well-defined stages of experience. The beginning is described as a state of conviction. This is a sense of guilt to which the sinner is brought, and an awakening to the consciousness of condemnation and danger. The natural condition is one of sleep and of death, in which there is no adequate conception of sin. When truly convicted the sinner realizes that the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. He sees his sins in a new and vivid light, as they have never appeared to him before. The enmity of the carnal mind is disclosed, and all those inspired descriptions of human depravity which have heretofore received a dubious assent are disclosed with fearful power to the conscience.

Sorrow for sin is dependent upon this conviction, and is of a deep and often overwhelming character. It is a godly sorrow, as distinguished from the sorrow of the world; not mere regret because of the miseries into which sin plunges the transgressor, but such a feeling of the wrong to God, and of the degradation to ourselves, as inspires the bitterness of a broken and contrite spirit, "as one that is in bitterness for his first-born." It is to this contrite state that the Savior refers when he declares the blessedness of them that mourn. The sinfulness of the heart, the evil of a life and heart of unbelief must be felt as it is exposed by the law of God and by the direct power of the Holy Spirit, before this real and profound sorrow can be felt.

Repentance follows this sorrow for sin, just as sorrow comes along with conviction. Hence Paul says: "For godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of." An awakened and sorrowing soul has yet to repent. This is another and distinct step heavenward. Those, on the day of Pentecost, who exclaimed, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" had conviction of sin, and mourned after a godly sort; but Peter points them to repentance as something that they had not yet reached. Without conviction of sin most pungent and alarming, and without sincere mourning, repentance is hardly conceivable; but having these, it is an experience, still to be attained.—Something to be, and something to be done are implied in it. As a change of mind and character, it is one of the most signal revolutions which can take place. Hatred of sin, reformation of life, confession, restitution, are among the marks and fruits of it. It is not wonderful that a change so essential, and implying so much, should be sometimes put for the entire experience, and as implying or supposing all that precedes and all that follows. Hence it is enough in itself to cause "joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." To have reached this point affords, indeed, the strongest presumption that the work of conversion will soon be completed. When the sinner's awakening and sorrow have brought him to the abandonment of sin, to open confession of guilt, to restitution to those he has wronged and defrauded; to the lowest depths of self-abasement, and the sense of his own helplessness, he is then in a condition to lay hold on Christ. In reaching true repentance the battle is almost won, and the soul is not far from the kingdom of God.

Repentance is the only state in which justifying faith can be exercised. There must be the sense of guilt, the feeling of helplessness, and at the same time the consciousness of having renounced sin, and of having the purpose and desire to lead a new life. Whilst it is not the condition of pardon, it is the only state in which faith savingly apprehends Christ. He who exclaims, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" has come to the crisis where alone he can believe with the heart unto righteousness. The agonizing heart passes almost instantaneously from the wail of despair to the rapturous assurance: "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." In the order of experience, repentance issues in justifying faith and the birth of the Spirit. It is the penitent that believes; it is the pardoned soul that is born again.

A new creature is the grand aim—new as distinguished from the unawakened, and also from the condition of conviction and repentance. Paul's experience marks the transition and the contrast. "O wretched man that I am!" "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Beyond this change, this entrance into the kingdom by the birth of the Spirit, there is growth, maturity, and glorious discoveries, but it is the same process. It is a higher degree of the same work, but not, as we apprehend, to be characterized as distinct. The new birth, purity of heart and holiness are presented as the essential qualifications for heaven, and mean the same thing. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord, the pure in heart shall see God, and to be born from above qualifies to see and to enter the divine kingdom.

These are the processes in the work of the Holy Spirit, and in the experience which terminates in the new creature in Christ—conviction attended with sorrow, repentance, faith, pardon and regeneration. The converted soul may not always be conscious of these several steps, and all may be realized in the briefest space of time; but we can hardly conceive of the new birth being reached without them. The conversions mentioned in the New Testament are mostly sudden, and the entire course, from awakening to the assured change of heart, is usually within the limits of a few hours, at the farthest. The thief on the cross, the penitents on the day of Pentecost, the Philippian jailer, are instances where all the several processes of experience must have been compressed within very brief limits.

WE ARE GLAD to note indications of revival influence in the church. From several quarters we have published communications of late telling of the conversion of souls. Our churches in the city are generally in a lively condition. Bro. Mathews has received thirty-five members this year at the Felicity Street church, and the class and prayer meetings are well attended. Bro. Tudor is holding services every night at the Carondelet Street church, and a goodly number of accessions and conversions are reported, and there are many penitents seeking the Lord. The outlook is more than usually encouraging for our church in the fields from which we have heard. We are ready to predict and believe that this will be the most fruitful, in spiritual results, of any year for a long time. Why should it not be a time of wonderful power and demonstration? God is giving an earnest, and calls us as a church to recognize the gracious portents, and to be strong in faith. Our country needs the saving power, the healthful influences and the reviving energies of the Holy Spirit. The church may have an abundant baptism for the asking, and God is waiting to crown the labors of his devoted servants.

Collections for the Publishing House.

We had expected to hear of a general effort on the part of the preachers to take collections for the rebuilding of the Publishing House at Nashville. The entire amount of $50,000 should have been raised within two weeks from the time the fire occurred, and it would have been done, we think, if the subject had been strongly presented to our churches. We hope that those who have not done so will take up the collection at once, and ask for large amounts. There is danger in delay. If we let the matter drop now it will soon become, like the old missionary debt, an old story, in which little interest will be felt. It is true there are many claims and many appeals upon every community, but this must be met. The Publishing House must be rebuilt, and all must help to do it. We doubt the expediency of postponing the collection on account of hard times, or the pressure of other objects. The best way is to make the effort at once and be done with it. We have heavy burdens to bear at every point financially, but a general and hearty effort will hurt nobody, and will put up the walls of the Publishing House in a style worthy of the church to which it belongs. We would insist most urgently upon the preachers doing this thing forthwith. Do not fear getting too much. Ask for large and generous gifts from the rich, and from the poor in proportion.

We shall be glad to receive and forward private subscriptions from those who may have no other opportunity of making their offering to this object.

THE POPE'S REQUEST TO "MARY."

BY JEFFERSON HAMILTON, D. D.

It will be remembered that some time since the Pope requested "Mary" to speak to Jesus and direct him to save France, and at the same time requested or directed Jesus to "obey Mary." The words of the communication were these: "O Mary, a single word to Jesus, reclining in thine arms, and France is saved! O Jesus, obey Mary, and save France." This was a very simple request, and could have been very easily complied with if the Romish theory be correct; and almost any Catholic woman in the world would have complied with it. But France was not saved, and it ought to be a matter of earnest inquiry with Romanists to learn why.

Either "Mary" did not hear the request, and so did not attend to it, or she heard it, and did not feel disposed to comply, or she heard and complied, but Jesus did not "obey Mary." Which of these alternatives will the Pope and Romanists take? We believe the Lord Jesus knew the whole case without any information or suggestion from Rome, and did not think with the Pope, for the reason that France was left to the result of its folly and wickedness; so an infallible Pope differs from the Savior whom he claims to represent! Shall we hesitate between them? For our own part, we do not believe that "Mary" pays half the attention to the affairs of this world or Romish requests that they claim for her. We have been watching carefully for a good many years, and have never known of her interfering in human affairs in a single instance, and we have known instances in which kings, popes and millions of papists besought her help in agony, and yet things went right on, just as though nothing had been done! In the case in hand—the invasion of France—there is a striking instance of inattention on her part to a very high compliment, coupled with very earnest requests. Eugenia, one of her most devoted friends and admirers, went to the expense and trouble of having some most magnificent candlesticks made, such as would have pleased any woman on earth, and been an ornament to any palace, and then went in solemn and grand procession and placed them on her altar in Notre Dame, and humbly sought her help against the Germans. But it was of no use; either she did not attend to the matter or she was not a match for Von Moltke and Bismarck, for on came the Teutons right into Paris, and her friend had so little faith in help from that quarter that she ran away! and don't know but she took the candlesticks with her. If so, they will do her some good.

It was very much the same way with Ferdinand the Seventh, of Spain, when the French invaded that country. He asked "Mary" to help him against them; for it seems that they think she can be secured on any side, for Catholic against Catholic, as well as against Protestants; and to win her to his cause, with most pious care he embroidered her some splendid skirts, thinking, no doubt, that fine apparel would have its influence with a woman, though glorified. But though the skirts were the envy of many a senora in this world, they utterly failed with "Mary;" the French ran the poor King from his throne. I wonder they do not become utterly discouraged by these inattentions of that good woman.

By the way, we can hardly resist the disposition to inquire, if Catholic priests, as they claim, can and do create the divine Redeemer, soul, body and divinity, when they consecrate bread and wine, why they do not avail themselves of his aid? If they are thus his creators, the probabilities of success would be very great. We recommend them to recanvass this subject thoroughly, for we are fully convinced that it will not do to rely upon "Mary" any longer, for she does not attend to even the Pope. Something is wrong.

TUSKALOOSA, Alabama.

LIFE INSURANCE AGENTS.

Bishop Marvin has an opinion about life insurance. We wish he had given his objections in connection with his "no." Writing to the Texas Advocate, March 2, the Bishop says:

On leaving Galveston, my trip across the Gulf afforded no incident out of the common order, except an encounter with a "life insurance" agent. Now, of course, it was no uncommon thing to meet with a "life agent," for certainly they swarm in the country these last years. But this one was rather a character even among his class. He could outtalk, for quantity and volubility and stick-to-it-iveness, any one I ever met. As to the sense, I cannot say so much. But he talked "insurance," and, much to my annoyance, fastened himself on to me. There was no escape. I had to stand the fire, and to hear over again every phase of the life insurance business. I had to listen once more to the oracular demonstrations of the absolute necessity there was for every man to have his life insured, and to hear, in harrowing detail, an account at large of all the dreadful effects of neglecting it. All was gone over with the auctioneer-like glibness that comes of the constant repetition of the same story.

I caught myself attempting to estimate, upon the doctrine of chances, the probable number of times I would have to submit to this same thing during my sojourn. The result was not satisfactory. Considering the lucrative character of the business, and the success of a verbose, tenacious agent, I think it likely that if I live long I shall have to submit to the ordeal yet a good many times. The prospect is not pleasant; but we must bear such things with what fortitude we can.

I have amused myself somewhat in endeavoring to analyze the influences by which a successful agent induces men to insure. Among others there is this, I think: The agent has all the arguments in favor of insuring at command, and delivers them with the air of an oracle and the fervor of a missionary. If his victim attempts any reply, being a novice in such matters, he does so timidly and feebly, and is soon made to feel how absolutely ridiculous his objections are. He is not convinced may be, or may be he is. In either case he loses all reputation for good sense if he does not see how true and beautiful all this is that the agent says. He must not be such a mutton-head as not to see it. Under such a pressure, and the prolonged importunities of the agent, at last he takes a policy—that is, unless he has made up his mind beforehand just to suffer through the day of trial, and take all the opprobrium of not having sense enough to see or act upon the statement of truth and duty made by his special friend, the agent. In two or three instances, I think, I sat three or four hours just saying no. Perhaps it was not so long as it seems to me to have been. Possibly it was not more than an hour; perhaps not over half an hour; but it seems to me a long time. I think, upon reflection, it must have been four hours. During all that time I only said "no." I attempted no justification of myself against the wrong-headedness and wrong-heartedness of my course. I admitted nothing, denied nothing, but just said every time the point of issuing me a policy was reached, "no." I said it quietly, but I said it. I find it does not do well to put too much force into your negative, if you are likely to have to maintain it long. If you have to say no against a forty-horse-agent power for four hours at a stretch, just place yourself well and be quiet. Waste no strength in argument. Say nothing but the invincible word, no. Say it calmly but decisively. Never falter. If you find yourself about to falter, run for dear life, like Joseph from Potiphar's house; run, if you have to leave your coat behind you. Once you begin to waver, your only safety is in your heels.

I made up my mind several years ago to these three negative things: First, never to allow a peddler to open his budget, or even lay it down, in my house; second, never to subscribe for a book that is to be published, nor for anything else that I have not seen; third, never to insure my life. I have positive ideas, and have reached positive negatives, on these points. I pity the man who does not know himself in the presence of the agent. I advise him at once to take flight, unless he is well assured of his power to say no.

PETER IN ROME.

A GREAT DISCUSSION.

From a correspondent of the New York Observer we take the following extracts. The world moves evidently.

I must tell you of a discussion between Catholic priests and Protestant clergymen, proposed by the former with permission of the Pope, and held on Friday and Saturday evenings, the eighth and ninth of February, in the Sala Sabina. The fact that the discussion was public, and that it was held by permission of the Pope, would make it an event in the religious history of Italy. But when we remember the subject chosen—one upon which Protestants themselves differ in opinion—the wonderful victory gained by the Italian clergymen shows how little true logic, how little real reasoning, is to be found even among the most eminent of the Romish clergy. They are splendid sophists, but in this instance they had to deal with men against whom sophistry not only could not prevail, but who were able (and, you may be sure, no less willing) to show to themselves and their audience that sophistry and truth are enemies.

The occasion of the discussion was in this wise: In several of the Italian Protestant churches, where weekly the various errors of Rome are combated, it is customary to announce that any who wish may bring forward arguments to prove the truth of the doctrines attacked. Of this general invitation a very unfair advantage was taken on the occasion of Mr. Spurgeon's visit to Rome. He had been requested to address the little Baptist church in Rome—of course, by means of an interpreter. The priests, furious that his well-known eloquence and power should be brought to bear upon the minds of any Catholics who might happen to stroll in (as they constantly do, like the Athenians of old, to hear some new thing,) entered the room to dispute the authority by which Protestant clergymen pretend to preach. But on occasion of Mr. Sciarelli, the Methodist clergyman, giving notice that he would prove that St. Peter was never in Rome, six priests and some thirty followers entered the room, approached the pulpit, and demanded a public meeting to be held, at which the subject should be discussed. Mr. Sciarelli accepted the challenge, with the proviso that the disputants should be an equal number of Protestants and Catholics, and no interruption to the discourse of the orators allowed. The arrangements were placed in the hands of a committee, who fulfilled their duties admirably. The hall was brilliantly lighted. The presidents were four in number. Prince Chigi, the president of the Society for Catholic Interests, and Judge Tosti, were on the Catholic side, and Mr. Piggott, who has been for long years laboring in Italy and has a flourishing school in Padua, and Dr. Philip, who is particularly interested in the efforts made for the conversion of the Jews, were on the side of the Protestants. The Protestant clergymen who took part in the debate were Messrs. Sciarelli of the Methodist, Bibetti of the Vaudois, and Gavazzi of the Free Italian Church. The stenographers of the council were appointed to note the discourses of the Catholics, and those of the Parliament, those of the Protestants. The Catholic orators were Messrs. Fabiani, Cipolla and Guidl.

The Catholics have been tremendously worsted. I hear on very good authority that some of them admit that they have had a fearful blow. But perhaps the most wonderful part of the discussion is the fact that it took place at all in Rome—in Rome, where newspapers are anathematized and their readers excommunicated, where Protestant clergymen are looked upon as demons, and their doctrine a thousand times accursed, where a Catholic who should confess that he has attended Protestant service would be visited with severe penance, where the priests refuse absolution to the parents of children attending undenominational schools. That here Protestant clergymen should be invited to publicly discuss a religious question with their adversaries is an event so novel, so unexpected, so important, that it seems as if it should be attributed to a direct interposition of Providence in favor of this priest-stricken city.

The Protestants have now in their turn challenged the Catholics to a discussion upon St. Peter's primacy. Let us see if it will be accepted.

SUCCESS OF THE GOSPEL.

SOUTH AFRICA.—The gospel has achieved some of its greatest triumphs in Southern Africa. The London Watchman gives the following summary of what has been done there through the Wesleyan mission:

"The Rev. J. W. Davis, from South Africa, said: 'In 1823 there was but one chapel, and now there were 137, and besides 693 native huts and other buildings, in which worship was held on the Sabbath day, and they had 800 services now held every Sabbath day. In 1823 there were 63 members of society, all Europeans; whereas now they had 11,074 members, and 2,963 on trial; of whom more than 10,000 had been converted from heathenism. In 1823 there were 2 local preachers, Europeans; now 850, of which 750 had been converted from heathenism; and thus it was that they supplied more than 800 places of worship. In 1823 they had one Sunday school, about 100 children, all Europeans; now 160 Sunday schools, and 11,160 scholars. In 1823 there were no week day schools; now 106, with 6,227 scholars. The attendance on the ministry in 1823 was about 400; but now there were 50,000 to whom they ministered the word of life; and the whole country was open to them. The advancement in the arts and appliances of civilization was equally gratifying; and the revivals had been not only remarkable, but lasting. Some of the young Kaffirs were becoming good classical and mathematical scholars, and gave evidence that the Kaffir intellect could attain to anything; and it was upon such young men that they relied for the future of Methodism in that mission.'"

SPAIN.—Protestantism is rapidly advancing in Spain. A wonderful work is going on there for truth and righteousness. Everywhere the gospel is greatly desired. One writes: "The people are clamorous for the stated preaching of salvation by grace." He adds:

"We must not stand still—we must go forward in the strength of the Lord from one conquest to another. I know of two Spanish laborers who are available for work. With their additional assistance this mission of Cadiz could be a center of work for San Fernando with its 27,500, Puerto Santa Maria with 21,700, and Puerto Real with 7,000; and there is Medina Sidonia with 12,800, and Chiclona with 9,000—all in sight of my windows. Every time I look at them I seem to hear a voice sounding in my ears: 'Come over and help us.' Christian reader, lay this matter to heart, pray over it, and God will assuredly and speedily answer my earnest prayers, so that ere long the gospel shall be preached in those towns also, where I firmly believe God has a people ready to hail the messenger and his glorious message with joy and gladness. 'Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full.'"

AN AGED MOURNER said: "I have been giving of my means to the Lord's cause for many years, and have never lost anything by it. If I have not received it back in dollars and cents, I have in good feelings, and that is better than gold."

ONE THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS PER MONTH.

This is not too much to expect. There has been a gradual increase of circulation for some months. Our book-keeper informs us that for several weeks past the number of new subscribers has been at the rate of about one hundred per week. But a small number, comparatively, of the circuits and stations are represented in the lists which are forwarded, showing that a general and united effort can far more than double the number. Give us three thousand new subscribers by the first of July, and this will justify the enlargement of the paper and the furnishing of an entirely new dress. Our present size is the largest that we can print on the press we now have. We must buy a new and larger press.

We must avoid debt; and judging from the unusual promptness with which old subscribers are renewing, and the constant assurances of appreciation from correspondents, we are convinced that the ADVOCATE has never, since the war, had as encouraging prospects as at present, and we are confident that a little effort will secure us the means of furnishing a paper which will equal our most sanguine expectations, without the fear of embarrassment. "All together, brethren!"

A note from Bro. P. A. Johnston, of Hazlehurst, Mississippi, received just as we are going to press, contains the sad though not unexpected announcement of the death of Rev. L. R. Redding, of the Mississippi Conference. He died at his father's residence in Georgia, in great peace and assurance, on the twenty-second of March.

By a note from Rev. E. H. Mounger we have received another sad item. Rev. R. J. Jones, Sr., of the Mississippi Conference, died at his home in Jasper county, March 26, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. Bro. Jones was a useful and faithful preacher, and a veteran in the service. A sketch will, no doubt, be furnished us of this excellent and beloved minister of the gospel.

OUR EXCHANGES announce the death of Professor Samuel Finley Breese Morse, the inventor of the electric telegraph. He died April 2, in his eighty-first year. The telegraph line between Washington and Baltimore was completed in 1844, and the first message sent was: "What hath God wrought?"

Married.

January 31, 1872, by the Rev. A. B. Nicholson, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Gaskin, Caseyville, Lincoln county, Mississippi, Mr. SAMUEL LEA to Miss EMILY GASKIN.

February 4, 1872, by the Rev. A. B. Nicholson, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. D. Mellen, Caseyville, Lincoln county, Mississippi, Mr. PROSPER BUI to Miss EMMA ELIZABETH MCREV.

February 7, 1872, by the Rev. A. B. Nicholson, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Levi Goolsbi, Franklin county, Mississippi, Mr. ELIAS CIFF to Miss ELIZABETH GOOLSBI.

Obituaries.

SISTER MARY ANN PARKER was born in Georgia, September 13, 1813, and was the only child of John and Mary Morris. She was married to William H. Parker, September 18, 1834, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church south in 1855, professed living faith in the blood of the covenant in October, 1871, and died, February 11, 1872.

Sister Parker was doubtless a true mother in Israel. She loved the church of her choice, and did what she could for its progress and glory. She has left behind her numerous friends and relatives who mourn her loss. We all loved her, and love her still, and feel satisfied that, as her life and death were in Christ, she is now at rest with the truly beautified and lovely in that "Land of pure delight,

Where saints immortal reign."

"Who, who would live alway, away from his God,
Away from you heaven, that blissful abode,
Where the rivers of pleasure flow o'er the bright plains,
And the noontide of glory eternally reigns?"

JAS. E. BRADLEY, P. C.
FLOYD, La., March 23, 1872.

DIED, in Greenville, Alabama, February 8, Mrs. HELEN M., wife of Dr. W. A. Wright. She was born in Marengo county, Alabama, December 29, 1834. Her maiden name was Watkins.

She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in the thirteenth year of her age, while at school in Summerfield. Although so young when she gave herself to God, it was with a fixed purpose that the consecration should be for life. From that time until the day of her death she continued steadfast and immovable in the faith of the gospel. Sister Wright was a great sufferer for twelve years. The most of the last two of her life were spent in bed. In all her afflictions she exhibited patience and submission to God.

I became her pastor in 1869, and for three years visited her frequently. I talked often with her in reference to her spiritual condition, and always found her trusting in God through Jesus Christ. She spoke calmly of death, and waited, without fear or dread, the time of her change.

I regarded Sister Wright as a model woman in all the relations of life. As a wife she was gentle, loving, devoted; as a mother she spared no pains to train her little son and daughter in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; as a friend and neighbor she was governed by the law of kindness; and as a member of the church she adorned the doctrine of Christ, her Savior, and, by a holy life and godly conversation, recommended it in all the religion of Jesus.

Two days before her death she said to her husband: "Talk to the children, who will take my death very hard. Tell them I am in heaven and so happy. I would love to live to be with you and the children, but I want the Lord's will, and not mine, to be done."

"The soul of our sister is gone
To heighten the triumph above:
Exalted to Jesus' throne,
And clasped in the arms of his love."

FANCY AND STAPLE DRY GOODS.—We again call attention to the large and beautiful stock of goods of George McGibbon & Co., 141 Canal street, corner of Bourbon. His advertisement may be found on the fifth page.

GAS FITTER.—Mr. Julius Loeffler, No. 43 Royal street, has been known to us for many years as a faithful and reliable gas fitter. Mr. Loeffler has a large stock of fixtures. See his advertisement in another column.

TO BUILDERS AND CONTRACTORS.—Mr. T. Faucett has in this issue an advertisement calling the attention of builders and contractors to his stock of bricks, sand, lime, cement and building material. His office is at No. 84 Carondelet Walk.

FAMILY GROCERIES.—A choice assortment of family groceries may be found at the establishment of Mr. James S. Clark, 80 Camp and 45 and 47 Natchez street. Mr. Clark is a competent and enterprising grocer, and obliging to customers.

CHINA.—Yut, Sing & Co., agents for Fook, Hing & Co., and Tong, Wo & Co., of San Francisco, have an assortment of fancy articles, teas, etc., at their store, No. 40 Royal street, which gives us the best idea of Chinese manufactures that we have had.

NEW ORLEANS NATIONAL BANK.—The above bank is one of our young, vigorous and growing institutions. The officers are men of energy and enterprise, and we shall be much disappointed if it has not a prosperous future. See advertisement on the fifth page.

CHINA, CROCKERY AND GLASSWARE.—Our enterprising neighbors, W. C. Shepard & Co., 55 Camp street, have a beautiful assortment of goods, and we know of none more clever to their customers than they are. We take pleasure in calling attention to their advertisement.

ARMENIAN HAIR VIGOR.—We call attention to the hair vigor advertised in another column by Mr. Louis S. Metz, of our city. His laboratory is located at the corner of Bienville and Prieur streets. Wheelock, Finlay & Co., agents, corner Magazine and Lafayette streets.

HARDWARE.—Reduced Prices.—Mr. A. Rousset calls the attention of his friends, and all in need of articles in his line, to his carefully and extensive assortment of hardware at reduced prices, both wholesale and retail. See advertisement in another column. Call and examine his stock at No. 17 Old Levee street.

SEWING MACHINES.—We call attention to the advertisement of the extensive variety and various styles and sizes of sewing machines at the establishment of William E. Cooper & Co., 89 Canal street, which appears among our new advertisements in this issue. Let those who wish to inform themselves send for catalogues.

COLONEL S. N. MOODY, ever in advance of the seasons, keeps pace with the march of improvement, and is equal to the whims and caprices of the most fastidious taste. His enterprise is truly refreshing, and the reform he has introduced in the fitting of shirts is one of the ameliorations of the age. See his advertisement on the fifth page.

LIFE INSURANCE.—Those who wish to secure to their families, in case of death, a partial or competent support by insuring their lives, will find the Knickerbocker of New York one of the best among the many asking for patronage. The company has a southwestern branch, the office of which is at 31 Carondelet street. Colonel R. N. Ogden is agent for Louisiana, and Colonel Richard Gaines for Mississippi and Texas. See advertisement elsewhere.

CRESCENT MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY. The twenty-second annual statement of the above-named company appears in our issue of to-day. We congratulate the company on the encouraging exhibit they are enabled to make. One of the most agreeable incidents of the week was the pleasure of being present, by invitation, at a delightful reception and collation, given on the first by said to the stockholders and friends of the company on the occasion of the twenty-second anniversary of their organization.

A True Friend.—"Another Richmond in the field," cried Richard; but for the sake of history and truth, be it known, the one proved at least an overmatch for the vaunting king; and so, despite the multifarious bitters that flood the deluged markets of the country, Price's Great Specific overshadows them all.—With loud acclaim, the sonorous echoes of which reverberate through all the land, until the mighty mountains, answering the seaboard, give back the glad response from hill to dale across river to lake, and forth of these again to grand old ocean, that rolls it on for aye! With billowy roar the people hymn the praises of Price's Celebrated Aromatic Bitters. They have tested its efficacy, tried its virtues, and shrined it, like an idol, in the very heart of faith. Indigestion, no longer waits upon their appetizing indulgences. Dyspepsia breaks no more upon their enjoyable repasts. Nervousness avaunts; debility, that crouched within them, shrinks at the metamorphose of the giant strength, and the load of suffering under which they writhed is thrown off, as with the agile grace and power of an athlete. They care not for the recognition of other preparations, content to know and feel that they have found in Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters the true balm they have heard so often prated of in Gilead.

NEW AND DESIRABLE!
A Sunday School Geography,
with Seven Colored Maps, Fifty-six Lessons on the same, and a Pronouncing Vocabulary of the Names of all the Places mentioned in the Bible.

Each lesson is brief, and can be recited in five minutes; after which the class will proceed with the other lesson in the usual way. The maps illustrate the whole Bible History in chronological order.

We have examined and heartily commend the Scripture Geography for Sunday Schools, by the Rev. George A. Starkweather. The maps are constructed after the best models, are founded on the latest results of Biblical study, and bring forward the great epochs of Scripture history in their proper chronological order.

The author's system of question and answer in making use of the work is the right one: it shows both teacher and learner how to teach and how to learn; but it does not do all the work for them. It is impossible to overstate the value of such helps to the acquisition of a knowledge of the Bible.

Geography and chronology are the eyes of history, and the Scripture studied with such means of illustration as this Scripture Geography supplies will be found to be vivid, graphic, and in a sense altogether new.

We ought not to doubt the success, any more than we do the utility of such a publication.

E. G. ROBINSON, D. D.,
President of Rochester Theological Seminary.
H. B. HACKETT, D. D.,
Professor of Biblical Literature.
R. J. N. BUCKLAND, D. D.,
Professor of Ecclesiastical History.

It seems to me to fill a place not occupied by any similar work, and answers a demand long felt by the more advanced Sunday school instructors.
REV. GEORGE W. CLARK,
Author of Clark's Harmony of the Gospels.

"To be able distinctly to locate the incidents of Scripture history goes very far toward a clear comprehension of the sacred narrative."

This little volume furnishes just this aid; and on this account it will be invaluable to Sunday school teachers, scholars and ministers.
REV. J. STANFORD HOLME,
Pastor Trinity Chapel, New York City.

"We find that a thorough study of this little book would be an admirable preparation for either teachers or scholars." Christian at Work.

"Vast numbers of people are very deficient in the knowledge of the geography of the Bible, and a work like this is well worthy of their study." Christian Secretary.

"The author's plan is to furnish the means for studying Scripture Geography as that of the Modern World is studied in the schools. The book will prove useful to many outside of Sunday schools, who wish it for reference only." Hearing Standard.

"The author's system of question and answer in making use of the work is the right one. We cannot overstate the value of such a help." St. Louis Guard.

THE BABY.

The baby sits in her cradle,
Watching the world go round,
Whether witty or grand or gay,
Inwrapped in a mystical silence
And all the tumult of sound.
She must be akin to the flowers,
For no one has heard
A whispered word
From this silent baby of ours.

Wondering, she looks at the children,
As they merrily laughing pass,
And smiles o'er her face go rippling
Like sunshine over the grass,
And into the heart of the flowers:
But never a word
Has yet been heard
From this silent darling of ours.

Has she a wonderful wisdom
Of unspoken knowledge a store,
Hid away from all curious eyes,
Like the mysterious lore
Of the birds and the bees and the flowers?
Is this why no word
Has ever been heard
From this silent baby of ours?

Often she seems to listen
To something we never can know;
Perhaps to the voices of angels,
Who silently come and go:
Making brighter her golden hours
With many a word
That will never be heard
From this silent baby of ours.

Ah! baby, from out your blue eyes
The angel of silence is smiling—
Though silvern hereafter your speech,
Your silence is golden beguiling
All hearts to this darling of ours.
Who speaks not a word
Of all she has heard,
Like the birds, the bees and the flowers.

CHRIST TO THE LITTLE FOLKS.

Beautiful stranger, we have walked all day;
Our feet grow weary in the sun and shade,
And we are lost, and know not where to go;
And now we see our little hopes all fade.
And weep the tears our eyes should never know—

"I am the Way."

The skies of morning shone upon us bright;
And flowers we plucked that grew beside the road,
And carried them through all the weary noon;
But now our flowers have come to be a load,
And night is near, and darkness cometh soon:

"I am the Light."

We are too young to know what is the best,
And we are wrong, and there's no eye that sees;
The hours of toil seem never done;
There are no arms to fold us unto peace,
Nor any breast to lay our heads upon—

"I'll give you rest."

Our Young Folks.

LOST.

Baby was lost!

Up and down, high and low, everywhere about the house and barn and woodshed, in the garden and down the road by the bridge, the search was carried on with anxious hearts and eager steps. Every nook and corner where even a mouse could hide was examined over and over again; but no baby. The brook was low, so low that baby might have toddled over it without hardly wetting her feet. There was no danger there; and yet for half a mile on either side of the bridge the bed of the little stream was thoroughly scanned, so there could be no doubt left.

Baby's mother, bareheaded, with pale face and trembling limbs, distractedly hurried from place to place, carrying in her hand the little white sunbonnet she had picked up near the doorstep, the only thing that could be found belonging to the missing darling.

Not half an hour before baby had been playing in the yard, cooing and talking to herself, as she nursed her rag doll and watched the pigeons on the roof of the barn. There were prints of her tiny shoes in the moist soil by the gate, the marks of dirty little fingers upon the white palings—and that was all.

The hot August sun was almost at its setting, and the shadows of the maples were fast lengthening. What if night should come, and baby not found? What if she were wandering further and further away, while they were seeking her? What if she had been stolen, and was even then calling upon her mother to save her?

"Baby!"

No answer; and the mother's face grew whiter and her limbs weaker.

"I shall never see her again!" she cried, sinking down upon the steps of the porch. "Never, never, never! And I scolded her this morning. Oh, my little lamb!"

"We shall find her yet," said old Mrs. Bailey, soothingly. "She's got tired and cuddled down to sleep somewhere. Or perhaps she's off with some of the neighbors' children."

Baby's mother shook her head. She knew that was only said to comfort her. All the children in the neighborhood had been for the last hour engaged in the search. She could see them scouring the field beyond the house, looking behind the stone heaps and among the blackberry bushes that skirted the field.

Baby could not have been stolen. No suspicious character had been seen lurking about, and nobody could have got away with her without being seen. There had been no one near the house all the morning, except old Deacon Pettengill, who left his wagon opposite the gate long enough to look at a yoke of fat steers in the barnyard.

The sun went down at last, and one by one the neighbors slowly came in from the search and gathered around the stricken mother in the yard. All had words of comfort, but they sounded false and hollow.

"I can't give her up so," she moaned. "She must be somewhere near. Help me look a little longer—just a little longer."

"I don't believe she's been outside the gate," said one. "We can't find any trace of her anywhere. Seems to me she would have dropped her doll or something, if she'd gone far."

"We've looked everywhere," said one of the boys. "We've poked open every bunch of bushes on both sides of the road, between here and Dunlap's pasture bars; and she couldn't have got any further than that. If she was in the mowin' lot we should see her certainly, or in the back pasture, because there ain't any bushes or weeds."

"Have you looked in the well?" said old Mrs. Tompkins. "Now, don't be hasty, but she's fell in there. The curbing ain't none too safe."

"She ain't there—we've looked," said one of the boys quickly, noting the spasm of pain that passed over the face of baby's mother at the words.

"There's a team coming!" suddenly shouted one of a little knot of boys outside the gate. "Now we can send word down to the village, and raise 'em to help hunt."

"It's Deacon Pettengill's horse," said another, who hastily climbed the fence for a better lookout, "and the deacon's driving, too. Something's the matter; he's putting on the licks."

"What's he got in his lap?" asked one woman peering through the dusk.

"Why, I do believe it's baby."

There was a rush to the gate as the deacon stopped his horse with a loud "Whoa."

"Lost anything?" he inquired, as he stepped out over the wheel, with a little bundle in his arms.

"Baby! baby!" and the next moment the little cause of all the trouble and pain was tightly clasped in its mother's arms.

"You see," said the deacon, in answer to the multitudinous inquiries as to how, when and where he had come across baby, "after I left here, early this afternoon, I thought I heard something under the wagon seat; but I didn't pay any attention to it, and forgot all about it before I got home. I turned out the mare and run the wagon under the shed, for it began to look like rain. Long about five o'clock Jael he went to take out a bag of rye meal that I brought up for Piper's, and all at once, as he was liftin' it onto his back, he dropped it, and hollered right out: 'Come here, deacon,' says he, 'where on earth did this come from?' I was grindin' a scythe out at the east end of the shed; but I dropped it pretty quick and started. He was holdin' up the buffalo from the hind end of the wagon; and there, do you believe it, was that cunnin' little crentur' with her rag doll cuddled up to her, dyin' on some meal bags under the seat, fast asleep. She must have crawled into the wagon and laid down while I was lookin' at the steers, and the joltin' got her to sleep. I tell you I wasn't long hitchin' up again; and I never drove so like all-possessed but once before in my life, and that was when Hiram broke his leg fallin' off the new hoss-barn."

So baby was found, and the whole neighborhood; as one great heart, brimmed over with joy; while the mother, close to whose breast the tired little head was clasped, poured out her soul in tearful gratitude to him who had through that brief but bitter lesson taught her more of the divine nature of love than she had before learned in all the days of her motherhood.

TRIP AND KITTY.

Little Trip is a black-and-tan dog; he is a pretty old dog now, and looks as if he would need to wear spectacles pretty soon, for his eyes are growing dim. Still, as little Trip has never learned to read and write, perhaps he will never need to wear glasses. He can bark just as well as he could when he was young, and he seems to be very fond of it, for he barks from morning till night. Trip is very particular about his eating, but when he begins to eat anything he does not fancy, all his mistress has to do to make him finish it is to call Kitty. If Trip sees Kitty coming he immediately growls a little at her, and finishes the bit himself rather than let her have it.

Did you ever see any children act like this?

But Trip is very polite to Kitty, unless she interferes with his breakfast. The other day grandma put Kitty and her four baby kittens into Trip's bed by mistake. Trip lies on the lounge in the sitting room all day, but at night he sleeps in the wood house, in a nice box. So, just think how little Trip felt one night when he was very, very tired, barking all day at the butcher and the baker and the doctor, and everybody else who passed by, to go out to his nice little bed and find it all full—five in a bed!—old Mrs. Kitty and four little kittens all fast asleep there, as snug as you please.

Trip wagged his little tail and barked with all his might, but the little kitties took no notice at all, feeling perfectly safe with their dear mamma; and Mrs. Kitty just opened her eyes and looked lazily at Trip, as much as to say: "It's no use, Mr. Trip; grandma put us here, and here we shall stay." And Trip, after looking at them a few moments, seemed to say to himself, "What can't be cured must be endured;" so he hunted about till he found a nice box, and there he slept soundly all night.—Our Little People.

"I TOLD YOU PAPA PRAYED SO."

In 183– there lived in one of the hill towns of western Massachusetts, then noted for the intelligence and piety of its inhabitants, a lovely Christian family. The mother being an invalid, a gentle girl of seventeen became the guide and constant companion of a bright little sister of four summers. With almost a mother's fondness she took the darling to her own room, and night after night, as she prepared her for bed, and kneeled beside her while the little one lisped her simple prayer, the elder sister heard the words: "O Lord! don't stick us through with a knife!" At first she took no apparent notice of them, lest the little thing should become shy of speaking out her own words. Finding, however, that the little prattler always used the same expression, the elder sister said:

"Why does my pet pray so?"

"'Cause my papa does," was the prompt reply.

"Why no, darling; papa doesn't pray in that way."

"Yes, he does, sister; I say he does."

A morning or two after, as they were both kneeling by the same chair, while the father conducted family worship, he said: "O Lord! cut us not off in thine anger." Instantly the early lisped words arrested and all arch glance sent up to the elder sister's face, as in earnest tones the little one whispered: "I told you papa prayed so."

When it is right to take care of one in sickness, it is right to take care of him when it rains.

The Farm and Garden.

PEANUT CULTURE.

Although hot peanuts have become an institution in this country, yet the locality where they are produced and the mode of cultivation are but very little understood.

The peanut is a leguminous, annual plant, found in Asia, Europe, Africa and America. It has a simple, hairy stem; the leaves are alternate, paired, and of a deep green; the flowers are of a deep yellow, auxiliary and solitary; the seed-pot has somewhat the form of a large bean, and is about an inch long; the shell is of a light dun color, ribbed, inclosing two seeds or nuts; these are very nourishing, have an agreeable flavor, and are eaten like almonds or nuts, raw, roasted or boiled.

The Spaniards were the first to discover its merits, and introduced it, either from Peru or Santa Fé de Bogota, into Spain, about a century ago, since which it has been successively introduced into Italy, France and the United States, where it has become fully acclimated and naturalized, and is, to a very great extent, used for food. It is also largely cultivated as an oleaginous or oil plant; for its seeds or nuts produce by pressure an abundant quantity of an excellent oil, limpid, clear, inodorous, less fatty than the finest olive oil, its quality equal to the very best French olive oil, and possessing also the great merit of hardly becoming rancid by age.

The cultivation of the peanut is as easy as the garden bean; it requires a good, warm, rich, light soil, deeply worked and well manured. In such a soil, under a warm, or, better still, a very hot sun, it comes to its greatest perfection. All these requisites are found in most of the Southern States, although it will produce good crops as far north as the middle of New York and Connecticut.

The ground should be cultivated deep and thorough with the plow and harrow, and receive an ample dressing of good manure. The nuts should not be planted until the earth is sufficiently warm—about the middle of May, North, and, of course, sooner at the South, generally at the time corn is planted.

The nuts are planted in rows, three to three and a half feet apart, and two or three nuts in a hill, making the hills one foot and a half apart, so as to have plenty of room to spread and allow of thorough cultivation and weeding.—After the peanut is up, and has acquired some strength, and until it begins to flower, the ground should be well and deeply worked with the hoe, hoe or cultivator, and hand-hoe, gradually hilling up, particularly in the latter part of the season.

This plant produces enormously in the tropics with the most common cultivation, and, sowed broadcast, often averages two hundred to three hundred bushels per acre. Further north it will produce from one hundred to two hundred bushels of nuts per acre. In the Report of the Department of Agriculture, a writer in Clark county, Mississippi, says: "I find that the peanut is better to raise for stock in this section of country than corn. The poorest land here will produce fifty bushels to the acre, and a ton of hulm, which horses, cows and sheep are very fond of; in a word, a horse will fatten on it without corn."—J. V. M., in Bee-Keeper's Journal.

Of peanut culture we would say, all who are thoughtful and notice farm affairs, so as to know of what they see, will bear in mind that new land has the natural power to form most weed—that is, wood or vine or weed leaf, and not so much the fruit, as the land wears, and the tree becomes less woody, the growth slow, fruit forms more abundantly. You may take poor land and use a certain class of manure, fully decomposed animal manures, especially of cattle and sheep, in which the grass food predominates, for improving land, and may increase certain crops, and the phosphates seem to increase root crops most. The peanut, though it will no doubt pay better on poor, light soils deeply prepared, and with even one hundred or two hundred pounds of phosphate and a little top soil, yet on upland, and not too much clay, made fertile, the crop pays best. We have never grown over six acres of the nut in a year, but have to a limited extent for twenty-five to thirty-five years. Never cover any part of plant, as by some directed. Keep surface clean and stirred; draw earth to and a little under branches.—Phila. & Southern Farmer.

THE ORCHARD FOR APRIL.

A Cool Spread Required for Trees and Vines.—If a fruit grower will take two rows of pear trees, and mulch one and not the other, he will find, in fruiting time, that the mulched row has both larger fruit and handsomer skins, and the leaves and branches are both healthy and vigorous. In the other row the soil is heated by the rays of the sun, warmth is stronger than the moisture necessary to supply the growing needs of the roots, and the tree is scorched or withered. Nature is our best guide; observe all trees in all places; a natural layer of leaves gathers gradually on the ground, and protects the root against the hot suns of summer and the heavy frosts of winter. The successful nurturing of fruit comes only from a steady supply of moisture; shade invites moisture, and mulch gives shade. If your soil is too rich, and your tree is disposed to grow too much or to make a second growth in the fall, restrain it; hesitate not to use grass even in the cultivation of your orchards, as well as judicious pruning; but when fruiting time comes the cool surface, under which the roots of your fruit trees run, will do more for the success of the crop than all things else put together. Mulch then, and keep mulching; change every spring and fall, and cultivate a little, but never omit the mulch in time of fruiting.

Fancy-Growing.—We have seen a check to improvement in many things, especially in providing good fruit for home consumption. This should not continue, and we desire to give what we regard to be truths, and leave them to our readers to think on, and, when ready to act, they will have landmarks to guide. No fruit is so good on land not thoroughly prepared, at least to the depth the roots penetrate, and we look as much to the surface drain as to the depth. The roots that support the tree, and feed it, are superficial, and the earth should be permeable to air and water, or moisture. Prepare the land as for cotton, bedding up and breaking up deep; then plant on this ridge, and plant no deeper than the trees stood in the nursery. Just here we would give some advice: manure no tree until it has fruited. Be not led to do this, thinking it will do good. Withhold the manure until after it has borne the first year, and then apply whatever fertilizer you have, but not in great quantities, unless the soil is very poor.

Fructus.

Oat Chaff for Feed.—A year or two ago we were by accident led to feed some oat chaff to a few head of milking cows, and were agreeably surprised to find that they came up considerably in their milk. The chaff was discontinued for a day or two, when the cows fell off to their former quantity; but on feeding the chaff again the flow again increased. Since then the value of oat chaff as a milk producer has been satisfactorily proved by us. This would then make it advisable that when oats are thrashed the chaff, should be saved for feed. It may be fed in the place of cut chaff, with the usual wetting, salting, and mixing of the regular allowance of meal. In years when hay is as scarce as in the present, not only the chaff may be fed, but the oat straw should be carefully saved for fodder. It is quite as nutritious as timothy that has gone to seed.—Hearth and Home.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

Paint.—A barrel of ready-prepared paint would be an acquisition on any farm. Houses, tools and wagons painted up once a year will last five times longer than without paint; and the cost of it would not be great. The labor and art of applying it amount to little also, and the work would be pastime for rainy days.

Oat Porridge.—Put a quart of boiling water and a pint of milk in a small kettle, and as soon as it comes to a boil stir in the oatmeal, leaving it rather thin; three or four handfuls will suffice for the quantity of water and milk; add a pinch of salt and let it boil until the meal will smash easily between the fingers. Then remove from the fire at once, and serve on a deep plate. The milk should never be poured over it, as it spoils both milk and porridge to do so; but it should be in a bowl and quite cold. Then the spoon should go first to the porridge, then to the milk, then to the mouth. In this way it is rich.

Boned Turkey.—This noble bird, the pride of American tables, cannot easily be recognized after undergoing the culinary process termed "boning," but for a cold relish nothing more acceptable need be sought. It may be thus prepared: Boil a turkey in as little water as may be, until the bones can be easily separated from the meat. Remove all the skin, cut the meat into thin slices, mixing together the light and dark parts. Season with salt and pepper. Take the liquid in which the turkey was boiled, having kept it warm, and pour it on the meat, and mix it well. Shape it like a loaf of bread, wrap it in a cloth and press it with a heavy weight for a few hours. When served up it is cut in thin slices. Some of our professional cooks can shape it somewhat like the original bird, so that one cannot tell at once when it is seen that it is boned turkey; but this requires skill and labor.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

KEMPER HALL, KENOSHA, WIS.

ON THE C. AND N. W. RAILROAD, fifty-one miles north of Chicago.

REV. GEO. M. EVERHART, D. D., Rector, formerly president of the Huntsville (Alabama) Female College.

RT. REV. WM. E. ARMITAGE, D. D., Visitor.

Kemper Hall, a first-class institution for Girls and Young Ladies, elegantly equipped and appointed, offers, in every department, superior advantages. The buildings and grounds are everything that could be desired. The location, overlooking Lake Michigan, affords a view unusually picturesque. The climate, summer and winter, is equally good. Girls from the South may here have their health permanently established.

THE CONDITIONS.—There are no extra charges. The rates published include the entire expense. Ten dollars entrance fee paid but once, to secure the place. For board, laundry, ordinary tuition, music, modern languages, Latin, drawing, and the use of piano, models, and text-books, $450 per scholastic year. $200 payable September 11, the beginning of the scholastic year, and $150 April 1, the beginning of the spring term. For little girls under eleven years old, $300—$200 payable September 11, and $100 payable April 1.

Pupils from the South can be accommodated during the summer vacation at $7 a week.

Scientific.

WONDERS.—"Lewinhoek tells us of an insect seen with a microscope, of which twenty-seven millions would only equal a mite.

"Insects of various kinds may be seen in the cavities of a grain of sand.

"Mold is a forest of beautiful trees, with branches, leaves and fruit.

"Butterflies are fully feathered.

"The surface of our bodies is covered with scales like a fish; a single grain of sand would cover one hundred and fifty of these scales, and yet a scale covers five hundred pores. Through these narrow openings the sweat forces itself like water through a sieve.

"The mites make five hundred steps a second.

"Each drop of stagnant water contains a world of animated beings, swimming with as much liberty as whales in the sea.

"Each leaf has a colony of insects grazing on it, like cows in a meadow."

THE mystery of Gulf weed, Sargassum bacciferum, has not been cleared up even by the savans of the "Hassler." Floating everywhere on the surface of the Gulf stream, in little patches or in areas miles in extent, it never has been found "at home," in its place of origin and early growth. As an alga, of course, it never produces flowers; but, what is more curious, it bears no fruit, or spores, as they are technically termed in these plants, organs of fructification never having been discovered even on youngest branches. If, then, it multiplies by division and perpetual extension, the enigma of its origin is greater than ever. Most likely each plant has had a beginning from seed, a fixed attachment to the ground or rock bottom of the ocean in comparatively shallow water, a determined period of residence there, during which time it matures, forms receptacles, perfects its spores, sets them free, then develops its floats, separates from the bottom, and rises to the surface, to vegetate and enlarge indefinitely. Every one has a dark, shriveled extremity, which looks older, and would correspond to the root, but for the lack of rootlets or little cellular hairs, whose office is to present larger surface for the absorption of moisture and nutriment from the earth. After detachment, however, the general surface of the plant might suffice for its preservation and slow expansion. The dependence of the plant on its floats, little globular vesicles supported by pedicels, for buoyancy is shown by the fact that, when opened or removed, it sinks at once in the water.

CAMBIUM.—Botanists have given this name to the viscid secretion which is found between the bark of a tree and its wood. Formerly it was supposed to be merely a sappy substance, and its functions were considered of no especially vital importance; but recent investigations have led to the belief that it contains the very life of the tree, part of its cells going to form the new wood and part the inner layer of bark. In support of this theory a writer in the American Naturalist tells how, while at Andover, Massachusetts, during the months of July and August of the past year, he was shown an apple tree from which the bark had been entirely removed, leaving the trunk bare from the ground to the branches. This girdling had been done in May, and during the few weeks which had elapsed a new and healthy bark had formed, the tree appearing vigorous and bearing a fair crop of fruit. Upon inquiry he was informed that this was done "for the sake of improving the health and fruitfulness of the tree!" Several other trees were shown upon which the same operation had been successfully performed. All of them were vigorous, and covered by a thin but perfect bark. The girdler, Joseph Davis by name, a man eighty-six years old, said that the removal should be effected about the first of June, or when the new wood is most rapidly formed, and that for several days nothing, not even the hand of the operator, should be suffered to touch the stripped trunk. That this method of treatment is critical is said to be due only to the fact that a heavy shower of rain, such as is very apt to occur in June, always proves fatal to the girdled tree; and one tree was shown where, during a slight shower, a narrow strip of the trunk had been washed and the bark permanently killed. This shower fell within twenty-four hours of the girdling. This is certainly a curious and possibly a very important statement, and if the girdling operation is really of benefit to trees under certain conditions, it will surely be easy to provide a shelter against the disastrous effects of showers.

THE only way for a man to escape being found out is to pass for what he is. The only way to maintain a good character is to deserve it. It is easier to correct our faults than to conceal them.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly

Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup.

Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.

It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.

For sale by all respectable druggists.

MANY IMPORTANT CURES of PARALYSIS, Rheumatism, Consumption, General Debility, Female Diseases, Weakness of Reproductive Organs, and chronic diseases generally, are being made at 156 Carondelet street, New Orleans, by the EQUALIZER, which distributes equally all over the body a perfect circulation of blood. Send for circular. de16 2m J. S. HADFIELD, M. D.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilson & Gibbs and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We notice a lively business in most branches of the wholesale trade to supply the demand from country merchants and city dealers.

The weather was cloudy and threatening rain on Saturday and Sunday, but has since been clear and cool. It is manifest that the season is ungenial for planting and that the next cotton crop will be late. With regard to the incoming crop we hear of nothing to require any modification of our previous remark that our accounts from the country indicate a general exhaustion of the supplies, and that the prospect of a continued falling off in the receipts has caused a common shrinkage in crop estimates. Many who have held out for 3,100,000 bales have settled on 3,000,000, and still lower figures are becoming more common. Some buyers have advised their foreign correspondents not to count on more than 2,900,000 bales.

The river is 10 feet 5 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-ninth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales	6,963
Lake	11
Mobile	432
Texas	1
Total	7,407

On Saturday the demand was fair, and although operations were restricted by moderate supplies and the stringent pretensions of factors, yet the sales embraced 4,300 bales at full prices, a part of the business showing an improvement of 1/16c., and requiring a partial advance in quotations to that extent. On Monday the movement was again checked by the high pretensions of factors, as well as by purchasers awaiting the reopening of the Liverpool market, but the sales, nevertheless, embraced 3,950 bales, at somewhat irregular prices, a portion of the business showing hardly as much strength as on Saturday, while the bulk of it was at very full prices, the closing quotations, however, showing no variation from Saturday. On Tuesday, under the stimulus of decidedly favorable dispatches from Liverpool and New York, the market opened with a good demand and continued active throughout the day, the sales summing up 9,850 bales at prices showing an advance of 1/8@1/4c., the closing quotations being 1/4c. higher than Monday's figures.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 857,682 bales, against 1,193,679 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 882,529 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 123,418 to France, and a decrease of 599,510 to Great Britain, and of 222,638 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The movement for the season is pretty much over. The receipts are now light, and the demand is limited. On Tuesday there was a fair demand, and there were sales at 5@6 1/2c. for inferior, 7 1/2@8c. for common, 8 1/4@8 3/4c. for good common, 9@9 1/16c. for good fair, 9 1/2c. for fully fair, 9 3/4@10c. for prime, 8 7/8@9 1/2c. for seconds, and 11c. for yellow clarified.

MOLASSES.—The supplies of Louisiana are very light, and are sold as received. On Saturday and Monday they were disposed of at 35@40c. for common fermenting, 36c. for centrifugal fermenting, 42c. for fair fermenting, 62c. for cistern bottom, 49c. for centrifugal reboiled, 45c. for prime reboiled, and 56@57c. for strictly prime reboiled.

CORN.—On Tuesday the market was in good supply, with a moderate demand, and 9,000 sacks sold at 72@73c. for mixed and yellow, and 74@75c. for white.

OATS.—On Tuesday the supply was fair, and the demand moderate. 2,500 sacks sold at 55c. for ordinary, and 56@58c. for prime and choice.

BRAN.—On Tuesday 350 sacks sold at $1.75 ₮ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Saturday 200 bbls. mess sold, in two equal lots, at $13.25 ₮ bbl., but since then holders have been asking $13.25 ₮ bbl., without any sales. It is retailing at $13.50@$13.75.

BACON.—The market is in supply and dull, and prices have ruled in favor of buyers. About 250 casks were sold in lots on Saturday and Monday, to dealers and speculators, at 5 5/8c. for shoulders, and 7 3/4c. for clear sides. Clear rib sides were quoted at 7 1/4c. ₮ lb.

HAMS.—On Monday 40 tierces sugar-cured sold, in lots, at 10 3/4@11c. ₮ lb. On Tuesday 50 tierces sold, in lots, at 11c.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Tuesday 15 and 20 casks clear sides, and several hundred pieces do., sold at 6 1/2c. ₮ lb. Shoulders were quoted at 4 3/4@5c. Some job sales of shoulders were made at 5c.

LARD.—Tierces are quoted at 9@9 1/2c. ₮ lb. On Tuesday 55 tierces refined sold at 9 3/4c.

BREAKFAST BACON continues in light supply and in fair demand. Western commands 10 1/2@11c. ₮ lb., Northern 11@11 1/2c.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 110@110 1/4 (against 109 7/8 at New York, and closed at 110@110 1/8, against 109 7/8 in that market.)

The sales of silver have been confined to $500 in American half dollars on Saturday at 108 1/2c. and $2,000 on Tuesday at 108@108 1/2.

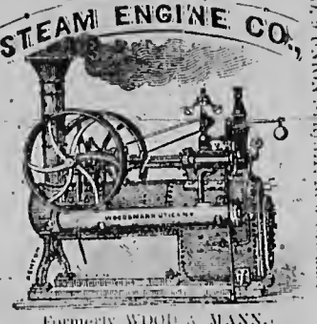
THE UTICA STEAM ENGINE CO.,

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN, Agent. NO. 9 UNION STREET, New Orleans.



Formerly WOOD & MANN.

These Engines are so well and favorably known that a description of them here is not deemed necessary.

They are EQUALLED by FEW, SURPASSED by NONE, perfect in workmanship, complete in appointments, safe, simple and substantial. Every boiler is practically tested before leaving the factory. By the use of a CIRCULATING WATER BOTTOM around and underneath the furnace, which lessens the

RISK FROM FIRE,

they are particularly adapted for GINNING COTTON. Engines of all sizes, at prices which challenge comparison for equal size of steam cylinder and measurement of boiler. A full stock of these Engines will be kept constantly on hand by the undersigned, who has been appointed general agent.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

DETROIT, MICH., April 4.—Prof. Watson, of Ann Arbor, reports the discovery last night, in the constellation of Virgo, of a new planet. It shines like a star of the eleventh magnitude; its position is in the right ascension, two hundred degrees fifty minutes declination. It is moving slowly west in right ascension, and north in declination.

JACKSON, Miss., April 4.—The Legislature has got reform on the brain. The rates paid in 1857 are taken for a basis, and everything in the way of fees and salaries is being tumbled to that. Gold was then currency, and now it is State paper at thirty per cent. discount. The pay of members is to be reduced to $4 per day and five per cent. mileage.

The Typographical Union presented a memorial, asking for the reconsideration of the printing bill, as the present rates necessitate the taking of work out of the State and throw a large number of workmen out of business.

A bill to reduce judges, chancellors and district attorneys from $15 to $10 a day passed the House.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 4.—Advices from Lone Pine, on Friday last, state that the earthquake shocks still continue there, although they were less violent. Four more deaths of injured parties are reported.

Owen's Lake has risen four feet, and Owen's river shrunk to half its usual size. A creek is running where dry land formerly stood.

While one family of five were being buried, a shock filled the graves with earth and sunk the ground on which the burying party were standing four feet.

In San Diego county, springs which were wholly or partly dried up by an earthquake fifteen years since have broken out afresh.

NEW YORK, April 5.—The remains of Prof. Morse were to-day taken to the Madison Square Presbyterian church, where the funeral services were performed by the Rev. Dr. Adams. The body of the church had been reserved for delegations from various organizations which had expressed their intention to be present. Among the delegations present were Governor Hoffman and staff, a committee from the New York Legislature, the directors of the Western Union and the directors of the New York and Newfoundland Telegraph companies. A delegation from the Academy of Design, a delegation representing the Evangelical Alliance, the New York City Common Council, trustees of Vassar College, a committee of three from the Common Council of Poughkeepsie, and several other delegations of less note. The coffin was borne into the church on the shoulders of four men, surrounded by a crowd, and followed by the family and friends of the deceased, and the delegations.

There were seventeen new cases of smallpox yesterday and six deaths.

JACKSON, Miss., April 5.—The Legislature adjourned to-day sine die. The last hours, during last night and to-day, the most perfect disorder and confusion prevailed; one-half the members were constantly on the floor, and the speaker's gavel was plied continuously. At a late hour the bill to reduce fees and salaries was passed, the Governor's salary being placed at $4,000, and other State officers at $2,000. The civil rights bill was rejected in the Senate without argument. A bill was passed authorizing the superintendent of public schools to purchase Hardee's map for use in the schools.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Advices from the Indian country state that Red Cloud, chief of the Sioux, had a talk at the agency recently. He is peaceful, but his young warriors cannot be kept from the war-path.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 6.—The bill prohibiting appropriations from the State treasury to schools or institutions under sectarian religious control was debated in the Assembly to-day.

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—The number of deaths for the week amount to four hundred and thirty-five; a decrease of ten; smallpox deaths, seventy-four; a decrease of eleven.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, April 3.—It is announced that Lord Lesgar, Governor General of the Dominion of Canada, will shortly be called home and will be succeeded by the Earl of Dufferin, now chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

LISBON, April 3.—A convention has been signed by the Maintenance and Construction Company of Great Britain and the government of Portugal for the laying of a telegraphic cable from Lisbon to Brazil, by the way of the Madeira and the Cape de Verde Islands.

MADRID, April 3.—The municipal authorities of the towns in the Province of Badajos, together with the authorities of a number of towns in other provinces, have entered into a coalition which has for its object initiation measures which, it is hoped, will lead to a restitution of Gibraltar to Spain.

LONDON, April 4.—The strike of the London compositors has been successful. The demands for increased wages, and the limitation of a day's work to nine hours, have been conceded by one hundred and forty-two firms.

MATAMORAS, MEXICO, April 4.—Last night a courier from Tampico arrived with a telegram to General Palacios from the secretary of war, dated at the City of Mexico on the thirteenth, announcing that General Pesquera has destroyed the revolutionists in the States of Durango and Sinaloa, and restored order at Mazatlan; that General Rocha continued to pursue the revolutionists in the States of Coahuila and Nuevo Leon, and that General Canales would leave Vera Cruz by steamer with troops to reinforce this frontier at once. The news was celebrated here by music and the ringing of bells at midnight.

LONDON, April 5.—Father Gavazzi, the eminent Italian priest, who is now on route to the United States, will sail from Liverpool in the steamer Russia, accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Thompson, of Pennsylvania. Both gentlemen go out as delegates from the Free Italian Church to American Christians.

The House of Commons reassembled to-day. Bondham Carter succeeds Dobson as chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

The agricultural laborers of Cambridgeshire have struck for higher wages.

PARIS, April 6.—Henri Rochefort, Paschal, Grousset and Assi sailed to-day for the penal colony of New Caledonia.

LONDON, April 8.—One-half the city of Antioch, Syria, was recently destroyed by an earthquake. Fifteen hundred persons are reported killed.

The Mormon Internationalists have seceded from the regular organization, and formed a new federal council. Their proceedings yesterday gave signs of trouble brewing.

MATAMORAS, MEXICO, April 8.—The revolutionists are supposed to be within forty or fifty miles of the city, having reoccupied Reynosa at about ten o'clock this morning, at which time telegraphic communication with that place ceased.

General Palacios has declared martial law, and placed General Ayala, of Monterey, second in command and in charge of the National Guards.

ROME, April 9.—The Pope has refused to receive the sum of money which was offered to him by the Italian government. His holiness, in declining the gift, declared that when it became necessary for him to accept alms as a means for maintaining his subsistence he would only receive them from the Catholic world.

A committee, to erect a monument to Mazzini for its object, has been organized, with Garibaldi at its head.

Mount Vesuvius is again in a state of violent eruption. A column of flame shoots several hundred feet above the crater, and stones and ashes and cinders fall in dense showers around the summit. Tourists are hastening to Naples to witness the spectacle.

PRUSSIAN PREPARATIONS IN FRANCE. The Prussians are fortifying Metz with enormous cannon of steel from Krupp's manufactory, of the same caliber as those at Mount Valerien during the war. They are also enlarging Strasburg, so that instead of ninety thousand it can contain two hundred thousand, making a canal parallel with the Rhine, and an enormous basin for ships coming from Mannheim and the North Sea.

WE LEARN from the Courier-Journal, says the Western Methodist, that Bishop Kavanaugh was expected to preach on Sunday last in New Albany, Indiana, where our church, recently organized, now numbers seventy-three members, with a Sunday school of fifty-six members.

THE REV. M. G. MCALISTER, of the St. Louis Conference, died on the twenty-seventh of March.

A GODLY MAN'S comforts and grievances are alike hid from the world.

METHODISM IN ITALY.

Methodism in Rome is Methodism just where it ought to be. No two bodies are so diametrically opposed as the most vital of the Protestant and the most highly organized of the sacerdotal churches. We have already recorded the fitting up of a place of worship in the Via Barbieri by the Wesleyans, and the establishment of religious services there in the Italian language. The attendance at this extemporized chapel is about sixty in the morning, and twice as many in the evening. Under the lead of the Rev. Henry J. Piggott, the superintendent of their Italian missions, the Wesleyans have purchased in Rome premises for permanent occupancy. The buildings, reports the Watchman, "consist of a noble block of shops and houses. They are situated in the current of the most crowded thoroughfares, and they are in the midst of a dense population. By some slight and not expensive alterations a place of worship may be fitted up on the ground floor, having an entrance from two of the main streets, and capable of accommodating from three to four hundred persons; while the greater part of the premises, now let as shops and dwelling houses, will for the present remain undisturbed, and will yield a considerable income toward the support of the mission. The price is £10,000, a sum which the committee would not have dared to expend but for the encouragement which they have received from some large-hearted friends, and for the spirited effort which has been so auspiciously commenced for the extinction of the society's debt. We are glad to learn that for the erection of churches in Rome and Naples, and for the removal of the debt, upward of £24,000 have already been promised, leaving about £8,000 still to be raised."

We have no doubt that Italians will make earnest Methodists. Their singing at the chapel is reported to be "as hearty as that of Yorkshire or Cornwall." Fifty members are already enrolled, and with a better position more will undoubtedly be accomplished.

This is a wonderful revolution. Rome, so long sealed up against light and truth, is now opened to the whole world. The people hate the papacy; they have felt its galling yoke for centuries, and are thrice happy in having thrown it off. Some express fear of reaction; we have no such fear. Italy will never restore the temporal power, and the rest of Europe dare not.—Methodist.

PROF. MORSE.

In the funeral discourse over Prof. Morse, delivered at New York on the fifth, the Rev. Dr. Adams spoke in very feeling terms of the close affection and confidence that existed between Prof. Morse and his two brothers. The preacher said:

"Their loss occasioned a shock to their brother which ended only with his death. There never was, perhaps, a family in this country which had exercised so wide an influence, directly or indirectly, as Dr. Jedediah Morse and his sons. Neither should Prof. Morse's mother be forgotten. No one could look upon her features retained on the canvas by the hand of her son without feeling she was a woman qualified to train and inspire her children for high ends in life."

Alluding to Prof. Morse's religious faith, Rev. Mr. Adams said:

"From the first to the last he regarded himself as the agent and child of Providence. As the inventor of the telegraph he felt himself an instrument in the hand of God, and never in any way detracted from the merits of others whose efforts he had used as the architect uses scattered blocks of marble to erect a complete and stately mansion. Prof. Morse began to die when his brother Sidney died, though his cheerful industry underwent no abatement. A few days before his death, when some thought his power of speech had departed, Dr. Adams said to him: 'I know on whom I lean.' His face brightened and he replied: 'It is all right.' Last Sunday afternoon he was unable to articulate, when his pastor repeated to him hopeful words which were the text of his Easter sermon. The dying man responded by a pressure of the hand and an inclination of the head."

A CERTAIN CLERGYMAN, speaking of a young lady whom a friend of his was about to marry, exclaimed: "I should as soon think of marrying the daughter of Beelzebub, and going home to live with the old folks!"

FROM THE WORK.

Jonesboro, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: I have just finished reading the ADVOCATE of March 7. I find it what it always is—rich and interesting. The wonder to me is that every person who loves a variety of reading matter for a small sum of money does not immediately procure an annual claim to the ADVOCATE! But I am sorry to say that there are a great many—yea, multitudes—who never see it. I know Methodist families on this circuit to whom the ADVOCATE is an entire stranger. Why is this the case? Cannot some means be devised to convince them of its great value? I am apprised of the fact that a family who enjoy one year the feasts that so richly feed the mind in the ADVOCATE would not be without it under any circumstances. In the ADVOCATE can be found a variety to suit the taste of all, from the poor peasant to the student who is exploring the scientific researches of nature. The Christian, the sinner, the learned and the unlearned, the rich and the poor, the merchant and the farmer, all can find in the columns of the ADVOCATE a rich treat, an indispensable pleasure for fifty-two weeks, for the meager sum of $2. Who would be without the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE? No one who knows how to appreciate a good weekly paper.

Our preacher, T. P. Roberts, whom we all love as a pastor and a friend, is doing a good work, and we predict a successful year's labor for him. He preached to this people four years ago, and, according to the rules of the Discipline, had to leave us. He was gone three years, and at the last Conference, to the gratification of everybody, he was sent back. May he have a happy year, and may his labors be crowned with unprecedented success! At Pleasant Hill church there is a flourishing Sabbath school, under the efficient management of T. H. Owen, Esq., an old and tried soldier of Christ. I have never seen a more deep and lasting interest taken in any community by young men than is manifested in that Sabbath school. May the superintendent long live to lead the young in the way to heaven!

Respectfully, etc., AJAX.

From the Indian Country.

MR. EDITOR: We wish to express our gratitude to you and all concerned for your very neat little sheet, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, which comes to us weekly, filled with choice articles just suited for a religious newspaper. Dr. Clarke says: "A gift is something received without compensation or reward; a free gift is something conferred without asking or entreaty." Your paper to us is of the latter class of gifts. Our obligations to you are not, however, in any degree lessened, but increased by the freeness of the gift. You are so far away that we have no hope of compensating you with subscribers for the paper, and it is not probable that you will ever visit this frontier, so that we could bestow some kindly act upon you, unless by the good providence of God you should be elevated to a higher position in the church, and the twain should be increased to triple from the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE office. In that case you would come up here first, as the new Bishop is sent up to the Indian country, soon after he enters upon his duties, in order to initiate him into the episcopal itinerancy.

Dismissing this subject, however, for the present, permit us to give you a short story from the Indian country, which contains something new. Well, we spent the first Sabbath of February last at a quarterly meeting on the Flint circuit, Cherokee district, Rev. Y. Ewing, preacher in charge. We had a good meeting—eleven accessions to the church, and the little society greatly strengthened and built up. On Monday morning Bro. Ewing and onrself set out for another neighborhood, some fifteen miles distant. On the way we stopped at Judge Adair's to rest and visit the family—entered the house, and were seated. "Any news?" was the inquiry. "Well," said the judge, "I have an item of news, to me at least. On yesterday Father G. (who is a local preacher) was called upon to attend the funeral of a little child that had died near here. The neighbors met to witness the interment, and all waiting for the preacher to begin the service; but Father G. was not ready. He had learned that the parents of the child were not married. He called them to one side, and told them that it was unlawful and wicked to live in that condition; and by urging the subject obtained their consent to marry there and then. The parties were called up—the coffin in full view—he announced the marriage ceremony; then proceeded to perform the burial service." Meeting the good old man a few days after, we asked him why he urged the subject of marriage just at that time. His answer was that "their hearts were tender then. I feared if it was put off that they never would marry." Can New Orleans beat that?

Praying that prosperity may be your lot, I am, as ever, your brother in Christ, J. HARRELL.

VAN BUREN, ARK., March 23, 1872.

Tribute of Respect to the Memory of Rev. Thomas Nixon.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Quarterly Conference for Cayuga circuit, on Saturday, the sixteenth day of March, 1872:

Resolved, That this Quarterly Conference has heard with unfeigned sorrow of the death of the Rev. Thomas Nixon, the last surviving member of the first Annual Conference held in Mississippi, who has been a member of the Quarterly Conference for this circuit for a fourth of a century, and for upward of half a century has been a faithful and devoted minister of Christ, ready and willing to live or die in his service.

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Nixon the Methodist Episcopal Church South has lost one of her oldest and most zealous supporters; his family a kind and affectionate husband and father, and his friends a courteous, agreeable and instructive companion; and while we bow in submission to the will of Providence, who prolonged his days beyond the usual time allotted to man, we are glad to hear that our brother felt prepared to die, and that he calmly fell asleep in Jesus.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this conference, and a copy sent to the family and widow of the deceased; and also that a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Resolved, That the Rev. John G. Jones be requested to furnish an obituary of our deceased brother for publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and also to write a biographical sketch of his life. J. A. B. JONES, P. E.

H. FOOTE, Secretary.

For the Advocate.

PAY PROMPTLY.

MR. EDITOR: I have completed my first round of quarterly meetings. Met every appointment in the district except one. From a superabundance of rain and high water I was disappointed in getting to North Bossier circuit.

I invariably found the preachers at their posts. They are well received, and there seems to be a hearty co-operation between the preachers and their congregations. The membership generally is uniform and healthy.

The finances also are more hopeful. The stewards have made fair and, I might say, liberal assessments for the preachers. And just here allow me to urge the importance of timely, that is, early collections. Let the stewards go to work, and let the congregations come up to the support of their preachers—lay in their groceries and a few dry goods, etc. Let not the respective charges burden their preacher with the painful necessity of going in debt. No. Keep the preachers out of debt. Let them be untrammeled. Make their hearts, and the hearts of their wives and children, glad by meeting their claims quarterly. Oh! that the people could be persuaded to take a business-like and conscientious view of this matter, and pay up quarterly. How much easier for them, and may I not say four-fold better for the preacher. Mechanics, clerks, school teachers, physicians, lawyers and everybody must be remunerated for services rendered.

Is the gospel of less importance? Surely not. For it, and it alone, forms the grand basis of all good government—improves above everything else our social, intellectual and moral condition. It restrains vice and immorality, fosters every good purpose and principle, proclaims, with authority, truth and equity, and promotes in every respect the highest interests of the race.

The minister, therefore, who is called and commissioned of "High Heaven" to go forth and "proclaim the "unsearchable riches of the grace of God," is intrusted with the most precious message ever committed to men or angels. The great kings, queens and nobles of earth, in their grand edicts and thrilling messages, are not to be compared to the glad tidings of the gospel of peace. To the faithful minister of Christ is intrusted, in a measure at least, the care and keeping of souls. And while the preachers make greater sacrifices, and more of them, than any other class of men, under the solemn conviction that woe is me if I preach not the gospel, is it possible that the church will ignore her obligation in failing to support her ministry?

Who does not recollect the nervous language of Dr. Bond on this subject, that where the church shuts up her compassion and refuses to support her ministers, the woe is transferred from the ministry to the church? and we may reasonably suppose that woe is the church that will not have the gospel effectually preached. It requires head-work, knee-work and heart-work to preach successfully. And while a man is thus engaged, and the care of all the churches upon him, he has little or no time to look after secular interests; therefore the church must take care of his temporal welfare.

We hope the church will acquit herself nobly this year in the support of her ministers, and especially do we desire it in the bounds of Minden district; and that we may have a general revival of religion after the order of primitive Methodism. For this we pray, for this we labor. N. M. SKIPWORTH.

MINDEN, LA., March 27, 1872.

The following notes, alluded to last week, came too late for insertion in our last issue. Of course some competent hand will send us obituaries in due time.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., April 1, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: You will please announce the death of the Rev. L. R. Redding, which took place at his father's residence, in Georgia, on the twenty-second of March. I learn from his wife that his death was a very triumphant one. He had been suffering from consumption for some time, and a short while before his death his father came to see him, and thought that a change of climate might be beneficial to his health, and, upon consultation with the physician and friends, took him to Georgia. He lived but a short time after getting there. He was a member of the Mississippi Annual Conference. His home was in Hazlehurst, Mississippi. Much might be said of him for good, but we will leave this for some abler pen. We deeply feel this bereavement; but our loss is his eternal gain.

P. A. JOHNSTON.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., April 1, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: Please announce in your paper the death of Rev. R. J. Jones, Sr., of the Mississippi Conference. This event took place last Tuesday, March 26, at his home in Jasper county, Mississippi, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. His health had been infirm for some time previous, but on that day he was seized suddenly with congestion of the lungs, and died in a few moments.

His long and useful services in the church merit an extended and appreciative notice, which they will doubtless receive in proper time.

Yours truly, E. H. MOUNGER.

CHURCH IN ALGIERS.

MR. EDITOR: We would call the attention of the Methodist churches of the city to the effort of their sister church in Algiers.

A fair for the benefit of the church will be held in the Masonic Temple, Algiers, April 17, 18, 19 and 20.

A little handful—a feeble few—they have labored earnestly and faithfully that they might be favored with a stationed minister. The "man of God" sent to them by the appointment of the Bishop is more than acceptable, and must be sustained.

They call upon you for assistance—surely not in vain. They are not ignorant of the many demands upon your means, yet would add the interests of their church to the catalogue of your worthy beneficiaries.

Brethren, can you not, will you not aid them? If you cannot attend in the evening, go at some hour through the day—lunch served from twelve till two; but if impossible to attend at any hour of any of the days, then buy tickets—buy freely; urge others to buy. They are but twenty-five cents, and can be had at the office of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, 112 Camp street. R.

THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1872.

THE following lines, from the Ashe, are attributed to Dora Greenwell, and represent the simple but eloquent talk of a poor Indian to his wife:

I've got a ward like a bird in my heart,
That will not let me be;
Jesus, the Son of God, died for me,
And who gave Jesus up for me.

There's none on earth could frame such a tale,
For as strange as the tale may be;
Jesus, my Savior, that thou shouldst die
For love of a man like me!

Why, only think now if it had been
Peter or blessed Paul,
Or John, who used to lean on his breast,
One couldn't have wondered at all!

If he'd loved and he'd died for men like these,
Who loved him so well but, you see,
It was me that Jesus loved, wife;
He gave himself for me.

It was for me that Jesus died—
For me, and a world of men
Just as simple and just as slow
To give back his love again.

He didn't wait till I came to him,
But he loved me at my worst;
He needn't ever have died for me
If I could have loved him first.

And couldst thou love such a man as me,
My Savior? Then I'll take
More heed to this wandering soul of mine,
If it's only for thy sake!"

SOMETHING YOU CAN DO.

If you cannot speak like angels,
If you cannot preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus,
You can say he died for all.
If you cannot rouse the wicked
With the judgment's dread alarms,
You can lead the little children
To the Savior's waiting arms.
Let none hear you idly saying,
There is nothing I can do,
While the sons of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you.
Take the task he gives you gladly,
Let his work your pleasure be,
Answer quickly when he calleth,
Here am I; send me, send me.

FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

When we speak of the foreknowledge of God we speak of something that is incomprehensible by finite minds, because it is infinite, and therefore finite minds cannot comprehend it. But finite minds may speak of it, and reason on it, as it is revealed to us in the Scriptures. In the Scriptures God teaches us that his knowledge is very far superior to our knowledge, but that our knowledge resembles his knowledge—I suppose, as a drop of water resembles the ocean, or a grain of sand resembles the globe on which we stand. And as the wisdom of God has furnished us finite beings with this comparison in his holy word, we may, with reverence and fear, venture to reason on this eternal and infinite attribute of God's foreknowledge. The Scriptures teach us that God knows all things. "Thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee." If God knows all things, then all things are "naked and opened to the eyes of him with whom we have to do." "Known unto him are all his works from the beginning of the world." "Lord, thou hast searched me and know me; thou knowest my down-sitting and mine uprising; thou understandest my thoughts afar off." "Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether. The darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day. The ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his goings, he searcheth their hearts and understandeth every imagination of their thoughts." Nor is this perfect knowledge to be confined to men and angels, and the works of creation; it reaches into the state of the dead and penetrates the regions of the damned. "Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering." No limits at all are to be set to this perfection. "Great is the Lord; his understanding is infinite." The above citations from the word of God very clearly prove that God knows all things as they are, and as they possibly may be. He cannot know things that do not exist as existing, neither can he know things existing as not existing. He cannot know things as they are not, but as they are. He cannot know a saint a sinner at the same time, nor a sinner a saint at the same time. His perfect knowledge of all things as they are forbids the thought. And, if so, it is impossible for the perfect knowledge of God to know a sinner in time as one of God's elect children from all eternity, and a sinner too at the same time. Sinners are not the elect, nor the elect sinners; and if all men born into the world are constituted sinners by the transgression of Adam, there never was a man born into the world that was one of the elect of God in eternity, because all men are born into the world in sin. And if all men are born in sin, election takes place in time, and not in eternity. And this must be true, or the universal depravity of the human soul must be abandoned. God knows things as they are, and not as they are not. He knows that all men are born in sin, and has declared this truth to us; but if he knows of one part of the human race of mankind elected in eternity, he has not revealed that to us, and therefore we are not required to believe it. But in what sense does God know all things as they are? We answer, he knows some things as certain, and he knows some things as possible. And his knowledge is as perfect in the one case as in the other. His knowledge of things existing is certain; he knows them as existing; and his knowledge of the possible existence of things that are not in existence is also perfect. In this his knowledge very far excels the knowledge of man. I know with certainty that I am writing this article to-day, and that the paper is white and the ink black; this is certain knowledge. And I believe it is possible for me to write to-morrow; but this is uncertain—to-morrow I may be dead, or the paper on which I write to-day may be dyed black, and the ink may be made white.

Take another illustration. I will suppose that I am in the beautiful city of New Orleans to-day. I am certain that I am there; I see the city with its magnificent buildings and its numerous inhabitants; I see also the printing office, converse with the editor and eat dinner with him, and I am as certain that I am in the city of New Orleans as I am that I am a living man. This is certain knowledge in man. Now I believe, while in the city of New Orleans to-day, that it is possible for me to be here to-morrow again, and behold the beautiful city again; but this is uncertain, because before to-morrow's sun shall rise the city may be sunk by an earthquake or destroyed by fire, or I may be dead and in eternity. So you see possible knowledge with man is uncertain, because man is imperfect. But not so with God, because God is absolute perfection itself, and what he knows as possible to be, he knows with certainty may be. The knowledge of man is acquired, but the knowledge of God is intuitive; it is one of his attributes, a part of his infinite nature; therefore his knowledge is eternal as God is eternal, and as immutable as God is immutable, and as infinite as God is infinite. Therefore it is certain that this knowledge of God existed in eternity before the foundation of the world, before all time, before anything was made that is made. And in eternity, before creation, God's perfect knowledge saw that it was possible for him to create angels; he created them first of all creatures. And when they were created, he was certain that they were created, and, understanding their moral nature perfectly, he knew that it was possible for them to be governed by moral law, and therefore as moral agents he placed them under moral rule. And at the same time he knew that they, as moral agents, could obey or transgress that law; and when a part of them transgressed, his possible knowledge of their transgressing his holy law became certain knowledge of the fact that they had sinned, and not until they had sinned, because God's absolute and perfect knowledge knows things as they are, and not as they are not. And hence it is as clear to my mind as the noon-day sun that God's knowledge of the possibility of the angels sinning was no more the cause of their sinning than my knowledge of the possibility of the thief stealing is the cause of his stealing.

Again, God saw that it was possible for him to make this world in which we now live, and he created it "by the word of his power." And after he made it he was certain that it was made; but he was not certain that it was made before it was made, because his perfect knowledge of things cannot know them as existing when they do not exist. But his perfect knowledge knows the possibility of the existence of all things that can exist, and after their existence his perfect knowledge knows them as existing, and not before. Therefore, having this perfect knowledge of the possibility of this world's existence, he made it; and after he made it he was certain that he had made it. And knowing all the properties of the matter of which he made this material world, he knew the suitable nature of the law by which this world of matter was to be governed and upheld, and therefore he placed this world of matter under a law of necessity, and this law of necessity now governs the whole universe of matter. By it the mineral kingdom is governed, by it the vegetable kingdom is governed, by it the animal kingdom is governed; and, by being thus placed under this law of necessity, they answer the purpose for which the wisdom of God created them.

Yet again, after God had created this whole universe of matter, and saw that it was very good, he knew that it was possible for him to make mind as well as matter to dwell on the face of the beautiful earth that he had made, and he said: "Let us make man in our own image; and in his own image created he them, both male and female." He created the body of the man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. Now, after man was made, God knew him as made, and not as possible to be made; and, knowing him to have a rational mind, and capable of performing moral actions, he saw that it was possible for him to be governed by moral law, and accordingly placed him under moral law. Knowing, with certain knowledge, that it was possible for him to keep the law or transgress it. Right here a question arises: Did not God know that Adam would be certain to fall before he made him? We answer, (this question that is supposed by some to be unanswerable,) that God knew that it was possible for Adam to fall when he made him a moral agent, and placed him under moral law. But it was impossible for him who is absolute perfection itself to know a thing to exist and not exist at the same time, or to know things already done that are not as yet done. He knows things as they are, and not as they are not; he cannot err or be deceived in time nor in eternity. He knows all things as they truly are; therefore he knew with certainty that it was possible for Adam to stand or fall, but he could not know Adam as certainly fallen until he did fall. And when he did fall God knew him as fallen, and provided a remedy for his restoration. But you say: I cannot believe such doctrine as that. I believe that God in eternity, before the foundation of the world or the creation of man, knew, with a certain, absolute knowledge, that man would fall; and as his knowledge is perfect and immutable, man could but fall of necessity; because if man had not fell, the certain foreknowledge of God would have failed and thereby become imperfect; and as foreknowledge is an attribute of God, a failure in this attribute would be a failure in God, and he would no longer be perfect as God, but imperfect, and an imperfect god is no god at all, and atheism would be true. Therefore God, foreknowing in eternity that Adam, when made, would be certain to fall, the divine mind originated the plan of human redemption in eternity, before the world was made or man created. This, I doubt not, is your honest belief, my dear brother in Christ Jesus; but I cannot agree with you, and therefore beg leave to differ with you in opinion on this point. The point of difference between us is: You say that you believe that God in eternity (before the world was or man was created) knew, with a certain, absolute knowledge, that man would fall; and as his knowledge is perfect and immutable, man could but fall of necessity. But I believe that God in eternity (before the world was or man was created) knew, with a certain, absolute knowledge, that it would be possible for Adam, when made, to stand or fall. So, you see, the point of difference between us is: You made God's certain foreknowledge that Adam would fall the necessitating cause of his fall, and this opinion your argument attempts to sustain. My opinion makes Adam's own act (as a moral agent) the cause of his fall. Now, my dear brother, if your opinion be true, the inevitable conclusion is, that God was the author of Adam's sin. There is no possible chance, that I can see, to dodge this logical conclusion; it is as a nail in a sure place. And, moreover, if God's certain foreknowledge that Adam would fall caused him to fall, he was no more to blame for falling than the sun is to be blamed for shining; and therefore it was very unjust and cruel in God to punish Adam for an act over which he had no control, and could not possibly help. And if the God we serve is a God of such a character as this, namely, the author of sin, cruel and unjust, as your theory makes him, we do not worship the God of the Bible; but we worship an unholy, unjust and cruel God—that is, no God at all; and therefore we are practical atheists. These are only some of the logical absurdities growing out of your belief, my brother; but these are sufficient to prove to you that your opinion is wrong, and therefore cannot be true. And therefore my advice to you, as a brother in Christ, is to abandon such a belief forthwith, and embrace the truth in this matter. The truth seems to be this, that God perfectly knew in eternity that it was possible for Adam, a moral agent, to stand or fall, and that his own act (and not the foreknowledge of God) was the cause of his fall. This view of the case places the cause and origin of sin in man, where the word of God places it, and not in the foreknowledge of God. This view of the matter harmonizes all the attributes of God, and all his acts with the children of men, by making man a moral agent; and here is the secret of the whole matter. Make man a moral agent, and you have the key that unlocks all these deep mysteries that appertain to God's dealings with men on earth. But without this key we are in the dark, and must remain in the dark as long as we live without it. Therefore, my brother, take the thought now, and carry it with you to the end of your life, and you will be no longer troubled about the foreknowledge of God and his universal sovereignty.

Now, you say, please define the term moral agency as you understand it, for there are several definitions given of it? I will define the term moral agency, as I believe it, in the language of Mr. Watson and Mr. Locke. Mr. Watson says: "He is a moral agent who is capable of performing moral actions; and an action is rendered moral by two circumstances: first, that it is voluntary; second, that it has respect to some rule which determines it to be good or evil." Locke says: "Moral good or evil is the conformity or disagreement of our voluntary actions to some law, whereby good or evil is drawn upon us from the will or power of the law maker." Now that the above definitions of the moral agency of man are true, is clear from the fact that God has placed mankind under moral law, and that law is recorded in his written word, and this law of God was designed to govern intelligent mind, capable of performing voluntary actions, and not unintelligent matter that is governed by a law of necessity. This distinction should be kept in mind all the time. Again, our own conscious knowledge of the fact that we can do things or not do them, and when we do them we might have done otherwise, is a clear demonstration that we are free moral agents. Once more, the word of God plainly declares that we are accountable to God for all our acts, words and thoughts, which could not be the case if we were not moral agents. If we are not moral agents we are no more accountable to God for our acts than the sea that ebbs and flows is accountable to him for ebbing and flowing, that only ebb and flow by an immutable law of necessity. Again, the Bible speaks to man as a moral agent placed under moral law. It exhorts him to repent and believe the gospel, to seek the Lord while he may be found, to choose whom he will serve, God or Belial, etc. Now from all these testimonies we conclude that it is certain that man is a moral agent. And, if so, he is accountable to God for all his acts, words and thoughts, whether they be good or evil, "for God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." You now say it is reasonable to believe that man is a moral agent; and if you can reconcile the moral agency of man with the foreknowledge and universal government of God, my mind will be relieved, and I think that I will be perfectly satisfied that your theory is correct. Your question, my brother, has vexed and bewildered the minds of certain classes of divines from the days of St. Augustine down to the present time, because on their hypothesis it is impossible to answer it. But upon the hypothesis that man is a moral agent it is possible to answer it. And in order to do this, we will attempt first to reconcile the foreknowledge of God with the moral agency of man; and to do this, let it be observed that the foreknowledge of God has no influence upon either the freedom or certainty of actions performed by moral agents, for this plain reason, that it is knowledge, and not influence. Well, then, if God's foreknowledge of an act done by a free moral agent does not influence the act, it is free, and harmonizes with the foreknowledge of God that knows it to be free. And hence it follows that the foreknowledge of God and the moral agency of man are reconciled and perfectly harmonized. And that God's foreknowledge of an act done by a moral agent does not influence the act is very certain from the fact that there are sinful acts, and to suppose God's foreknowledge to influence those sinful acts, so as to cause them, would be to suppose him to influence all the sinful acts committed by mankind on earth, and all the sin committed by the devils in hell. And would not this be to suppose God to be the author of all sin? Now, my brother, take this bright thought along with you, that God's foreknowledge is knowledge, and not power, to influence the acts of men, and you will be troubled no more on this question.

You now say: How will you account for those certain predictions recorded in the Bible that were predicted many hundred years before their fulfillment, if God's foreknowledge had no influence in their fulfillment? We answer that God's foreknowledge of those events did not influence those events, because foreknowledge is knowledge, and not influence. And hence his foreknowledge of the acts of those wicked cities and nations, and their final destruction, was not caused by God's foreknowledge, but by their own wicked acts; for God's foreknowledge is knowledge, and not power, to influence men's acts. Men's acts are free, and God foreknows them as free, and acts accordingly. And therefore all his promises and threatenings to men are conditional; they could not be otherwise if men's acts are free. And, if this be true, all the predictions in the Bible, made against wicked nations, cities or individuals, are conditional if they have not sealed forever their own condemnation by their own sinful acts. And where this is not the case, all the predictions of God relative to man are conditional; and where the condition is not expressed it is implied. This was so in the case of the great city Nineveh. "And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah, saying, Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee. And Jonah cried and said, according to the word of the Lord, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown. But the people of Nineveh believed the word of the Lord, and repented in sackcloth and ashes; and God saw their works that they turned from their evil way, and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them, and he did it not." This prediction was conditional, and though the condition is not expressed, it was implied, as the history of the case shows. It is so likewise in the case of King Hezekiah: "In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And the prophet Isaiah, the son of Amos, came to him and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, set thine house in order, for thou shalt die and not live. Then the King Hezekiah turned his face to the wall and prayed unto the Lord, and wept sore. And the Lord heard and answered his prayer and healed him, and added to his life fifteen years." These two cases of prophecy prove that God's predictions recorded in the Bible are conditional when men do not, by their own continued acts of wickedness, make them unconditional as to their punishment for sin. "For the soul that continues to sin it shall die." In this way we reconcile the foreknowledge of God, and all his predictions recorded in the Bible, with the moral agency of man. The mind of man is free, and God, who made it, knows it to be free, and deals with it accordingly. And this leads us to the second part of your inquiry: How are we to reconcile the moral agency of man with the universal government of God? We answer this question by admitting that God created all things, governs all things, and upholds all things by the word of his power. But he does not govern all things by the same universal law. He governs matter by one universal law, and he governs mind by another universal law; therefore the universe of matter is governed by one, and the universe of mind by the other.

Now the question is: What is the nature of those two laws by which God governs the whole universe of mind and matter? We answer: The nature of the law by which God governs the whole universe of matter is a law of necessity. But the nature of the law by which he governs the whole universe of mind is a law of liberty. It is "the perfect law of liberty." The law that governs matter necessitates matter to be always just what it is and as it is; it cannot be anything else but what it is, nor do anything else but what it does. But not so with the law of liberty, that governs mind. It leaves the mind free to act or not act, to choose or not choose, to do or not do, to sin or not sin, to repent or not repent, to believe or not believe, to be holy or unholy. And this must needs be so, or man could not be accountable to God nor man for his acts, and rewarded or punished according to his works.—Therefore we conclude that man's acts are free, because he is placed under a law of liberty, and therefore his free acts perfectly harmonize with the law of liberty under which he is placed; and if so, the universal government of God over the universe of mind is reconciled with the moral agency of man. And as we are now about to part, my brother, take this thought along with you, namely: that matter is not mind, and that they are governed by two distinct and opposite laws—the former by a law of necessity, but the latter by a law of perfect liberty; and you will have no more trouble on this subject.

May the Lord bless you with an everlasting salvation; and if we never meet again on earth, I hope to meet you in heaven. So farewell for a season.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON once said to an intimate friend: "Men give me credit for genius. All the genius I have lies just in this—when I have a subject in hand I study it profoundly. Day and night it is before me. I explore it in all its bearings. My mind becomes pervaded with it. Then the effort which I make, the people are pleased to call the fruit of genius. It is the fruit of labor and thought."

IF WITH a double burden the Lord supplies a double strength, it is exactly the same to our experience as if with half the burden he left us half the strength. To all alleged difficulties there is one simple answer: He giveth more grace."—Goulburn.

LET THERE BE LIGHT.

The earth unformed in chaos slept,
While the deep was draped in night;
The Spirit moved on the water's depth,
When the voice came forth: Let there be light.

The morning stars together sang,
While darkness fled from the sight,
When the sun of the first great system sprang
At the glorious words: Let there be light.

The seas rolled back to the coral bed,
While the earth was formed to mountain height;
The day lit up at the word which said,
In accents loud? Let there be light.

WRITING FOR THE PRESS.

MR. EDITOR: The newspaper press is acknowledged by all to be a mighty power for the promotion of good or of evil, according to the manner in which it is used. The enemies of the cross of Christ are making diligent use of it for the propagation of evil. They are by this means planting and cultivating the seed of vices which will grow into fuel for the fires of that hell which they endeavor to persuade their readers has only a fabled existence. While these wicked men are thus using this power for evil, men of God should use the same power to plant and cultivate those seeds which shall grow eventually into "trees of life" on the banks of the crystal river of God. While Satan's emissaries are pouring forth through the channel of the press rivers of deadly poison, which ten of thousands are drinking to their own eternal undoing, the heralds of the cross should send forth through the same channel, in still greater abundance, the streams of salvation, that men everywhere may drink and live forever.

It is to be feared that some of our ablest writers—or some who would be, if they would write—do not appreciate the importance of this means of doing good. Some of our ablest men and best preachers seldom write an article for any one of the Advocates.

Let us notice some reasons for availing ourselves of this means of doing good:

1. Some men can write better than they can preach. Of these there are at least two classes.

First, some one so constituted mentally and physically, that he is easily embarrassed and unbalanced in the presence of an audience, especially in trying to preach extempore. But in writing it is different. In the quiet of the study there is nothing to embarrass the mind or excite the nervous system. Calm and composed, the mind acts freely and is able to exert fully what power it possesses.

The other class to which I have reference is composed of men of a very different type—the very antipodes of the former class. The subject-matter of their sermons is good, their ideas clear and correct, their language chaste, their logic faultless; but their delivery is unimpressive, and their manner cold and dull. But these same men can write well, and their articles would be readable and profitable. Such men ought to write—they will do more good with their pens than with their tongues.

2. The audiences to which we preach are generally small in comparison with the numbers who read an article in a newspaper. We preach to from half a dozen to a few hundred persons, but a good article in a paper is read by thousands. In this way the substance of what we preach to a small congregation on Sunday may be condensed into a pithy article for the newspaper, and thus preached to an audience perhaps a hundred times as large as that which first heard it.

3. Those who hear us preach are dependent on their memories for what they hear, and are liable to forget much. But when they have it in print they can read it as often as they choose, and thus retain it.

4. On most of our circuits we preach at each appointment generally but once a month, and at some places this is all the religious service the people have during the month. But the ADVOCATE, filled with lessons of instruction, encouragement or warning, comes a welcome messenger every week. In this way we can preach to our people once a week, instead of only once a month.

Finally, what we write and publish may be kept for years, and be read by "those who shall come after;" and thus we, "being dead may yet speak."

Since we are "passing away," and our fellow-men are dying around us, it behooves us to seize upon every means of doing good. We should preach "Jesus and him crucified" from the pulpit, through the press, around the firesides and on the public highway.

OUR BABY.

Softly we cut the fragrant sod,
With trembling hands, asunder,
And lay this well-beloved of God,
Our dear dead baby, under.
O hearts that ache, and ache afresh!
O tears too blindly raining!
O hearts are weak, yet, being flesh,
Too strong for our restraining!

Sleep, darling, sleep! Cold rain shall steep
Thy little turf-made dwelling;
Thou wilt not know, so far below,
When winds or storms are swelling;
And birds shall sing in the warm spring,
And flowers bloom about thee;
Thou wilt not heed them, but oh,
The loneliness without thee!

Father, we will be comforted!
Thou wast the gracious Giver;
We yield her up—not dead, not dead—
To dwell with thee forever!
Take thou our child! ours for a day,
Thine while the ages blossom!
This little shining head we lay
In the Redeemer's bosom!

Hymns for Mothers and Children.

PAUL AND THE STADIUM.

Wherever Paul was residing, at Corinth, at Athens, and in all places where a Greek population was predominant, (and this was, in fact, over the whole of the Levant,) the athletic games of the Greeks came before his notice, as a subject which caused the most engrossing and universal interest. The Gymnasium, or place of training, and the Stadium, or ground for running, were among the most conspicuous and most frequented spots in the architecture and embellishment of the cities. Of many of them the remains can still be traced. Wrestling, boxing, and especially foot-races, with all the preliminary training, with the assembled and applauding multitudes while the contest was going on, with the formality of the heralds and the strict observance of the rules, with the umpires and prizes and eager congratulations at the close, with the poems which perpetuated great victories like heir-looms through successive generations—these things were almost a religion among the Greeks, and caused an enthusiasm which we ourselves can hardly understand, though it does happen that in our day athletic sports are a fancy and a fashion, and really in some cases, it would seem, almost a religion.

I said, especially the foot-race. This was pre-eminently the struggle which caused the most eager interest in that age and in those countries. And this is pre-eminently the image which seems to come obviously to the apostle, when he employs comparisons of this kind. We find instances in the Book of Acts. Thus when he is preaching one of his great missionary sermons at Antioch in Pisidia, and has occasion to mention John the Baptist, he speaks of him as "fulfilling his course," which literally means "running the race he had to run;" and this lively expression is evidently a fitting representation of that career, which did not last very long, but was very energetic while it lasted. So in addressing the elders at Miletus, and speaking of himself, and alluding with deep feeling to the "bonds and afflictions" which awaited him, he says: "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, that I may finish my course with joy." He knows that his course requires a vigorous effort; he feels that there are many things to dissuade him from it and to cause him to turn aside; but he braces himself up, like a runner, for the struggle, throws himself into it with all his force and spirit, and thinks of the joy and exultation which awaits him at the close.

Similar, and very frequently, is his language in the Epistles. It is well worth our while to observe how generally and variously this figure is distributed through them. Some phrases of this kind must appear strange to those who do not consider the context of circumstances by which the apostle was surrounded. Thus, to take as our guide the same English word which we have observed in the Acts, "Pray for us," he says to the Thessalonians, "that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified." Here the gospel itself is the runner, for which he desires a race that shall be vigorous, rapid, free from obstacles, and triumphant at the end. Again, to turn to most pathetic language having reference to himself, he writes to Timothy: "I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day." We must be careful here to give the right meaning to the word "fight." This term has nothing to do with war. It denotes an athletic contest. And the particular kind of athletic contest, which he specifies in his customary way, is the foot-race. But now he is writing near the close of life. The race is nearly run, the struggle is all but over; he is weary, as it were, and panting with the effort; but he is successful; the crown is in sight, and the Judge, the "rightoous" Judge, who cannot make a mistake, is there, ready to place that bright wreath upon his head.

And as with the word "course," so with the verb that corresponds with it. "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth," says St. Paul in an argument, which turns all our confidence toward him who "hath compassion" and "showeth mercy." His anxiety regarding the success of his own apostolic work is expressed by the same image in two very different epistles, written at widely separated points of time. He tells the Galatians that at an early period he negotiated very carefully at Jerusalem, "lest by any means he should run or had run in vain;" and writing long afterward from Rome to the Philippians, he expresses his desire that they may be consistent, in order that he himself "may rejoice in the day of Christ, that he has not run in vain." And the metaphor which he applies to the progress of the gospel committed to him, he applies also to the practical consistency and progress of those who had learnt the truth from him. "Ye did run well," he says to some who had grievously failed and fallen; "who hath hindered you, that ye should not obey the truth?" "Ye were running the Christian race successfully and well; who put these obstacles in your way, which have thrown you down, and brought you to shame?" The whole language, as read in the original Greek, is far more easily recognized as applicable to the foot-race than can possibly be perceived in the English version. Dean Howson's "Metaphors of St. Paul," published by the American Tract Society.

BOOKS WRITTEN IN PRISON.

The two most celebrated men who come into the list of writers of books in prison in the first half of the seventeenth century are Raleigh and Cervantes. The gallant Sir Walter, after serving when young as a gentleman volunteer, went with Sir Humphroy Gilbert to America, returned and was knighted, raised a volunteer squadron against the Spanish Armada, and became a courtier. Something he did or said gave offense at court, and he resided abroad for some years. When Elizabeth died, and James the First succeeded to the throne, Raleigh returned to England; but he was arrested, and found guilty of treason by a packed jury. Twelve years of his life were passed continuously in prison; and here he wrote his "History of the World," a marvelous work to execute under such circumstances. In order really to begin at the beginning, he begins with the creation, and gravely discusses the opinions expressed by the learned as to whether paradise was as high up as the moon, or only as high as mid-air, or under the equinoctial line. But still the "History of the World" is a noble fragment, which could only have been written by one who had read much and traveled much. Hapless Raleigh! King James hated him with all the hatred which a narrow mind feels toward an intellectual superior, and sent him to the scaffold. The other great man whose name we have coupled with Raleigh was the Spanish novelist Cervantes, the author of the world-renowned "Don Quixote." He was first a student, then chamberlain to a cardinal, and then a soldier. He was thrice wounded at the battle of Lepanto, was taken prisoner by the corsairs, kept five years in captivity, and ransomed by his friends. Returning to Spain, he married, entered upon civil employments, traversed wide regions of his native country, and watched well the habits and peculiarities of his countrymen. Monetary embarrassments, rather than political or religious discord, threw him more than once into prison, but his imprisonment was a great thing for the world, since it was occupied by the planning and commencement of "Don Quixote."

Open the portals wide; let us admit the greatest prison writer of the second half of the seventeenth century, John Bunyan, tinker, preacher and author of a religious allegory, which is said to have been translated into a greater number of languages than any other book in the world, with two exceptions, the Bible and the "Imitation of Christ." He was thrown into Bedford jail because he would not renounce dissent, and there he supported himself for twelve years by making tagged boot laces. He wrote many controversial tracts, preached to his fellow-prisoners, and read to them the Bible and "Fox's Book of Martyrs." It was a fine answer that he gave to the clerk of the peace, who advised him to gain his liberty by recanting: "Sir, the law hath provided two ways of obeying; the one, to do that which I in my conscience believe I am bound to do actively; and when I cannot by activity, then I am willing to lie down and suffer whatever they shall do unto me." And it showed a vein of humor in his character when he replied to a Quaker who had come to visit him, and who declared that the Lord had ordered him to search for the Bunyan in half the prisons in England: "If the Lord had sent you, you need not have taken so much trouble to find me out; for the Lord knows I have been a prisoner in Bedford jail for the last twelve years." He wrote the first part of the "Pilgrim's Progress" while in prison; a fact that ought to endear his imprisonment to us. All the Year Round.

CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

"What women these Christians have!" exclaimed the heathen rhetorician Libanius, on learning about Anthusia, the mother of John Chrysostom, the famous "golden-mouthed" preacher of the gospel at Constantinople, in the fourth century. Anthusia, at the early age of twenty, lost her husband, and thenceforward devoted herself wholly to the education of her son, refusing all offers of further marriage. Her intelligence and piety molded the boy's character, and shaped the destiny of the man, who in his subsequent position of eminence never forgot what he owed to maternal influence. Hence it would be no overstrained assertion to say that we owe those rich homilies of Chrysostom, of which interpreters of Scripture still make great use, to the mind and heart of Anthusia. Nor was the mother of Chrysostom alone in this Christian fidelity and wisdom. The student of church history will at once call to mind the mother of Theodoret, who used to take him in early childhood to receive the blessing and instruction of holy monks; and who thus secured impressions which were never effaced, and which had their part in making him, in certain respects, one of the best students and expositors of Scripture of his time. The pious Nonna will also come to mind, who, by prayer and holy example, won her husband from heresy. Their first-born son she carried to the church, soon after his birth, with the gospels placed in his hands, and there solemnly dedicated him to God. That son of consecration was not allowed to forget the fact. His mother constantly reminded him of it, and so fortified her boy, by her prayers and instructions, that when he went as a youth to Athens, and was exposed to all the temptations of seductive paganism in that metropolis, he was true to Christ. He is known in history as the distinguished church teacher, Gregory of Nazianzum; and he was wont to speak of his mother as like Hannah in the Old Testament, who offered her Samuel to the Lord. And surely no one will fail to think of Monica, the mother of Augustine, whose faith and petitions had such illustrious answer and reward in the final character and work of that greatest of the Christian fathers—eminent alike for his personal piety, and for his lasting influence, through his writings, on the church of subsequent ages.

The strength of the church has always largely been in its women—from the time when they lovingly ministered to the Savior, in life and at death, met with the apostles for prayer, prior to the Pentecostal baptism, and were the comforters and helpers of Paul in his missionary labors, down to the present day. They have so lived and worshiped, have so exemplified the virtues of the wife and mother, have so illustrated the beauty of holiness, have so trained for the church its noblest men, that they have compelled the admiration of the worldling and the skeptic. Many a man has found that the last link which still bound his unbelieving mind to some intellectual faith in Christianity was the remembrance of his mother's piety, or the daily vision of the purity of his wife. The eulogy of Libanius, pronounced upon the Christian women of the primitive churches, has lost none of its meaning in this nineteenth century. In chasteness of morals, general intelligence, social culture, self-denying benevolence, and genuine and unaffected piety, our Christian women are the glory of the age; and it is at once the honor and the triumph of the missionary work, that it is rapidly raising the converted women of heathen lands to a similar level.—Advance.

It is almost absurd to see how men suppose they have got rid of their own responsibility by throwing it upon others, or by adopting a negative instead of a positive course—just as if you avoided responsibility, or did not in some measure decide, merely because you decided to do nothing yourself.—Arthur Helps.

Queer.—Two deacons once disputing about the proposed new grave-yard, one remarked:

"I'll never be buried in that ground as long as I live."

"What an obstinate man!" said the other. "If my life is spared I will."

What does it matter whether God is pleased to act by one man or by ten thousand? All the power, all the wisdom, all the grace, is in him.

"Footprints on the sands of time," The fires of the last day will melt and congeal those sands, and our footprints will be seen forever.

Discoveries at Jerusalem and Ephesus.

The London Times has a letter from Captain Wilson, in which he communicates information of an important discovery made in the explorations at Jerusalem. He writes: "It will be remembered that Captain Warren explored a remarkable rock-hewn passage leading southward toward the temple area from the subway at the Convent of the Sisters of Sion. Mr. Schick has found a continuation of this passage, or rather aqueduct, as it is now proved to be, toward the north. In my notes to the Ordnance Survey of Jerusalem I pointed out the possible existence of an aqueduct in this position, and should future researches prove this view to be correct, we may possibly identify the aqueduct with that made by Hezekiah when 'he stopped the upper watercourse (accurately, source of the waters) of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David' (Second Chron. xxxii, 30.) It may also be the 'conduit of the Upper Pool,' mentioned in Isaiah and the Second Book of Kings. The existence of the aqueduct lately discovered is a strong argument in favor of the belief that the city of David occupied a portion of Mount Moriah, and it may possibly enable us to identify the Pool, or some source near it, as the Upper Gihon, and Silvaur as Gihon in the Valley."

Simultaneously a letter from Smyrna speaks of remarkable discoveries that have been made on the site of the Temple of Diana, at Ephesus. A large area of the temple has been cleared, and various architectural marbles have been found. The diameter of the columns of the temple being six feet; the scale of the architecture is, of course, colossal. Says the writer: "I gazed with a peculiar interest on these relics of those famous columns on which St. Paul must have gazed when he preached against them, but which local fanaticism, aided by local vested interests, preserved in all their splendor for three centuries after his coming. The architecture of the temple is Ionic."—New York Observer.

The Earth Cure for Ulcers.—"I dried and pulverized some clay," says a writer in the Country Gentleman, "and recommended it as a valuable remedy to a neighbor woman who had for ten years had a very bad ulcer on her ankle. She had paid our best physicians over $50 for treatment, without any relief. She applied the dried clay almost constantly for about six months, and a perfect cure has resulted. The first effect of the preparation was to remove inflammation and relieve pain, and now she says there is no scar remaining, and her limb, which was stiff and lame, is as elastic as when she was a girl. The woman is a very large, fleshy person, about forty years of age. I considered the test a very severe one, and the result very satisfactory. About a gallon of pulverized clay was used."

An Intelligent Hearer.—A country clergyman chose for his text on one occasion a passage of Scripture which had been variously interpreted. In concluding his sermon he said: "These are the conclusions I have reached after the most diligent study, but I must inform you that the commentators disagree with me." A farmer, a great admirer of the parson's eloquence, had paid marked attention to the discourse. He went home, filled a large bag with choice kidney potatoes, and packed them off to the parson's house, with the following note:

"Reverend and Dear Sir: You told me this mornin as how common taturs didn't agree with you. I hope as how choice kidney does."

Worldly Conformity.—Rev. Dr. James W. Alexander wrote to a friend: "As I grow older as a parent, my views are changing fast as to the degree of conformity to the world which we should allow to our children. I am horror-struck to count upon the profligate children of pious parents, and even ministers. The door at which those influences enter, which countervail parental instruction and example, I am persuaded, is yielding to the ways of good society. By dress, books and amusements an atmosphere is formed which is not that of Christianity. More than ever do I feel that our families must stand in a kind but determined opposition to the fashions of the day."

If I were suddenly asked to give a proof of the goodness of God to us, I think I should say that it is most manifested in the exquisite difference he has made between the souls of women and men, so as to create the possibility of the most charming companionship that the mind of man can imagine.—Arthur Helps.

A friend should be one in whose understanding and virtue we can equally confide, and whose opinion we can value at once for its justness and sincerity.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The British and American Congregational church, St. Petersburg, Russia, celebrated their annual festival, New Year's night, with supper, song and speeches. The circulation of the Bible among the French and German troops, during the war, by the agents of the British and Foreign Society, amounted to nearly half a million copies, or portions of Scripture. The Emperor of Germany lately addressed a letter of thanks to the society for its noble work. The same society has in France, Italy and Germany about one hundred colporteurs.

The recent discussion at Rome between Gavazzi and two other Italian Protestant ministers on the one side, and three Roman ecclesiastics on the other, was permitted if not ordered by the Pope; and it was understood in Rome that this was the initiation of a new policy, and that such discussions were to be allowed and perhaps encouraged by the papacy. But it appears that such a purpose, if it was entertained, has been abandoned; for the Pope has ordered Cardinal Patrizi to address a letter to the College of Theologians forbidding hereafter any of its members, or any other member of the Church of Rome, publicly to confute Protestant preachers." This looks as though the result of the first experiment were not satisfactory.

The free preaching of the gospel in Mexico has produced such remarkable effects, not only in the city, but in many parts of the country, that Ultramontane fanaticism is thoroughly aroused. A secret society, under the name of Sociedad Catholica, has been formed for the purpose of opposing and suppressing, as far as possible, evangelical teaching. In some places it has succeeded in dispersing Protestant congregations, for a time, by violence and riots; but in almost every case the state authorities have reinstated the Protestants in their civil and religious rights. Occasionally the rebels made their rallying cry "Death to the Protestants," as they did at Tlalmanalco, where they were successful in routing the government troops. Every effort is made by the Romanists, by means of "missions" or presbyters, going about exhorting the people to confess, to counteract the circulation of the Bible, to destroy the influence of the "Church of Jesus," and by intimidating the people, threatening excommunication for reading Protestant books, commanding them to burn all they find, to arrest the progress of the Protestant movement. But the work goes steadily forward. Congregations are springing up in various parts of the country—now, at least sixty in number, varying in membership from ten to five hundred. On the last Sunday of the past year the Lord's Supper was publicly administered in San Jose de Gracia, formerly a Roman Catholic church, by Rev. Dr. Riley, assisted by four converted priests, to about four hundred communicants. The Chapel of Balvanera, adjoining the Church of San Francisco, is crowded with worshipers. A church has been planted at Guadalupe, the headquarters of the Mexican papists, who attempted to drive away the encroaching Protestants, but were restrained by the prefect of the city.—Independent.

Russia and Religious Liberty.—From the fourth annual report of the Evangelical Alliance for the United States, we take an account of the results of the deputation and memorial to the Emperor of Russia, in behalf of the suffering Protestants in the Baltic Provinces. "The Alliance has never before made such a bold, vigorous and united effort, and may congratulate itself on the result. The mission has excited unusual interest. The subject of religious liberty, as distinct from more toleration, was brought prominently not only before the Russian Emperor and his prime minister, but before the tribunal of public opinion, and was earnestly discussed by the leading papers in England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia and other countries. An impression has been made which cannot be effaced, and seed sown which must in due time bear fruit. The harsh measures against the Lutherans in the Baltic Provinces, who wish to return to the church of their fathers, have recently been discontinued, and there is reasonable ground to hope that the penal laws of the Russian empire, which impede the full enjoyment of religious liberty, will before long be repealed." This statement is confirmed by the Evangelic Christendom for January, 1872, in the following words: "The council have learnt that already the oppressive measures of which Protestants complained have been stopped; orders have been given that Lutherans, who, from whatever cause, had become members of the Greek Church, shall now be allowed to return to the church to which they had formerly belonged; and Lutheran consistories, previously constrained by the Russian authorities to exercise discipline upon Protestant pastors who administered the Lord's Supper to returned converts, or who baptized the children of mixed marriages, have announced their intention not to carry out in future such orders. This courageous declaration has been allowed by the Russian government to pass without notice or reply."

Four denominations of Protestants have already established churches in Rome—the Waldensian, the Free Italian Church, the Baptists and the Methodists. The second and third have two stations in the city; the last is the most recent, and has resulted from the labors of Signor Sciarelli. After several months of preaching and special instruction, seven men and four women were found to have given satisfactory evidence by profession and life of true conversion; and, after public examination on the doctrines of evangelical religion and avowal of their faith, they were constituted the first members of this church, and, in company with pastors and members from other churches, began its ordinances with the celebration of the Lord's Supper, singing an Italian rendering of "Rock of Ages," (O de' secoli alla roccia,) for the first time in Rome. The number of members in these churches is not yet great; but unity prevails among them all, and brotherly co-operation forms a most happy feature of the work. For the sake of greater power in the midst of hostile forces, all the churches, ministers and people, meet together weekly for prayer and encouragement. An advertisement from the Capitale will indicate how boldly and thoroughly the doctrines of the gospel are proclaimed in the Eternal City: "Evangelical Conference.—On Wednesday, the twenty-ninth of November, at seven o'clock, in the usual locality, 16 Vicolo Soderini, Signor Ribetti, evangelical minister, will give a public conference on the great question so much discussed in the fifteenth century among the Reformers—Luther, Calvin, etc.—and the papistical doctors: Is man justified by faith alone? The replies which have been made to this question by St. Paul, St. James, and the Fathers of the Church will be examined. On Tuesday and Friday, at the same hour, there will be other conferences. Sunday morning worship at eleven o'clock." Two years ago such a placard would have occasioned a greater sensation than Luther's famous challenge to Tetzel. Yet this short time since the rule of Pio Nono is longer than centuries in the total change and perfect liberty of the present day.

Ecclesiastically the Russian empire is divided into twenty-four episcopal districts called Eparchies. Five of these Eparchies, those of St. Petersburg, Moscow, Kiev, Vilna and Siberia, are presided over by ecclesiastical rulers of the highest rank, called metropolitans. Over all the others are archbishops or bishops. The clergy are divided into three classes. The first is the black, or regular clergy, to which belongs all the bishops and higher dignitaries, and most of the directors and teachers in religious seminaries. This class consists wholly of monks. The second class is the white, or secular clergy, which includes all village priests, and the clergy of the town churches, who are in direct communication with the laity. This is a privileged, hereditary class, but retirement from it is possible. The completion of a course of study in an ecclesiastical seminary, and marriage with a virgin, are essential to investure with this priesthood. If a priest's wife dies she must become a monk or resign his position as a clergyman, second marriage being forbidden him. The third clerical order, likewise hereditary, comprises the sexistans, clerks, singers and deacons, and consists for the most part of students of theology who have not been able to pass examination. From the census of the Holy Synod it appears that there are 35,000 Established Greek orthodox churches, of which 31,000 are parochial and 2,000 dependent. The clergy number 37,718, besides 11,227 deans and 65,952 members of the third clerical order. The government contributes for church repairs and salaries of the secular clergy 5,163,363 silver roubles a year, or nearly four million dollars. The salaries of the village priests are wretchedly small, the highest being not over $250, while many receive not more than $75. Emoluments for religious ministrations add somewhat to the meager incomes of city priests, but very little to those of the smaller places and in the country. The latter, however, are always furnished a small portion of land, by the cultivation of which they manage to supply their necessities. A portion of the public papers are now joining with the clergy to secure for the village priests such an increase of salary as may enable them to keep up more efficiently the dignity of the establishment.

REDUCTION.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate will be furnished to subscribers hereafter at the following rates:

For One Year	$2 00
For Six Months	1 25
For Three Months	75

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

to all ministers of the gospel, traveling or local, and widows of deceased traveling preachers.

FREE ONE YEAR

to any person forwarding to us four new yearly subscribers with EIGHT DOLLARS.

ONE THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS PER MONTH.

This is not too much to expect. There has been a gradual increase of circulation for some months. Our book-keeper informs us that for several weeks past the number of new subscribers has been at the rate of about one hundred per week. But a small number, comparatively, of the circuits and stations are represented in the lists which are forwarded, showing that a general and united effort can far more than double the number. Give us three thousand new subscribers by the first of July, and this will justify the enlargement of the paper and the furnishing of an entirely new dress. Our present size is the largest that we can print on the press we now have. We must buy a new and larger press.

We must avoid debt; and judging from the unusual promptness with which old subscribers are renewing, and the constant assurances of appreciation from correspondents, we are convinced that the ADVOCATE has never, since the war, had as encouraging prospects as at present, and we are confident that a little effort will secure us the means of furnishing a paper which will equal our most sanguine expectations, without the fear of embarrassment. "All together, brethren!"

GRUMBLING.

No matter whether it is the fault of the mails or the clerks that your paper fails to come, scold the publisher—he likes it. He dislikes nothing more than the insipid, care-nothing style of dealing with the ADVOCATE. He wishes every subscriber to promptly notify him of any failure to reach them, and if they can suggest any remedy, do so. It shows that you appreciate the paper, and it is decidedly complimentary for you to feel annoyed when it fails to reach you. A subscriber, writing from Kenner, Louisiana, says: "When I have no church to go to, and no ADVOCATE to read, it makes the Sabbath a long and lonely one to me." We find in such expressions as these our greatest encouragement.

REBUILDING.—Nashville is doing nobly for the restoration of the Publishing House. Let all sections do but half as well and the work will be done at once. Dr. Redford says in the last Nashville Christian Advocate:

The citizens of Nashville, to this date, have subscribed $32,037.67 toward the rebuilding of the Publishing House. This, with the $17,000 contributed in 1854, makes $49,037.67 contributed to this institution. We think they will easily raise enough to make their entire contribution $50,000, as several gentlemen who intend to aid us have not yet subscribed. It will only require $962.33 additional.

THE FIRST DISPATCH.

The recent death of Prof. Morse, the inventor of the telegraph, takes us back to the time when there were few who believed in the practicability or possibility of such a telegraph system as we now possess. It is only twenty-eight years ago that Morse was urging the subject upon the attention of Congress, and asking for an appropriation to enable him to set up the wires between Washington and Baltimore. Stephenson and Fulton had not more difficulties and discouragements than those which he encountered. We can scarcely realize that the telegraph lines and the ocean cables have all been laid, in so short a time. The first telegram sent was selected by the inventor from the inspired volume. The words were fitly chosen, and adapted to the character and grandeur of the discovery.

"What hath God wrought?" was the first utterance of that mighty system of communication which now crosses oceans and continents, and covers the world with its meshes. We suppose the words were selected with the purpose of a devout recognition of God in the progress and discoveries of science, and perhaps also with reference to the service which the invention might render to civilization and religion. God is in the activities of mind and thought, and the discoveries of science are in the end to praise him. They are to minister not alone to the material interests of the world—to its commerce, and to its political and social welfare—but much more to the spiritual good of men, and to the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

That almost instantaneous communication should exist between the most distant parts of the earth can scarcely be credited in the midst of its daily realization. Time and distance are practically annihilated so far as the transmission of thought and intelligence are concerned. In some measure the nunc stans of the Creator is reached by us, and an ubiquity of intelligence is approached as the morning papers spread out before the eye the events which are taking place throughout the four quarters of the earth. Take in the whole of what science has achieved in all directions since that first dispatch was sent on the twenty-seventh of May, 1844, and we may reiterate its language with increased significance. Why not ascribe all to Him who is wonderful in counsel? The application of steam as the great motive power, the utilization of electricity, the railroad, the steamboat, the cotton-gin, the spinning-jenny, are wrought of God. Thus of all the revelations of science, in astronomy, chemistry and geology. The spectroscope with its novel and important results, the microscope with its almost preternatural exhibitions of matter and life, and the far-reaching telescope which dissolves and brushes away the illusions of early astronomy in its sweep of the stellar fields, are in some sense his work. God is working in all and through all to carry forward his great plans for the moral regeneration and elevation of man. He is in science as he is in history, though the eminent actors and instruments in both often refuse to see his hand in the affairs of the world.

There may be temporary manifestations apparently unfriendly to religion, and discoveries which seem to conflict with the Bible. Infidelity lifts its crest, and atheism rejoices in the approaching overthrow of the gospel; but in the long run all philosophy, all science and all the mechanical inventions are sure to furnish confirmations to the religion of Christ, and to help the cause which their votaries have hoped to overthrow. The worse than pagan temples which they are attempting to build will in due time be turned over to faith, and surrendered to Christian worship. It is grateful and refreshing to find such a reverent sense of God in science and invention as this first telegram exhibits, but it is even more satisfactory to feel that in all God is working, whether the men of science and progress recognize the fact, or banish all thoughts of a divine and creative Providence from the world. If science in its infancy rudely jostles and unsettles the faith of some, we may be sure that its maturity will furnish the most powerful arguments and demonstrations to human reason of the certainty and truth of Scripture. The Huxleys, Darwins, Spencers and Mills are building better than they either know or intend, and are gathering the materials which will be hereafter wielded for the truth of religion.

The moral evidences of Christianity are so powerful to the Christian consciousness that the converted man has no difficulty on this score. He is satisfied in himself of the truth of religion, and reposes tranquilly in the confident belief that all the discoveries of philosophy and science will ultimately turn out for the furtherance of the gospel. The grand convergence is toward the consummation of man's religious destiny. God has wrought amazingly, and is working still, as never before, in that aspect of his providence of which the electric telegraph is a striking manifestation. The evil appears with the good, but the good will at length triumph. Steam, electricity and chemistry are pressed into the service of hatred, falsehood, stock gambling, drunkenness and war. Selfishness, avarice and meanness may use them for base and diabolical ends. But, on the other hand, they make the communion and brotherhood of the human race possible, and assure the means for the speedy evangelization of the nations. Heaven's best gifts are perverted, and the works of God are desecrated for a time, but their mission for good will be accomplished.

This, we take it, is sound philosophy, and the Christian view of the discoveries and inventions of our times and of all times. That we have the mariner's compass, the steam engine and the telegraph, and that men are every day wresting from nature her richest and most valuable secrets, is not a mere chance. These activities are moving side by side with the spiritual needs of the soul, and are gathering toward the final result when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord. We may most devoutly inquire, "What hath God wrought" through the genius of such men as Fulton, Stephenson and Morse? In a sense scarcely intended by the ancient seer, it is true that "there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel." So much like enchantment, and so far outstripping the most accomplished arts of the diviner, the marvels of modern science and invention must be tributary to the kingdom of Christ. The prophets may even come to curse, but they will be compelled to bless, and the testimony shall be extorted from unwilling lips: "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!"

OUR REAL NEED.

One of our most devoted and successful ministers makes the following remarks in a letter, with which, with all my desire for a better educated ministry, I can but deeply sympathize. Consecration is knowledge, it is talents, it is power with all classes. Let us seek that.

"The church is mistaken about her need; this is not education, but consecration. A consecrated ministry will, by God's aid, get education enough. Give me a Conference full of Nelsons, and God will save more souls in a year than forty Conferences without this, and every member his diploma, literary and theological, in his pocket. Education, next to sin, is hard to sanctify. I won't plead for ignorance, but for consecration."

The writer speaks the truth when he says he "don't plead for ignorance." He is a noted instance of diligence and devotion to study. He continues, on going to his present work:

"I burnt up all my sermons and notes, and determined to throw myself anew on God and study, and I do not regret it. I enter on my work untrammeled, with freshness and fitness, under God's special guidance."

As might be supposed, a man of this character is in demand for various works. ALABAMA.

PRAYER-MEETING TALK.

BY REV. DR. WALKER, OF ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, GALVESTON.

"Having your loins girt about with truth." Truth constitutes the grand distinction of revealed religion, differencing it from all heathen and Mohammedan errors, and from all papal traditions and superstitions. Revealed religion comes to all, with all the evidence necessary to authenticate its claims to the faith and obedience of man. An ambassador, or legate, comes with documents bearing the seal of State, and the autograph of emperor, king or president, and shows that he speaks by authority—that the government that accredits him sustains his pretensions, and will make good his promises and stipulations. So the inspired teachers came; they gave evidence of divine authority in the miracles they wrought, and of the divine character in the justice and benevolence of the miracles. In the prophecies they uttered they gave evidence that their minds were divinely illuminated. In the nature of the things they taught and commanded they gave the fullest proof that they spake the inspirations of him who knows what is in man, and the needs of all. But they did more. They challenged men to make the experiment, and test the truth and practical value of their teachings. They declared that the consciousness of men would bear testimony to the truth and adaptation of the doctrines they proclaimed. Every man who really means to be a Christian soldier must be "girt about with truth;" it is the band of iron strong to bind the pales of the vessel—the fellies and spokes of the wheel firm to the hub. No man is truly strong unless strong in the truth; but inwardly assured he holds the truth, he is immovable in his convictions. But if he doubts, he is a "double-minded man, and unstable in all his ways." This want of thoroughly governed conviction is no doubt the cause of much of the unstableness and wavering that is the ruin of the individual and the grief of the church.

A Christian girded with the truth need never be ashamed. There is nothing in truth to cause a blush. Let the "gainsayer" say something truer, do something better, or find something more valuable; and if he cannot, let him blush at his folly in opposing that which he cannot improve.

The Christian girded with the truth need never be afraid. He wears an armor more invulnerable than triple steel. No shaft of wit, ridicule or falsehood can penetrate it. He abides in an impregnable fortress; "his defense shall be the munitions of rocks."

He that is girded with truth can never be hurt, can never be conquered. Error must at last fail, fly and perish; but truth shall camp upon the conquered field, and hold it against all attacks, and hold it forever.

Let me press upon you the exhortation: "Be girt about with truth." By thorough and fair investigation, be satisfied in your profoundest convictions that you hold to the "truth." By daily communion with God, have an inward assurance that your Redeemer lives. In your daily outward life show that you hold to the truth—that it is adapted to all the needs of your nature, and suited for all relations of life. So shall you "enter through the gates into the city," "where whosoever loveth and maketh a lie" shall never enter.—Galveston Christian Advocate.

What is Corrupting the Morals of our People.

The editor of the Southern Churchman gives members of his church some healthy hints in the following article, taken from a recent number of that paper. They need them, now that Lent is past. J. H.

As we were looking over exchange papers, last week, our eye glanced at an item in a secular paper published in Virginia; it is not worth while to be more particular as to locality. We read: "We have several good reasons for believing that private morals are becoming lax in some quarters hereabout lately." We do not take too much for granted in supposing the reference is to sins against purity; sins we may refer to, without going into details and giving offense. And we do this with less hesitation, because of a conversation which took place between a clergyman of our diocese and one of the most distinguished physicians in the State. This gentleman told our informant that he had been forced to notice in his medical practice of the past four years more crimes of this nature among young women, and that among the "better sort of people," than he had for the forty preceding years of his medical life! And he went on to give his opinion of the cause of it. He had no hesitation to attribute it to the round dances which had come in fashion among us since the war.

Many who before the war were at the bottom of the social ladder, have made fortunes. Not prepared either mentally or morally for the new position they have attained, they naturally desire to exhibit their wealth, and do so by the gaudiest dressings, jewelry, equipages, etc. They buy fine houses and give splendid entertainments; and it is well known they can always have people to eat their dinners and come to their balls. And such persons are now giving tone to society, as it is called. The man may be coarse, the wife vulgar; but the sons and daughters will grow up men and women of the world. Taught nothing useful, learning nothing wise, practicing nothing good, they live simply for this world. Having nothing to do, they would die of ennui, did they not seek excitement. The young men find it in gambling saloons, in brothels and restaurants. The young women in dressing, in flirting and in a ceaseless round of amusements; and owing to late hours, to exciting food and drink, helped on by immodest dressing, and by immodest dancing with the class of young men we have been describing—men ticketed by the apostle as those "having eyes full of adultery and that cannot cease from sin."—is it any wonder these silly females fall a prey to those who live but to indulge their lusts and vices?

"But our sons," you say, "are men of honor, and our daughters modest and sensible." We do not doubt it. But do we not know the power and fascination of fashion, especially with young ladies? If the "world of fashion" dresses immodestly, how long before your daughters will do the same? If the fashionable dances are such that you, a sensible Christian mother, cannot tolerate, how long before your daughters will make you believe you are old-fashioned and know nothing? "To be sure, the square dances were well enough in your day, but now the fashion is the round; and we cannot be such old fogies as not to do what Miss A. and Miss B. do. And moreover, do you mean to say that these young ladies are not proper companions for us?" The poor mother, with a sigh, yields to what she in her heart knows to be wrong, and very soon her daughter becomes as gay as the gayest, as bold as the boldest, and can face a regiment of men, with a countenance that never blushes, and with eyes that are never cast down save but to delude and mock the unsophisticated. All this is the tendency of things in this very State of Virginia—a downward tendency; a tendency to no other place than hell.

The Virginia secular paper from which we quoted the few lines about lax morals above, goes on to say: "Such indications ought to make the people more active and earnest to set high examples, and to discourage all vice and looseness by precept and influence, more vigorously than ever." But who are the "good people?" We have said "society," in the modern acceptation of the word, has changed or is fast changing with us in Virginia and the South. Now men have the money, and have what money brings, viz.: station, dress, houses, balls, etc. And these are now setting the fashion, and with it corrupting the morals of the people. Who, then, are the "good people?" Church members, of course. Why many of these people are church members. It is the fashion to be a church member. Who, then, are the "good people?" Who are those who are to "set high examples and to discourage all vice and looseness?" We cannot name them; we do not know them. But of one thing we are certain: we are going to have moral looseness degenerating into sins against purity so long as the drinking usages of society are kept up; so long as immodest dressing is thought becoming; so long as these round dances are considered decent. The time will come, must come, when no honorable man and no modest woman will permit such drinking and dressing and dancing.

FOLLOWING AFTER.

Our Northern brethren are following in the wake of the Southern Church in mending and improving their polity. Lay representation has already been virtually secured. District Conferences are likely to come next. They have them already in an informal way, and efforts will be made to have them adopted by the approaching General Conference. The Pittsburg Conference adopted the following resolution at its late session:

Resolved, That we request the General Conference to inquire into the propriety of introducing a section into the Discipline providing for the holding of semi-annual District Conferences, to be composed of the traveling and local preachers of the district, with one layman from each charge; the said Conference to be a court for the trial of local preachers; have authority to license men to preach, and recommend them for admission to the traveling connection; and to make arrangements for the best interests of the work in the district.

TIMELY WARNING.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate gives the following advice and warning. It is a word in season for this latitude.

Since the resignation of Rev. Mr. Curtis, of Baltimore, several ladies of his flock have gone to Rome, having been taken to mass, it is said, by the reverend gentleman himself. These women are all of Methodist families, having found the Episcopal Church a half-way station to the abject sacramentarianism and virgin-worship of the Church of Rome. Of course these victims know nothing of the principles of that church, nor of the utter falsehood of its historical pretensions. As Methodists they were taught nothing upon the subject; as Episcopalians they were slily indoctrinated with the radical dogmas and fatal sentimentality of Rome. It is strange that Protestant Churches do not think it worth while to fortify the minds of their people against the bold and baseless assumptions of popery. Our Sunday school children ought to have books prepared for their instruction in this most important subject, and our congregations ought to be made to comprehend how very serious it is. For fear of appearing uncharitable or of offending somebody, we permit our people to remain profoundly ignorant and indifferent concerning the great controversy, and allow the Catholics free course for their seductions. By their schools, and through the allurements of fashionable Episcopalianism, they creep into our families and "lead silly women astray," and they will continue to do so until we shall educate our people to the proper degree of resistance.

Mississippi Conference Minutes.

MR. EDITOR: There are some unfortunate errors in the pamphlet Minutes of the Mississippi Conference.

The one most mortifying to me is the entire omission of the name of the venerable John G. Jones. It should have occurred under the answer to the eighteenth question: Who are superannuated?

The name of Thomas Nixon, since entered upon his eternal reward, should also have appeared among the superannuates, instead of among the supernumeraries, as published.

The name of the supernumerary on the Thomastown circuit, Jackson district, should be James K. Hamblon, not James Y. Hamilton.

There may be other mistakes, but those I discovered in reading a copy of the Minutes I saw when from home, those forwarded me having not yet been received.

It must be annoying to a member of Conference to have his name printed wrong, or, worse still, entirely omitted; but I can assure them no one can have keener regrets on account of it than myself.

C. G. ANDREWS,
Sec'y Mississippi Conference.
JACKSON, LA., March 30, 1872.

THE Maryland Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church held its annual session at Washington City, March 13-19. The body was composed of about one hundred and sixty ministers and laymen. Rev. D. E. Reese, the president, in his report, represented the condition of the Conference to be healthy and prosperous. He was re-elected president for the ensuing year. The exhibit of the Western Maryland College shows value of property $33,000, $10,000 as having been recently added to its funds, and 131 students. Negotiations were authorized to be made with W. J. C. Dulany for the improvement of the publishing interests, on the plan of a joint stock company, with a capital of $10,000. The superannuated fund amounts to $5,101.09, and the collections for missions, $3,728.44. The Missionary Society adopted a resolution ordering legal proceedings to be instituted for the recovery of a church and parsonage at Cumberland, Maryland, which, it is alleged, are unlawfully held by agents of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, an appeal to that Conference for a peaceable settlement having been unavailing. The Committee on Statistics reported 12,186 members, 1,124 probationers; churches, 185; parsonages, 37; Sabbath schools, 172; teachers, 1,926; scholars, 11,932; volumes in the libraries, 20,111; value of church property, $744,400. The increase in membership is over one thousand.

WE DEEPLY REGRET TO LEARN that our much-esteemed friend and brother, Carey W. Butt, Esq., of Mobile, has recently met with a sore bereavement. His daughter Fannie, a sweet and beautiful girl of sixteen, died on the twenty-seventh of March. Her obituary will appear next week. We tender our sincere sympathies to the afflicted father and other kindred.

Married.

March 14, 1872, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Murchison, by Rev. Ira B. Robertson, Dr. LEA SHELTON to Miss REBECCA MURCHISON, all of Hinds county, Mississippi.

Obituaries.

MR. FRANCIS BARNETT LEE was born April 7, 1823, and died December 2, 1871, in the parish of Red River, Louisiana, aged forty-eight years, seven months and twenty-five days.

He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in June, 1864. Bro. Lee was a kind neighbor, a good husband, an affectionate father, and lived a consistent life after his conversion until death. The church has sustained a loss, together with the family and friends; but no doubt their loss is his eternal gain. May the grace of God sustain his disconsolate widow and orphan children.

"Thou art gone to the grave, but we will not deplore thee,
Whose God was thy ransom, thy guardian and guide;
He gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore thee;
And death has no sting, for the Savior has died."

W. D. STAYTON.

MRS. CATHERINE C. KENNARD, wife of William K. Kennard, died in Yazoo City, Mississippi, February 26, 1872.

Mrs. Kennard had been for years an invalid in New Orleans, and had but a short time before her death become a resident of Yazoo City. Under the treatment of skillful physicians she at times indulged hopes of permanent improvement, if not a restoration to health; but these anticipations were never realized. For several weeks she gradually declined, and finally passed so gently through the portals of death that her departure was a surprise to her husband, though he had been expecting it for many months. For several years previous to her death she had been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She was a fond mother, (though sorely bereaved in the loss of four children,) a dutiful and affectionate wife, a patient sufferer and an obedient Christian. Her end was peaceful, as her life had been faithful. She leaves to comfort her afflicted husband the memory of her beautiful life and an interesting infant a few months old. May the mercies of the great Sympathizer abide with him and it. H.

REV. GEORGE W. CRYMES, M. D., died suddenly, at his residence in Enon, Alabama, on the night of February 29, 1872, aged sixty-three years and three days. He had been out most of the day on business, and returned home in the afternoon in usual health. After supper he conversed awhile with the family, and conducted family worship with more than usual fervor. He then commended himself to God in private devotion, as usual, and retired to bed. In a short time he was found to be dying, and after a few minutes passed quietly into that sleep which knows no earthly waking.

Bro. Crymes joined the Methodist Church in 1836, and afterward filled successively the offices of class-leader, exhorter and local preacher, having been ordained deacon by Bishop Andrew, and elder by Bishop Wightman.

He was a man of ardent temperament, warm in his friendships, and devoted to his family. His real character was best known and appreciated by those who were most intimate with him. He was systematic in his family religion, earnest in his private devotions, and constant in his devotion to the interests of the church.

W. K. NORTON.

JAMES PETER JENKINS, son of Nathaniel Jenkins, died in New Orleans, March 31, 1872, in the seventeenth year of his age.

Jimmy Jenkins he was familiarly called, for everybody that knew him could only speak of or to him affectionately. He had not only an old head, but also an old face on young shoulders—that is, his expression of countenance was singularly grave, thoughtful, earnest. Perhaps the disease, which took years to bring him low, had something to do with the wrinkles that gave to his brow the cast of age; but there were abundant indications of unusual mental activity that corresponded with his deep, inquiring look. His growth physically was stunted; intellectually, it was beyond his years; spiritually, it was adult, mature. His parents have recollections only of his obedience, his brothers and sisters of his affection, his friends of amiability and gentleness, his teachers of studiousness, and his pastor of a hope which designated him for the ministry; but God designated him for an angel, and prevailed.

He was an experimental Christian—he knew the Lord. Therefore, as a sufferer, he was patient; dying, he was triumphant. He said to me: "Say good by to the Sunday school for me, and tell them to meet me in heaven." His Sunday school teacher closed his eyes at about one o'clock on Easter Sunday morning. Not far from the very hour at which the Savior arose from the dead, on the first Easter, the young disciple rose to heaven, "the land of the living."

W. V. TUDOR.

——, at the residence of her husband, in Claiborne parish, Louisiana, January 25, 1872, MARY ANGELINE LOWERY, in the forty-first year of her age. She was the daughter of William O. and Sarah Bullock, and born in Pike county, Mississippi. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at eight years of age. Her parents moved to Claiborne parish, Louisiana, when she was quite young. She was married to George W. Lowery in 1850, with whom she lived in great harmony till her death. She was a faithful and consistent Christian; and though of a modest temperament, yet she, by her daily walk, was a "shining light" to the world, and constantly set an example worthy of imitation by all with whom she associated. The writer knew her for the last twenty years of her life, and he can truly say that hers was a "life well spent," and a triumphant death, giving to her surviving friends a striking proof of the power of faith and the sustaining "grace of God" in the trying hour of death. She died in the full prospect of a blessed immortality. In her death society has lost one of its brightest ornaments, the church one of its most faithful members, her associates a valued friend, her husband a fond and devoted companion, and her children a tender and affectionate mother. We sorrow not as those who look for happiness in this world alone, and have no hope of a bright future; but, thank God, we can, by an eye of faith, look beyond the trying scenes of time to that home prepared for the finally faithful, where the sorrows of earth can never invade, and parting is unknown. May God direct and sustain her surviving friends, and finally grant them a happy reunion with her in heaven. J. D. H.

ROBERT VANCE died at his residence, near Meridian, Mississippi, February 11, 1872, aged fifty-six years. His wife, Elizabeth Vance, died at the same place May 16, 1871. Both were born and brought up in Derry county, Ireland. There, also, they were married. They came to the United States A. D. 1848, and located the following year in the vicinity of Meridian, where they shared cheerfully and heroically the sacrifices and hardships of a new and wild country many years, and afterward enjoyed the fruits of their frugal living and honest toil, in the midst of a respectable and happy family, and surrounded by appreciative neighbors and friends, who loved them and cherish fondly the memory of their social virtues, friendship and generous hospitality.

Bro. Vance, though brought up by Presbyterian parents, was a Methodist in the old country. Early after their arrival in America he and his wife became members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which they were acceptable and useful members until they joined the church above.

Sister Vance shouted the praise of God on the bed of death; assuring her friends that all was well. Bro. Vance was resigned and trustful in his last sickness, and, like his loved companion, who had preceded him only a few months, left a good dying testimony.

Three children mourn the death of a good father and mother. They are all members of the church their parents loved. May parents and children meet in heaven.

David Vance, brother of Robert, died in January last. Some twenty-five years ago the family of brothers and sisters—nine in number—crossed the Atlantic and settled in this country. Six of the nine have gone on across the stream,

"The narrow stream of death."

Man never continueth in one stay. "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

JOHN A. ELLIS.

WILLIAM H. FOSTER, a native of South Carolina, was born September 12, 1803, and died in Greene county, Alabama, March 16, 1872.

At the early age of twelve years he was deprived by death of his mother. In early manhood he was converted, and consecrated the remnant of his days to the service of God. His character was a decidedly positive one; hence his positions were always well-defined. This was evinced in his religious life and church preferences. These were pronounced and emphatic. He was a decided Christian and a decided Methodist. He was devoted to the church of his choice, and a warm friend of Sabbath schools. For many years he filled the offices of class-leader and steward in the church. The itinerant always found a hearty welcome at his house. In 1847 his good wife was taken to the home of the good, leaving a large family of children to his care. By the assistance of his oldest daughter, a model woman, now in heaven, he succeeded in bringing all these up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and of seeing all but two, who died in infancy, members of the church of his choice, and all but three preceded him to the "glory land." For several years previous to his death he was deprived of regular attendance at the house of God, but he always hailed with joy the monthly visits of his pastor. His life of nearly a half century, spent in the service of God, ended, as all such do, in everlasting life. There was no extra preparation necessary to purify the soul and fit it for heaven. This had all been attended to, and, like Jacob, he had but to gather up his feet and die, and go to the fathers. Like the gently-rolling river losing itself in the bosom of the ocean, so it was difficult to discover just where the life of righteousness was merged into everlasting life. Bro. Foster had accomplished the great mission of life—he had led all his children to Christ; and the prospect is that this large family will be unbroken in heaven. God grant this may be so.

MISS MARY MCREA was born in Montgomery county, North Carolina, and died in Marengo county, Alabama, January 13, 1872, in her fifty-sixth year.

The subject of this notice has been an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church from her sixteenth year, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church South since its organization, embracing a period of about forty years. She was not a nominal member, but one who enjoyed the life and power of religion. We know but little of her personal history or experience, but are warranted in saying that to her life was not all sunshine, for clouds and darkness were often round about him, obscuring the righteousness and judgment of his throne. But, notwithstanding all this darkness and mystery and suffering, she said in deeds, if not in words:

"Courage, my soul! on God rely;
Deliverance soon will come;
A thousand ways has Providence
To bring believers home."

Her life was one of more or less suffering, and in her suffering she exhibited patience as well as courage. Her last sickness was protracted and painful, but she was sustained by the religion of Christ. She was not afraid to die, but was anxious to depart and be with Christ. She sent for her pastor, but was in too much pain to speak with him, as she desired; however, while he prayed especially for her she responded intelligently to every petition, and at the close of the prayer with an earnest, hearty amen. And when her pastor repeated that beautiful stanza,

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there,"

she replied: "Yes, yes." "Oh! death, where is thy sting? Oh! grave, where is thy victory?" She talked of death as her departure to a better country, and calmly gave directions about her burial, and quietly fell asleep in Jesus.

Weep not, dear friends; but rather rejoice that another soul has triumphed in death and gone to heaven. C. W. C.

DIED, at his residence in Sunflower county, Mississippi, January 28, 1872, HENRY STOWERS MARSHALL, aged fifty-seven years and sixteen days.

Bro. Marshall was born in Louisiana, near Opelousas, January 12, 1815. In early life his parents moved to Mississippi, and settled near the present site of Greenville; thence to Sunflower county, where he terminated a long and useful life.

He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1854 or 1855, under the ministry of the Rev. James G. Carlisle, still a veteran of the North Mississippi Conference. Bro. Marshall's conversion was entire. He at once espoused the church and all her institutions. His house became the preacher's home, his means the servant of the church. For nearly twenty years he was one of the moving spirits of Sunflower (now Indian Bayou) circuit. He served the church long and faithfully, both as class-leader and steward. In these offices we shall miss very much his discreet and fatherly counsel. He was a peer among the aged, a monitor for the young. As a husband and father he was kind and affectionate, as a Christian pious and consistent, a congenial and benevolent neighbor, a quiet and obedient citizen. The writer called to see him in his last illness, and found his faith firm and unshaken in the midst of extreme and protracted bodily suffering. He anticipated much joy in his Father's house above. While we were engaged in prayer a heavenly messenger seemed to come down to strengthen him for the trying conflict. His communion was manifestly sweet. He lingered for several days longer, when the voice from above said: "It is enough; come up higher." After exhorting his weeping family and friends to meet him in heaven, he took an affectionate leave of them, committing his spirit to the Lord Jesus Christ.

He leaves behind five or six children and a devoted wife to mourn their loss. To the bereaved we tender our greatest sympathy, that "we should not weep as those who have no hope." God grant that his living example and dying admonitions may lead them all to his eternal home.

J. D. MURFF, Pastor.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Quarterly Conference of Indian Bayou circuit, North Mississippi Conference, February 25, 1872:

WHEREAS, It has pleased almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove from this body, by death, our beloved brethren, Groves H. Dantzler and Berry S. Marshall; therefore,

Resolved, That while we deplore the loss of our much-esteemed brethren and worthy co-laborers in our Master's cause, we bow with humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father, in full assurance that our loss is their eternal gain.

Resolved, That this Quarterly Conference deeply sympathize with their bereaved families, and tender them our condolence, commending them to the Lord Jesus Christ for succor and comfort.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered on the minutes of this Quarterly Conference and published in the Western Methodist and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and a copy of each be furnished the families of the deceased by the pastor.

AGENTS WANTED.—We call attention to the card of Goodspeed's Empire Book, Map and Picture House, 41 Natchez street, New Orleans. He is an extensive publisher of Bibles, books, maps, etc.

UNDERTAKER.—In another column will be found the card of Mr. G. Casanave, undertaker, located at 39 Marais and 88 Bourbon street, near St. Louis, who is prepared to fill orders in his line with promptness and dispatch.

SHEEP SKINS, HIDES, FURS, WOOL, ETC.—All persons having any of the above articles for sale, or cotton or woolen rags or waste, should read in this issue the advertisement of Mr. John Gomersall, located at 39 Peters street, New Orleans, and 158 West Court street, Cincinnati.

BOOTS, SHOES, TRUNKS, VALISES AND BAGS.—William Hogan, 99 and 101 Canal street, is a worthy and enterprising manufacturer and dealer in the above articles, and has the agency of the Empire Sewing Machine. We take pleasure in calling attention to his advertisement on the fifth page.

NEW ORLEANS AND CHICAGO.—We call the special attention of all shippers and the traveling public generally to the advertisement of Mr. Tucker, general agent for the Illinois Central Railroad and Blue Line, connecting Chicago and New Orleans by a prompt, efficient and reliable line of through transportation.

TARPAULINS.—A large amount of produce is expected from the West during the spring, and the suddenness with which rains make their appearance at this season of the year makes it advisable for all who have to handle freight to look out in time for tarpaulins. We recommend them to consult the advertisement of C. H. Allen & Co. Their establishment is at 84 New Levee street.

INTEREST ON DEPOSITS.—It will be seen by the announcement published elsewhere in our paper that the directors of the Crescent City National Bank have resolved to adopt the New York plan and allow interest on deposits at four per cent. per annum, payable on the first of July and first of January of each year. This bank stands justly high among the moneyed institutions of our city, and this now will make it popular with our business men, giving them, as it does, an opportunity to place their funds at interest, and at the same time have it always at command.

NEW LOUISIANA REMEDY.—An advertisement of the above remedy will be found in another column. In reference to which we quote the following from the New Orleans Times:

"The New Louisiana Remedy (Dr. Smith's Life Tonic and Pulmonic Syrup) is prepared from a native product of the swamps of Louisiana, compounded with the purest of materials, none of which are in the slightest way injurious. The Tonic is a blood purifier, which restores the appetite and promotes digestion, strengthening and invigorating the whole system. In cases of chills and fever, and malarial fevers, it acts like a charm. For scrofula, pimples, boils, sores, etc., it has been proved to be invaluable. The Pulmonic Syrup contains the same extract as the Tonic, and is put up in this form for the cure of lung diseases, consumption, etc., and there are many of our best citizens who testify to its prompt and beneficial action. These references may be seen at the office of Messrs. G. H. Smith & Co., manufacturers of the New Louisiana Remedy.

A True Friend.—"Another Richmond in the field," cried Richard; but for the sake of history and truth, be it known, the one proved at least an overmatch for the vaunting king; and so, despite the multifarious bitters that flood the deluged markets of the country, Price's Great Specific overshadows them all. With loud acclaim the sonorous echoes of which reverberate through all the land, until the mighty mountains, answering the seahoard, give back the glad response from hill to dale, from river to lake, and both of these again to grand old ocean, that rolls it on for aye! With billowy roar the people hymn the praises of Price's Celebrated Aromatic Bitters. They have tested its efficacy, tried its virtues, and shrined it, like an idol, in the very heart of faith. Indigestion no longer wails upon their appetital indulgences. Dyspepsia breaks no more upon their enjoyable repasts. Nervousness wraints; debility, that crouched within them, shrinks at the metamorphose of the giant strength, and the load of suffering under which they writhed is thrown off, as with the agile grace and power of an athlete. They care not for the recognition of other preparations, content to know and feel that they have found in Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters the true balm they have heard so often prated of in Gilead.

NEW AND DESIRABLE!

A Sunday School Geography,

with Seven Colored Maps, Fifty-six Lessons on the same, and a Pronouncing Vocabulary of the Names of all the Places mentioned in the Bible.

Each lesson is brief, and can be recited in five minutes; after which the class will proceed with the other lesson in the usual way. The maps illustrate the whole Bible History in chronological order.

We have examined and heartily commend the Scripture Geography for Sunday Schools, by the Rev. George A. Starkweather. The maps are constructed after the best models, are founded on the latest results of Biblical study, and bring forward the great epochs of Scripture history in their proper chronological order.

The author's system of question and answer in making use of the work is the right one; it shows both teacher and learner how to teach and how to learn; but it does not do all the work for them. It is impossible to overstate the value of such helps to the acquisition of a knowledge of the Bible.

Geography and chronology are the eyes of history, and the Scripture studied with such means of illustration as this Scripture Geography supplies will be found to be vivid, graphic, and in a sense altogether new.

We ought not to doubt the success any more than we do the utility of such a publication.

It seems to me to fill a place not occupied by any similar work, and answers a demand long felt by the more advanced Sunday school instructors.

REV. GEORGE W. CLARK,
Author of Clark's Harmony of the Gospels.

"To be able distinctly to locate the incidents of Scripture history goes very far toward a clear comprehension of the sacred narrative."

This little volume furnishes just this aid; and on this account it will be invaluable to Sunday school teachers, scholars and ministers.

REV. J. STANFORD HOLME,
Pastor Trinity Chapel, New York City.

"We judge that a thorough study of this little book would be an admirable preparation for either teachers or scholars."—Christian at Work.

"Vast numbers of people are very deficient in the knowledge of the geography of the Bible, and a work like this is well worthy of their study."—Christian Secretary.

"The author's plan is to furnish the means for studying Scripture Geography as that of the Modern World is studied in the schools. The book will prove useful to many outside of Sunday schools, who wish it for reference only."—Chicago Standard.

"The author's system of question and answer in making use of the work is the right one. We cannot overstate the value of such a help."—St. Louis Central.

The Child's Corner.

THE FOOLISH HAREBELL.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

A harebell hung its willful head:
"I am tired, so tired! I wish I was dead."
She hung her head in the mossy dell:
"If all were over, then all were well."

The wind he heard, and was pitiful;
He waved her about to make her cool.
"Wind, you are rough," said the dainty bell;
"Leave me alone—I am not well."

And the wind, at the voice of the drooping dame,
Sank in his heart, and ceased for shame.

"I am hot, so hot!" she sighed and said;
"I am withering up; I wish I was dead."

Then the sun, he pitied her pitiful ease,
And drew a thick vail over his face.

"Cloud, go away, and don't be rude;
I am not—I don't see why you should."

The cloud withdrew and the harebell cried:
"I am faint, so faint! and no water beside!"

And the dew came down its million-fold path;
But she murmured: "I did not want a bath."

A boy came by in the morning gray;
He plucked the harebell, and threw it away.

The harebell shivered, and cried: "Oh! oh!
I am faint, so faint! Come, dear wind, blow."

The wind blew softly, and did not speak.
She thanked him kindly, but grew more weak.

"Sun, dear sun, I am cold," she said.
He rose; but lower she drooped her head.

"O rain, I am withering; all the blue
Is fading out of me; come, please do."

The rain came down as fast as it could,
But for all its will, it did her no good.

She shuddered and shriveled, and moaning said:
"Thank you all kindly;" and then she was dead.

Let us hope, let us hope, when she comes next year,
She'll be simple and sweet. But I fear, I fear.

A LESSON FOR BOYS.

BE COURTEOUS.

Of all the Scripture commands for ordering our every-day life, this injunction of St. Paul is perhaps the one most habitually disregarded by children, both boys and girls, but especially boys.

"Courtesy, politeness—pooh!" I have heard even bright-looking, well-dressed boys say, "they are well enough for girls; but a boy that isn't a Miss Nancy has got to be rough."

"That's just where you're mistaken, boys. Your great ambition, from the time you put on your first jacket and trowsers and take a walk with papa instead of mamma or nurse, is to be a "big man." But men, at least well-bred men, are not rough and rude in their manners. They behave politely to each other and to everybody; and the sooner you begin to do so the sooner you will take one long stride toward being manly.

You would be very angry, even now, at ten or twelve years of age, if any one told you you were "no gentleman." But did you ever observe the literal meaning of that word—a gentle-man? Then why do you think it is only intended for girls to be "gentle?"

As for "Miss Nancy-ism," I suppose that is a boy's word for cowardice. But do you remember the account St. Paul gives of all he suffered in defense of the truth? You would think a boy a perfect hero if he took one severe whipping, without flinching, in defense of what he believed to be right; but that noble martyr endured every kind of terrible suffering, submitted to be scourged, stoned, imprisoned and finally put to a violent death, rather than yield the truth he had pledged himself to uphold. You would scarcely think him lacking in courage and manliness, and yet, boys, it was he who said: "Be courteous."

"Thank you" and "If you please" are much easier words to say than "Shall" and "Sha'n't," "I don't care," and "You're another," if boys would only believe it.

But I started to tell you a story of how a little boy I knew once missed something which he wanted very much just by his lack of politeness.

It was little Jack Farley, the son of a friend of mine, and I was at her house one day when Jack was begging for the promise of a new sled at Christmas. But his mother was firm in her refusal. "You remember well, Jack," said she, "what I told you last winter, when you were so careless about leaving your sled out of doors in all sorts of weather, that it would be worthless this winter, and that I should not get you another. But you gave no attention, and now you must take the consequences. You must get along with the old one, unless you earn a new one for yourself in some way."

"And so I would if I only knew any way," said Jack; "but what can a fellow do? It would take all winter to get enough by shoveling snow, and then a fellow wouldn't want a sled."

"Don't say 'a fellow' so much," said his mother; but she had nothing to suggest, and I heard no more about Jack's sled at that time.

A few weeks after I happened to be looking out some Christmas gifts for little bright-eyed nieces and nephews of mine, in Mr. Handy's great toy store, when Jack Farley came skipping by. He had a bright blue riband round his neck, with a large silver medal hanging from it, and his face was flushed and his eyes shining with great delight. The charm of the broad windows, stocked with all manner of beautiful and wonderful toys, caught his attention, and he stopped a moment to take a hasty glance.

Mr. Handy, who stood near the door, noticed the bright, joyous face, and the medal with its gay riband. "Halloo, my fine fellow," he said merrily, "what sort of a grand decoration have you got on? What's that a reward for?"

"For being head of my class, of course," said Jack, without even looking at the gentleman who took such good-humored notice of him.

"Well, that's a good hearing," said Mr. Handy, even more kindly than before. "I like to see boys with medals to show that they are at the head of their class. It proves there's good stuff in them. Here, I'd like to give something to the boy that gets the medal when he's no bigger than you. Take this, my fine fellow," holding out a new twenty five cent stamp as he spoke; but though Jack's eyes sparkled at the sight, he did not touch it.

"I don't want any of your money," he said rudely, and turning off, with never a thought of a "thank you," ran home.

"Well, sir, whatever you got the medal for, it was not for good manners," said Mr. Handy, quite mortified, as he put the money back into his pocket. Then turning to me, he said:

"Did you ever see such a young cub, ma'am? If he was too proud to take a bit of change from a man old enough to be his grandfather, at least he might have refused it politely. Boys didn't behave so in my young days."

"I know his mother," I said, "and I know she is very particular about their not asking for money. I suppose Jack thought she would not like to have him accept any from a stranger; but as you say, he ought to have been respectful."

"Well, he's cut himself out of my good graces," said the old gentleman. "I had taken a great fancy to that boy; he goes past here twice a day to and from school, and always looks so bright and smart I thought there was good stuff in him. We're always so busy before Christmas, I have to employ a good deal of extra help. I meant to ask him to come in and give us a little of his smartness on Christmas eve; I thought he'd like the fun of selling toys for awhile, and then I meant to give him the choice of all the sleds in the shop. But he's a little too smart for me, I find. I shouldn't dare trust such a rude chap to wait on my lady customers."

Poor Jack! A new sled—the very thing his heart craved. But he lost it just for want of a little common politeness.

Boys, believe me! While it is a poor motive to do what is right only because it pays, yet for that reason, among many higher and nobler ones, it will be well for you to remember St. Paul's charge: "Be courteous."—American Messenger.

CUT IT DOWN!

"Why cut it down?" asked Janette. You see her standing there by her brother Hugh. She spoke to the man with the ax, but he gave her no reply. His ax only came down with quicker and sharper blows, and the big chips flew about in a very lively manner. He thought he was too busy to stop to talk to a little child.

I am not sorry, for it gives me a chance to tell why the tree ought to be cut down. It was a fine, large tree, and all through the winter it had looked just like the other trees about it. None of them had any leaves, and they were all brown and apparently lifeless.

But spring came, and the buds swelled on the other trees, and at last burst out into tiny green leaves. The lawn, that had been so brown all winter, grew green as the little blades of grass came up all over it.

Everything showed signs of life except this tree, and that was as dry and dead as a stick. How badly it appeared! How sad to look at the great trunk and stout branches, and think they were dead! But dead they were; and the gardener waited and waited, until he lost all hope that this particular tree would ever bud again and show any signs of life. Then he said: "Cut it down! It is good only for burning."

Our Savior told a story once about a fig tree that was just as dry and dead as this tree. It is in Luke, the thirteenth chapter; and it was meant to teach men and children that they ought all to work, and do something for God who made them. Try to remember this tree that is to be cut down, and you will not forget how sad it is to be a dry, dead stick, when you ought to be lively and useful. Apples of Gold.

A GENTLEMAN.

"You see I am a gentleman!" said Will Thompson. "I will not take an insult." And the little fellow strutted up and down in a rage. He had been throwing stones at Peter Jones, and he thought that his anger proved him a gentleman.

"If you want to be a gentleman, I should think you would be a gentle boy first," said his teacher. "Gentlemen do not throw stones at their neighbors. Peter Jones did not throw stones at you, and I think he is much the more likely to prove a gentleman."

"But he's got patches on his knees," said Will.

"Bad pantaloons don't keep a boy from being a gentleman," said the teacher, "but a bad temper does. Now, William, if you want to be a gentleman you must be a gentle boy."

A little further on the teacher met little Peter Jones. Some stones had hit him, and he was hurt by them.

"Well, Peter, what's the matter between you and Will this morning?" asked the teacher.

"I was throwing a ball at one of the boys in play, sir, and it missed him and hit Will Thompson's dog."

"Why did you not throw back?"

"Because, sir, my mother says that to be a gentleman I must be a gentle boy, and I thought it was best to keep out of his way till he cooled off a little."

The teacher walked on, after praising Peter's conduct, but kept the boys in his mind; and he lived to see Will Thompson a rowdy, and Peter Jones a gentleman, loved and respected by all.

Remember, a gentle boy makes a gentle-man.—The Little Folks.

A PLAN IN LIFE.—"What is your plan in life?" I asked a small boy, turning from his big brothers, who were talking about theirs, to which I had been listening. "What is yours, Neddie?"

"I am not big enough for a plan yet," said Neddie; "but I have a purpose."

"That is good. It is not every one who has a purpose. What is your purpose?"

"To grow up a good boy, so as to be a good man, like my father," said Neddie. And, by the way he said it, it was plain he meant it. His father was a noble Christian man, and Neddie could not do better than to follow his steps. A boy with such a purpose will not fail of his mark.

The Farm and Garden.

For the Advocate.

THE FRUIT GARDEN FOR APRIL.

GRAPE-VINES are frequently left down until danger of frost is over, and put up after the shoots have pushed. Vines trained on the arm system should have the arm bent in a curve, to insure an equal starting of the buds. Plant strawberries, if not already done, even if it be late. Keep the beds clean, and free from grass and weeds. If they are mulched, pull up the weeds that force their way through. Should the weather be dry, water them if practicable.

THE RASPBERRY AND ITS CULTURE.—This delicious fruit is not half appreciated in this country. Maturing immediately after the strawberry season, the raspberry, as a dessert dish, enjoys almost a monopoly of the market for two or three weeks. The planting and cultivation of the raspberry is as follows:

Time of Planting.—Either in the fall or early spring. Both seasons have their advocates. I prefer the spring-time.

Preparing the Ground.—Choose, if possible, a piece of land having a gentle slope to the northeast. Subsoil this in the fall, and in the spring give it a coating of guano and plaster mixed. This should be plowed in, and the surface harrowed smooth with a long iron-toothed harrow. By this operation you obtain a thorough pulverization of the soil, without which you cannot expect to be successful in the cultivation of the fruit. The canes love a deep, rich loam, through which their roots will descend to great depths, which enables them to withstand severe drouths.

The Plants should be well rooted, and have suckers of strong, robust growth, and of last year's production. These should be cut down to within one foot of the ground.

The Rows should be four feet apart, and the plants three feet apart in the row; and great care should be taken to insure sunshine and air to the growing fruit.

Planting.—The holes should be dug large and deep, and, with the earth thrown out, there should be mixed a liberal quantity of manure, composed of stable cleanings, old turf and charcoal dust. If convenient to the city, the street sweepings might be used to good advantage. Before planting, the roots should be neatly and carefully trimmed; and, after you have placed them in the holes, draw out the small fibers with your fingers, so as to entirely separate them. This is a tedious process, but you will be amply rewarded for doing it. Fill up the hole even with the surface, press the earth to the roots with your foot, and give each plant two or three quarts of water in the evening after you have planted.

After-Cultivation.—The ground should be well tilled through the summer. To insure this, some plant the smaller vegetables between the stools or plants. This is a good system, for if the ground is well manured it makes a double return. In the spring a good stout stake should be put down by the side of the stools, to which the fruit-bearing wood should be tied with a piece of bark or a strong string. Some who desire superior fruit set a post firmly at each end of the row, upon which they stretch four or five wires, and then train the vines upon them, spread out like a fan. A good dressing of compost, if convenient to be had, well turned in, is a great improvement to them.

Pruning should be done in the spring. First clear away all the old wood that last year produced the fruit, and all the new shoots, except three or four. If the growth is not strong, not more than two should be left. These should be cut back about twelve inches. The pruning may be done any time during the months of March or April.

Duration of a Plantation.—The stools or vines produce a crop the third year after they are planted, and will continue to do so about five years; after which they should be taken up, and the same ground should not be replanted until it has enjoyed at least two years rotation of other crops. J. Q. H.

PROPAGATING THE ORANGE.

Oranges are chiefly propagated in one of three ways—by seeds, by budding and by grafting. There are other modes of propagation sometimes used by experts and fancy gardeners, but one or other of the three methods named above will accomplish all practical and useful purposes.

The propagation by seed is the one generally adopted, as it is the simplest, cheapest, and by many is thought to be the best. Most of the orange orchards in the South are composed wholly of seedlings, and, considering the general average excellence of the Southern crop, no great objection can be properly found against this way of producing trees. Still there is a great difference in the size, quality and productiveness of seedling oranges, and where one aims for the best, as all should, grafted or budded trees are far preferable, as then only those possessing the most desirable qualities need be planted. The grafting should be done immediately on the collar of strong stocks by the splice and tongue method, and the grafts set so deep that the junction of stock and scion shall be one or two inches beneath the surface. Budding can be done in August and September.

With proper care oranges may be transplanted at almost any age, but should be well cut in and not allowed to bear for a year.—Rural Southland.

FIELD CULTURE OF THE PUMPKIN.

The field pumpkin is a valuable crop, and should receive more attention than it has heretofore. If the fertility of the field will allow of an extra drain upon its resources, it is a good practice to plant pumpkin seed among the corn. But where this is not advisable, it would be well to select an acre or more of ground and prepare it especially for this excellent stock vegetable. Plow as for corn; harrow, cross harrow and roll; lay off shallow furrows ten feet apart each way; where the furrows cross each other, throw a shovelful of rich manure or compost, or a handful of manipulated guano; draw the soil over it with a hoe, making the hill flat and about three inches high. In each hill plant half a dozen pumpkin seed three inches apart, and about two inches deep. When the plant comes up, dust them of a morning, while the dew is on them, with a mixture composed of a half bushel of plaster, one peck of soot, one pound of Scotch snuff, and one pound of flour of sulphur, to get rid of the striped bug which is apt to do serious damage to the young vines.

After-Culture.—Thin out the weakest vines when they come into rough leaf, leaving but three in each hill; keep the weeds from hills with the hoe, and the ground clean and light by working it with the cultivator. Three workings with the latter implement will generally be found sufficient.—Our Home Journal.

MULCH AS A MANURE.—An experienced farmer once found, by experiment, that where he mulched his wheat land with veitch, he had an increase of crop of twelve bushels per acre; and he invariably found that land which had been sheltered during the previous winter from the action of the atmosphere, frost, cold, etc., was always more fertile than any portion of his adjoining land, even under a high state of cultivation. Our use of mulch upon small fruits also confirms the above theory, for a good mulch invariably increases the production from fifteen to twenty-five per cent., as well as contributing very materially to the size, color and cleanliness of the fruit. We believe that mulching will always pay.—Horticulturist.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO CRYSTALLIZE GRASSES, FLOWERS, ETC.—Dissolve six ounces of alum in one quart of water; boil until dissolved; steep the grasses or flowers in the solution while hot. By the time the water is cold the crystals will be formed. If the crystals are too large add more water. Separate the little branches gently, taking off the superfluous lumps. Fern leaves, oats, flax and the long feathery grasses are the most beautiful for crystallizing.

A PLAIN PUDDING.—Two ounces of whole rice, first boiled in water and then in milk till tender. Well grease a pie dish, and have ready beat six eggs, some sugar and milk, (the milk ought to be boiled and let cool.) When the rice is done pour it into the dish, stir the eggs, etc., into it, and beat it all up. Add a small piece of butter to keep it moist. Pour in milk to fill the dish, sweeten to taste, and grate nutmeg over it; bake three-quarters of an hour. This is a good, wholesome pudding, inexpensive, delicate and very nice.

CHEAP PEA SOUP.—Have a quarter of a pound of fat bacon cut into slices; peel and slice two good sized onions, or three small ones, and put them into a stewpan, with one ounce of dripping; fry them gently until slightly brown, then add two ounces of turnips, two ounces of carrots, one ounce of leeks, and one ounce of celery; cut them thin and slanting; fry for ten minutes, and fill up with seven quarts of water, and, when boiling, add one pound and a quarter of split peas, and let the whole simmer for two or three hours, until the peas are reduced to a pulp; then add two ounces of salt, half an ounce of sugar, and a quarter of an ounce of mint. Mix half a pound of flour in twelve ounces of water to a thin batter, pour into the soup, stir it well, boil a quarter of an hour, and serve.

LEAVES FOR TANNING.—It has been found that the leaves of some forest trees, as oak, beech and birch, contain a greater amount of tanning matter than bark. In Vermont several sides of leather have recently been tanned with leaves, one ton of which was found to be equal to five tons of hemlock bark.—Hearth and Home.

THE fossil plants collected by Edward Whymper, in Greenland, have at length been determined by Prof. Oswald Heer, of the University of Zurich. At the principal locality, Atanekerdluk, remains of vegetable organisms were found in such profusion that the ancient flora of North Greenland may be almost completely restored, and its climate ascertained. At this station the plants were found in a fossil dsposit on one of the three peaks of the peninsula, 1,175 feet above the sea, through all sedimentary strata; but chiefly in layers of Siderite and Limonite, slabs of which were often covered with specimens. Here representatives of no less than seventy-three species were taken out, twenty-five of which were new discoveries. One, a Greenbrier, Similax grandifolia, once distributed over the whole of Enrope, from the Baltic to Italy, like its successor in our own thickets, used to hang in festoons from trees. A Sassafras, S. Ferretianum, was found, whose range extended as far as Senegaglia, in Italy, which had an earlier representative, S. cretaceum, in this conntry, and now is followed by our own plant. Many fine leaves of M'Clintockia at length establish the genus as a member of Menispermaceæ. A Redwood, Sequoia Langsdorfii, allied to the great cedars of California, was discovered with both male and female flowers, ripe cones, and shoots of such length as to show that soil and temperature were favorable to its greatest luxuriance. Bilobate leaves of Salisburia were met with for the first time, which prove the species to be identical with S. Adiantifolia, of Japan, the Ginkgo tree of ornamental grounds, bearing broad, fan-shaped, maiden-hair leaves, on slender stalks. Whole forests were made up of Plane trees, and Oaks in several species abounded, together with Sumachs, Grape-vines, Buckthorns, Rhamnus, a Strawberry tree, Euonymus, Plums, Liquidamban, Ginseng, Aralia, Ivy, Hedira, Cornel, Nyssa, Arrow-woods, Viburnum, Andromeda, Holly, Persimmon, Diospyros, Buck-bean, Menyanthes, Ash trees, a Fig, Ficus, probably, Walnnts, Chestnnts, flowers and fruit, as well as leaves, Beeches, Hazelnuts, Ironwood, Carpinus, Sweet-gale, Myrica, Alders, Willows, Poplars, Pines, Larches, and many more of closest resemblance to inhabitants of our forests and warm, temperate latitudes. Two remarkable Ferns, differing widely from all species of temperate or frigid zones, appeared in addition to our Shield and Flowering Ferns, Brake and Horsetails. At Disco, besides the leaves, two fine cones of a Magnolia, M. Inglefieldia, were secured, and regarded as among the most important results of the expedition, proving as they do that this splendid evergreen ripened its fruit as far north as the seventieth parallel of latitude under Miocene skies. Mr. Whymper's researches carry the number of Greenland plants up to one hundred and thirty-seven species; forty-six of these agree with those of the Miocene of Europe, among which four wandered no further than England, six went as far as the Baltic, ten extended to Switzerland, seven to Anstria, seventeen reached their limit in Italy, and six were once at home in Greece. Fresh-water grasses indicate rivers and lakes in those days. Amber frequently occurs in Lignite and in fossil plant-beds, and points to the Redwoods and Larches as its source, for they were the most common conifers, and formed dense forests. Occasionally collections of fossil stems of psrfect trunks, branches, knots, drift-wood are preserved, enveloped in coal. We fancy that, if the Greenlanders only knew how truly their country corresponded formerly to its name they would sigh for a return of the balmy Miocene epoch; and, again, that under such conditions, Dr. Petermann might reasonably disregard the challenge of Captain Koldeweg to accompany him in an attempt to reach the open polar basin by way of Spitzbergen, on the ground of having become a convert to the western route!

THE Rev. Henry C. Riley, D. D., of the American and Foreign Christian Union, recently administered the Lord's Supper, in a Mexican expapal church, to four hundred communicants, converts from Romanism; and was assisted in the ordinance by four converted Romish priests.

THE pleasures of the world are deceitful; they promise more than they give. They trouble us in seeking them, they do not satisfy us when possessing them, and they make us despair in losing them.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DE VERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

MEDICAL.

INDIAN TURNIP COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM,

Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various Affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the Relief of Consumptive Patients.

The Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm completely cures the most inveterate cases of Bronchitis, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Pulmonary Oppression, the Spasmodic Nervous Disorders which attend certain forms of Coughs, Sore Throat, and generally all cases of Inflammation of the Respiratory Organs. It has a soothing action upon the Cough, facilitates expectoration, checks the spitting of blood, and relieves fits of Asthma. In this last disease the Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm has been given with the greatest success. Its use in Whooping Cough remarkably relieves this distressing affection.

Prepared and for sale by

B. LAPLACE, Druggist,

Nos. 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street, and the principal Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans. mh2t 1m

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

G. H. SMITH & CO., Proprietors,
20 Baronne St., New Orleans.

Caution to the Public.—Be sure to get the right article.

Among the references are Hon. S. Belden, Attorney General; Hon. C. O. Dague, Ex-Judge District Court; General Thomas M. Scott, of J. Pinckney Smith & Co.; Rev. L. P. Ilentz, Lutheran Church; Captain J. J. Rivera, foreman of the Bulletin office, and many others. no30 6m

TO THE AFFLICTED.

The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly

Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup.

Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.

It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.

For sale by all respectable druggists.

F. P. DUCONGE, Proprietor.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The spring demand [illegible] sided, [illegible]es of the trade [illegible] doing a fair [illegible] in supplying country merchants and city dealers.

We continue to hear [illegible]nts of the [illegible] of the [illegible]ting [illegible] marked [illegible], there [illegible] much rain [illegible] wing, [illegible]ters are behind hand. [illegible] are that the crop will [illegible] and the chances of a [illegible] much less promising than [illegible] a few weeks since. Even [illegible]es, addicted to [illegible] everything favorable to the [illegible], look for no more than 3,[illegible],000 bales, which we mention merely to show the discouraging influence of the weather.

The river is 10 feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fifth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	4,262
Lake	26
[illegible]	838
Florida	1
Texas	298
Total	5,425

On Saturday the demand was only moderate, and while there was no quotable change, the advantage was on the side of the buyers. The sales embraced 3,800 bales. On Monday buyers came forward with no more spirit, and 3,700 bales changed hands at previous rates for the medium and lower grades, but a decline of about ⅛c. in middling and the better qualities. On Tuesday the market was quiet throughout the day, and the movement was checked not only by a slack demand and moderate supplies, but by most factors holding at a fraction above the limits of the pending orders. Under these circumstances the sales were confined to 1,900 bales. Strict good ordinary, with staple, sold at 21⅝c., and middling at 22⅛c., which may be regarded as the ruling rates for those styles, although they were generally held higher.

The receipts proper at this port, since the [illegible] of September, (exclusive of the [illegible] from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are [illegible],674 bales, against 1,222,514 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 221,402 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 118,605 to France, and a decrease of 622,197 to Great Britain, and of 230,448 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

SUGAR.—On Tuesday there was some demand for good open kettle sugar, but none for clarified. Some inferior sold at 6⅛c., common 7¾@8c., good common 8[illegible], good fair 9⅛c., seconds 9[illegible]c. [illegible]

[illegible]—Plantation is in light supply and good demand. It is coming in in small lots, and sells at 35@37½c. for common fermenting, 40@42c. for fair [illegible]menting, 45c. for prime fermenting, and 50@55c. for cistern bottom. The importations of Northern syrup and molasses have materially affected the market for the domestic product.

CORN.—On Tuesday the supply was light, and white was scarce. There was a good demand, and 8,000 sacks sold at 72@78c. for mixed and yellow, [illegible]4@75c. for white. A small lot of white commanded 78c. ℔ bushel.

OATS are in good supply and fair demand, at about previous rates. On Tuesday 3,100 sacks sold at 56c. ℔ bushel.

BRAN.—On Tuesday 200 sacks sold at $1.75 ℔ 100 lbs.

PORK has been in better demand, and, with a light stock on hand, prices have advanced 25c. ℔ bbl. On Saturday 130 bbls. mess sold at $13.30, and 100 do. at $13.50 ℔ bbl. In futures 1,000 bbls. mess sold, seller's option, June delivery, at $13.37½, 300 do., seller's option, May and June delivery, at $13, and 200 do., buyer's option, July delivery, at $13.50 ℔ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market was firm, and about 100 casks sold, in lots, at 5⅝c. for shoulders, and 7⅞c. for clear sides. Clear rib sides were quoted at 7⅞c. ℔ lb.

HAMS.—Sugar-cured are in light supply, and choice are in demand and still firmer. On Saturday 25 tierces sold at 11¼@11⅜c. On Tuesday 25 tierces sold at 11⅜c., and 25 do. at 11½c. ℔ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The market is quiet but firm, with a fair demand and light stock on hand. On Saturday 7 casks sold at 5c. ℔ lb. On Monday [illegible] shoulders sold at 5c. ℔ lb., 11 [illegible] rib sides at 5⅞c., 1,000 [illegible], loose, at 5⅝c., and 300 [illegible] at 4¾c. ℔ lb. On [illegible] shoulders sold at 5c.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1872. NO. 16.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 10.—A train on the Midland railroad went through Saddle river bridge, near Hackensack, New Jersey. One person was killed outright, and twenty-five or thirty wounded, some fatally.

At the State Methodist Conference to-day it was announced that Daniel Drew had given thirty acres of land at Carmel for the Methodist Collegiate Institute, adjoining the Female Seminary there; he also builds the college. The thanks of the Conference were voted to Mr. Drew.

Salt Lake, April 10.—The attendance at the Mormon Conference numbers from eight to ten thousand persons, some of them from remote sections, all in holiday attire.

Elder Taylor, in an address, said Mormonism was an enigma to the world. The United States had been endeavoring to solve it for years, but had not done it and never would. Other elders used equally defiant language.

The Mormon Conference unanimously re-elected Brigham Young president.

Cairo, Ill., April 11.—At four o'clock this morning the steamer Oceanus, from Red river to St. Louis, when near Brook's Point, thirty miles above Cairo, exploded her boiler, blowing her upper works almost entirely away, immediately after which the wreck took fire and burned to the water's edge. Mr. Thompson, the pilot of the steamer John Lumsden, which was lying a few miles below, on seeing the light from the burning wreck, manned a yawl and proceeded up the river to ascertain the cause.

He found a small party of survivors on the head of the Island, but passed on to relieve those on the wreck. Ten or twelve persons were clinging to the wheel, but the wheel dropped before he reached there, and all but four were lost. He found a deck passenger, name unknown, scalded badly, and who died before he reached Cairo.

St. Louis, April 12.—The most reliable advices put the loss by the Oceanus disaster at between sixty and seventy persons. The details are horrible.

Philadelphia, April 13.—Smallpox cases for the week decreased fifty. Deaths, seventy-one—a decrease of three from last week.

Salt Lake City, April 13.—Elder A. M. Musser, the Mormon telegraph supsrintendent, said that rather than surrender one single principle of their religion, the Mormons would make a Moscow of Salt Lake City, tear up railroads, break down telegraph lines, and destroy millions' worth of other property. He spoke of Judge McKean as a dried up, corrupt old dog, and of the President as "Useless Grant," and stigmatized him and others as a corrupt set. He also included the President's wife in his attack.

Toledo, Ohio, April 15.—There were several destructive fires in the vicinity of this city on Saturday. Four frame houses, a short distance west of the city, were destroyed; the fire was communicated from the adjoining woods. A church, three miles east of the city, was burned. Several farms were swept over by the fire, and the dwellings, barns, grain, farming utensils, hay, fences, etc., were entirely consumed.

The loss by the Perrysburg fire will reach $20,000, on which there is $11,000 insurance.

Meridian, Miss., April 16.—An earthquake occurred here at half-past two this morning. It lasted half a minute; cracked plastering and broke some glasses. No other damage. The shocks passed from northeast to southwest, taking in York, Alabama and Enterprise, Mississippi.

Clinton, N. Y., April 16.—Hamilton College has been closed until May 2, on account of the smallpox.

FOREIGN.

London, April 10.—The claimant to the Tichborne estate appeared in the central criminal court of the Old Bailey to-day, to answer to the indictments yesterday presented against him. He pleaded not guilty to all the counts.

A writ of certiorari was issued, removing the cause to the Queen's Bench, where the prisoner will be tried in June; in the meantime he has been recommitted to Newgate.

Matamoras, April 11.—A party of Mexicans recently crossed the Rio Grande during the night, went over to Edinburg, broke open the jail and released three cattle thieves, and returned to the Mexican side. The sheriff and citizens were previously notified of their intention to release these prisoners, but made no resistance.

General Palacios has been informed that a party of Texans are organizing, ostensibly for the purpose of preventing depredations, but really to invade Mexico.

Texans have sent to the local authorities at Brownsville a report of the depredations of Mexicans, requesting that it be forwarded to the President of the United States.

London, April 14.—The Observer says: Lord Tenderden and Caleb Cushing will present the counter cases of their respective governments at Geneva to-morrow. The sitting of the board will be very brief. Cushing, Davis and Evarts, counsel for the American government, will prolong their stay in Paris until June. They are of the opinion that the board of arbitration is bound to adjudicate the Alabama claims after the delivery of the counter cases, even should one of the litigants withdraw.

Rome, April 14.—The Pope gave audience on Friday to many citizens and four hundred persons from foreign parts. His holiness gave his benediction successively to all countries represented by the visitors, particularly to Ireland, Poland, Holland and the United States of America.

He praised France, and counseled forbearance and gentleness toward some intolerant Frenchmen. He prayed for Germany, subjugated, as she was, by an anti-Catholic spirit, and Austria he said greatly needed the prayers of the faithful.

London, April 16:—The United States steamer Iroquois arrived at Gibraltar to-day.

Two lines of Atlantic steamers are proposed between Glasgow and New York and Liverpool and New Orleans.

The Globe and other Tory organs are elated over the defeat of the government by one majority, yesterday, on an important amendment to the ballot bill.

It is reported that the Pope is about to fill the vacancies in the college of cardinals. Archbishop Manning's name is prominently mentioned as likely to be among the new appointments.

Boiler Explosion at the Louisiana Paper Mill.—One Man Killed Outright—Another Wounded.—Yesterday afternoon, about four o'clock, an accident occurred at the Louisiana paper mill, on Liberty street, between Julia and Girod, which resulted in the death of Mr. N. W. Mahon, brother of ex-Tax Collector F. C. Mahon, of this city, and injuries to a colored man named Sandy Rose.

At the time mentioned the rotary boiler, situated in a building adjoining the mill proper, and about forty feet from the latter, exploded, and the main portion flew across the yard through the rear of the mill building, across another space, into the blacksmith shop, finally finding a resting place in a corner of the latter building, about one hundred and fifty feet from its original location. The other portion of the boiler, consisting of one of the heads of the boiler, was thrown into an adjoining yard in the direction of the New Basin, a distance of about fifty feet.—Picayune, April 16.

The bullion production of the Pacific States and Territories, for 1869 and 1870, averaged from $70,000,000 to $75,000,000. There is reason to believe that last year it reached $80,000,000, and there is good ground for expecting that this year it will aggregate $90,000,000, and may possibly reach $100,000,000.

The Mormon census, just taken, gives the population of Salt Lake City as 19,029, and that of the county outside of the city as 6,564, making a total of 25,593 for the county. By the census returns of 1870 the population of the city is set down at 12,854, while the county is credited with 18,337.

Mail advices state that the earthquake in the Caucasus converted a considerable extent of country into a desert, destroying the crops and entailing misery upon the inhabitants. The town of Schemacha was almost destroyed, one hundred and thirty-seven people being killed.

Regarding the famine in Persia, Dr. Wills, of Shiraz, writes: "You can form no idea of the distress here. The people in the villages eat the grass when they can get it, and at the slaughter-houses every drop of blood is lapped up or carried away by the starving poor."

One Way to Avoid Scandal.—The New York World very sensibly says that "there is no necessity for a clergyman giving private interviews to female parishioners or other women, either in the vestry of his church, his study at home, or any other place. If he had a reasonable sense of delicacy he would never do it under any circumstances. Private conferences with unattended women in the solitude of a church edifice, vestry or library, are inexcusable acts of imprudence. The conscious rectitude of his own intentions cannot justify them, for he has no right to expose either himself or his sacred profession to the license of evil tongues. Moreover, he should distrust the prudence, if not the innocence, of a woman so wanting in the instinctive delicacy and sensitive honor which beautify her sex, as to seek interviews with him alone, unaccompanied by any friend. He never need receive female calls, except at home. If he is married, the presence of his wife would protect both parties; and it is not easy to conceive what a pure woman could wish to say to her pastor, which she ought to shrink from divulging to his wife. If the clergyman is unmarried, he, of course, boards in some respectable house, and should receive an unattended female visitor not in his own room, but in the open parlor of the family, regretting the simplicity, when he does not distrust the innocence, of women who call to see him without an attendant."

Southern Historical Society.—The appointed lecture announced by this association was delivered on Friday night, the twelfth instant, at Lyceum Hall, by the Rev. W. V. Tudor, before a most respectable audience of ladies and gentlemen. The lecturer's exordium presented the distinctive features of science and its modes of alliance with history, and his discourse was mainly consumed in a cursory review of all the fields in which the scientist has labored, from the sublime heights of astronomy to the lowly caves of geology and palæontology. The fellowship of the arts with science was happily considered, and the achievements of both reviewed in a manner both able and elegant. The bold explorers of the Polar seas, and of Africa's unknown lands, received a tribute which, as the pioneers of science, they have fully earned, and which not even the lecturer's eloquence could too richly adorn.

The subject of "Science and History" was treated more for the purpose of instituting a contrast than a comparison between the two, for it was shown that while the former was of the essence of truth, and could inculcate nothing but truth, the latter was in constant conspiracy against truth and persistently propagating falsehood.—Picayune.

Japanese Persecutions.—Speaking of the kindness shown to the Japanese embassy in this country, the New York Post says: "This is the way the Japanese are treated in a Christian land. How is this courtesy returned? The latest news from Japan is the reply. We learn from dispatches and letters sent to England from Nagasaki that the persecution of native Christians is deplorable. A high official of the Mikado Court, named Ewakura, (who, by the way, is not to be confounded with Iwakura, the Japanese embassador now in this country,) is the superintending torturer. He orders the Christian converts to death in batches. As an instance, it may be stated that sixty-seven people recently perished in one lot. The forms of death are most shocking. Starvation, imprisonment without light or clothing, exposure on frozen ponds, and the forcing of burning coals into the mouth, are among the modes of torture in vogue. It is stated that the foreign consuls in Japan have already informed their respective governments of these atrocities, and it is hoped that the British government will interfere."

Rev. Thomas W. Upham, late professor of moral philosophy in Bowdoin College, Maine, and author of a "Life of Madame Guion," "Interior Life," and other well-known religious works, says the Western Christian Advocate, was stricken with paralysis two weeks since, from the effects of which he died, in New York city, the early part of last week. His funeral took place April 4, and was very numerously attended, ministers of some half a dozen different evangelical denominations taking part.

Distinction is the consequence, never the object of great minds.

FROM THE WORK.

A Word from Holmesville, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: It certainly does not rain everywhere like it does in this country, else our preachers could accomplish but little by preaching. I have been only able to reach one of my appointments since the first of March. True, the second Sunday in March was a nice, clear day, but I was sick, and could not attend my appointment. I made arrangements, however, to have it filled. My father, Quinea Lewis, and Bro. William W. Conerly, who are old and well-tried soldiers of the cross, filled my appointment perhaps better than I could have done it. These two venerable veterans have fought many hard battles together, and have achieved many signal victories. I have often wondered why they were not licensed to preach in early life, for they are only exhorters in the church. Perhaps they have been more useful to the church than they would have been had they been licensed to preach. The church, I think, has spoiled many good class-leaders by trying to make preachers of them. All are not apostles, all are not teachers, all are not workers of miracles, all have not the gifts of healing, all do not interpret. But God has a work for all, and it is certainly the duty of every man to find out what the Lord would have him do. Some men are able pulpit orators, but seem to be of little use outside the pulpit. There are others who can't preach, yet they, or some of them, make good pastors. There are others who seem to be useful only among children. Let every man learn what his duty is, and then do it. The St. Louis Advocate abounds with revival notices in Illinois and Missouri; also in Arkansas and Kentucky the Lord is reviving his work. I see some few revival notices in our paper; yet in the region around about Holmesville there seems to be but little, if any, vitality in the church. Our people are kind and affectionate; speak well of their preacher (Bro. S.) All "brother" their preacher, but no one else. They seem at times to love the church, and yet the church is suffering greatly. It is not only the case here, but, with few exceptions, so far as my personal knowledge extends.

I am exceedingly anxious to see the Lord's work prosper. I had rather witness the conversion of sinners than anything else. Nothing affords me so much happiness. This is one evidence I have of my acceptance with God.

Lake Providence District.

Mr. Editor: As an item of "news from the churches," I report progress on the Lake Providence district.

The services of March 30 and 31 closed my first round. Rainy, inclement weather during the whole time—ten weeks—has been the rule, good weather the exception. Notwithstanding, we have been favored with good Sabbaths—have not missed a single appointment. It is almost impossible for one unacquainted with the country to appreciate the geographical and incidental difficulties in the way of a successful administration of the work. In the first place, the territory for the number of pastoral charges—now eleven; as per appointment of the Bishop, ten—is very large, involving a great deal of travel. There are in whole, and in part, seven parishes in the district. Much of this territory is traversed by rivers, bayous, lagoons, and at times impassable swamps.

In the past ten weeks, commencing with the last week in January, I have traveled between eleven and twelve hundred miles.

As above intimated, we now have eleven pastoral charges, all in good working order. The promise of an abundant harvest is encouraging. Generally the preachers have entered promptly upon their work. Generally they are well received. The ground is being thoroughly broken—the seed sown sound and abundant.

Rev. George Jackson, transferred by Bishop Kavanaugh from the Mississippi Conference, has arrived, and entered upon the field assigned him. His coming was timely. We needed his services badly. It enables us to occupy very important territory otherwise uncultivated. The "open door and effectual" we gladly enter. I am persuaded that Bro. Jackson's transfer is quite an acquisition to the Louisiana Conference.

There is nothing encouraging in the way of statistics to report. The accessions during the round perhaps will not number above one hundred. But we note a very decided improvement in another important direction. In the way of organization we have gained much. Official boards present compact, close ranks. Before permanent success can follow any enterprise organization is necessary. This spirit is fully upon us. In this essential we are prepared to work. The District Conference camp meeting project is widening and deepening in interest. Whether we have the camp meeting or not, dear doctor, we would be most happy to have you present at our District Conference. We have some other district enterprises awaiting development, of which you shall be notified in due time.

Rolling Fork.

Mr. Editor: Prejudice is a cruel monster—an unrelenting tyrant; for such has it proven itself to be to this country. The very name of swamp carries with it ideas by no means congenial with that love of ease so characteristic of the human race, and possessed by all, Methodist preachers not entirely excepted. This country, containing two appointments in the Mississippi Conference, seems to be considered, by the members of the Conference generally, as a kind of Jericho, where the ministerial novice learns his first lesson to prepare him for the itinerant warfare, and that is a lesson of hardships. When I was admitted on trial into the Mississippi Conference, last December, I repeatedly heard this piece of unwelcome prophecy: "They will swamp you this year." I could only retort, "I hope not," for I feared it somewhat, having, like the rest of them, an antipathy for the very name "swamp." Nevertheless, I was read out to Rolling Fork circuit. Well, I thought I would try and make the best of it. So on one of the darkest, coldest days of that dreary month, December, I plunged into the swamp, watching every mudhole, and starting at every canebrake I would pass. But after passing through a cane-brake or two, how different a country broke upon my view from what I expected! Large farms, stretching far away to the distant cypress groves, arose to the view on either side, and presented a scene of grandeur to my mind. When I reached Rolling Fork I found a people ready to receive me with a cordial welcome that cheered my boyish heart not a little.

These people are enterprising, kind and hospitable. We have now a new church, which was built last year; and around it a thrifty little village is rapidly springing up. The sound of the hammer and saw can be heard at almost any time, and new buildings meet the view on almost every side. We have fine-looking, intelligent audiences, who take great interest in church affairs. We have choirs, one of which can sing better than some city choirs I have heard; but our choirs here lead the singing. And, Mr. Editor, that organ we sent to you for, reached us on last Thursday, and the notes of sacred instrumental music arose, for the first time, from the pretty new church, and rolled along the rolling bosom of our beautiful little river. Old Hundred and Ortonville seemed to sound grander than ever before. Allow me to take this method of expressing, in behalf of the congregation at Rolling Fork, the gratitude we owe Bro. Harp for his services in buying for us that organ. We are going to express our gratitude in another and perhaps better way soon, i. e., with a list of subscribers and renewals for the Advocate. We have a fine Sunday school in successful operation, and another just started.

Now, Mr. Editor, I have written this in defense of the so-often slandered swamps, to thank you and Bro. Harp for getting our organ for us, and to thank Bishop Kavanaugh for sending me to the "swamp."

The Swamped Novice.

THE REV. PETER AKERS, D. D.

The venerable patriarch, the Rev. Peter Akers, D. D., of Illinois, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of April 13, looked in upon us last week. He was on a visit to relatives in Nashville, and hearing that he was in the city, we were just going to call on him, with Dr. McFerrin, when Dr. Green led him into our office. A number of brethren dropped in, and all were delighted with the interview. The doctor will be eighty-two years of age if he lives till September 1, at which time, if his neighbor, Dr. Peter Cartwright, shall be alive—and we are glad to learn that he is recovering from his late attack—he will be eighty-five. Dr. Akers is cheerful and active, giving a fine example of "narrative old age," conversing with great interest of the scenes which he witnessed—in which he was quorum pars—when he used to travel through these regions. It is really refreshing to meet with one of these noble pioneers of Methodism—one readily leaps over boundary lines, which, however called for by the exigencies of the times, ought not to interfere with cordial intercourse, and would not if all our brethren at the North were like Dr. Akers. We may have something from his pen in our next issue.

INDIAN MISSION.

Rev. John Harrell, writing in the Nashville Advocate to Dr. McFerrin, gives the following items of interest. The communication is dated March 20.

Having made another round on the Cherokee district, would record our gratitude to the Author of all good for his care over us and family during the seven weeks of our absence from each other. The preachers are all at their posts, save two. Bro. Charles Campbell is still in very poor health, scarcely able to be out of bed; but thinks he is improving slowly. The other, Rev. Heavey Butler, died on the night of the twenty-fifth of December. He was appointed to travel the Salosaw circuit, with Bro. Miller—entered upon his field of labor immediately after Conference. He made but two rounds on his circuit till he was arrested by disease; was sick but a few days, when he took his flight for another world. His death was peaceful; he assured his friends that he was going to rest with God. The past winter has been very sickly through the Cherokee Nation; many of our best members have fallen by death, brought on principally by pneumonia. We have employed no preacher to take Bro. Butler's place, as Bro. Miller is at his post, at work in good earnest. But we have employed Bro. Robert Campbell to form a new circuit west of the Grand River circuit. He has made a very successful tour, and reports some good societies being organized and some fourteen new members. Bro. Campbell is a good native preacher—was ordained deacon by Bishop Keener at Fort Gibson.

Among the families we had the pleasure of visiting was the widow and children of our beloved and lamented Walker Carey. He was for more than twenty years one of our best and most successful native preachers. When he died he requested his wife to sell his farm and pay his debts with the proceeds, which was done. The widow now lives within fifteen miles of Fort Gibson, the friends of Bro. Carey having met, and cut and hewed logs, and put her up a good log house. By her industry—her sons helping her—she is as comfortable as could be expected. She has received nothing from the board, although a claimant. She informs me that her claims shall be willingly relinquished, if the church would consent to educate her two little boys, William and Tuxy. They are thirteen and fifteen years of age, or thereabouts. They are good, well-disposed, and quite industrious, and, withal, apt to learn. One of them gives evidence of talent. The mother, like Hannah of old, wants him to be a prophet of the Lord. Now, we ask, is there college, seminary, high school, or any place where these two little Cherokee boys can find a home and be educated, free of charge? They can be separated, if necessary. They both speak English and Cherokee, and can read in English. We shall wait for a response. We have attended all the quarterly meetings, preached day and night, attended to all the interests of the church as far as possible, but confess that our success has been limited—thirty-five accessions, however, during the round, besides what the preachers reported from the circuits.

The late Mr. Thomas G. Duncan, of Battle Creek, Michigan, who left $10,000 for Bishop Simpson, of the Methodist Church, also bequeathed $10,000 to the Methodist church of Battle Creek, and to the Methodist church at Pithole City, Pennsylvania, $10,000, and $25,000 to the Methodist church in Plainmer, Pennsylvania, and after payment of the various legacies, what is left of his property to be given by his executors to such Methodist object as they see fit. He gives also $5,000 to Rev. Mr. Leech, a Methodist minister.

THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1872.

TILL HE COME.

"Till He come." Oh! let the words
Linger on the trembling chords;
Let the little while between
In their golden light be seen;
Let us think how heaven and home
Lie beyond that "Till He come."

When the weary ones we love
Enter to their rest above,
Seems the earth so poor and vast,
All our life-sky overcast;
Hush! be every mourner dumb;
It is only—till He come.

Clouds and conflicts round us press;
Would we have one sorrow less?
All the sharpness of the cross,
All that tells the world is lost,
Death and darkness and the tomb
Only whisper—"Till He come."

See, the feast of love is spread;
Drink the wine and break the bread:
Sweet memorial—till the Lord
Call us round his heavenly board;
Some from earth, from glory some,
Severed only—till He come.

Bickersteth.

REMARKS ON BISHOP PIERCE'S SECOND LETTER.

Bishop Pierce rises to explain. He also gives us, more largely than in his first communication, his objections to the proposed University and theological school. The readers of the Advocate will thank me for having been the occasion of the reappearance in its columns of one whom all delight to see, to read and to hear.

He corrects me on a point:

"When I wrote of the 'rapid growth' of this University idea, I did not refer to the development of public favor in its behalf. Not at all. Far from it."

I stand corrected. It was not, then, a show of friends and forces that excited his fears. He is pleased that the realization of the idea, and even the question of location, are so far off; he is "not troubled on that point." But it was the development of the idea that alarmed him! He is more easily scared than I supposed.

The Bishop explains the cause of his former letter. His "chief object" was to set himself right, report having put him in a "false position," as favoring the "project of the Memphis Convention." The report had not reached me. His letter was read to the convention, and, like himself, it was clear and strong. The secretary rendered it with emphasis next to one from Bishop Wightman, which was equally strong and clear on the other side. If Bishop Pierce has been misquoted in connection with that project, there can be no mistake hereafter. He sets himself "right" on it, and goes farther, in the words following:

"If anybody, dazzled by the grandeur of the scheme, were disposed to make a heavy contribution to it, and asked my advice, I would turn it in another direction, or at least suggest the propriety of waiting awhile."

That is to say, he does, in this public way, give the advice beforehand. The persons nominated as a board of corporators, and intrusted by the convention with carrying out a scheme for consecrating a liberal portion of the wealth of our people to the church, have been delayed (so I am informed by one of themselves) in organizing and coming before the public for contributions, by the calamity which befell our Publishing House in the fire of the fifteenth of February. They thought it proper to defer awhile to a connectional exigency. This delay is unfortunate, for Bishop Pierce has gone before their agent, telling the people to shut their pockets.

The attitude in which he puts those who took part in the convention requires an explanation from somebody. After disclaiming unkind imputations, the Bishop says: "I do think the movement at Memphis directly in the face of General Conference action." And again:

"To my mind the proposition reads thus: 'True, the General Conference has disapproved this thing, but we are bound to have it, and the rest of you may come in, aid and partake, if you will. Very glad if you would.' I do not like this kind of 'spontaneous action.'"

With due deference, I submit that so grave a charge as is herein implied against his brethren and colleagues ought to be supported by reference to documents, or by something more satisfactory than mere opinion. "To my mind," or "I do think," is unanswerable; it is an indivisible unit, and defies analysis; but as an argument is not entitled to high grade.

On the University, I am not without hope of coming to an agreement with the Bishop. His good will and co-operation, even in part, are greatly to be desired. He says:

"On the basis proposed, I do oppose the 'Central University,' because its success would be the partial, if not total, ruin of institutions vital to the church, and dear to the Conferences. I am not ready for the sacrifice."

Neither am I ready, nor is anything of the sort designed. Has he considered that "basis?" The speeches of Conference orators and hasty paragraphs of correspondents are not always reliable sources of information. I was not a member of the convention—had no vote in it—and do not pretend to speak by authority; but I consented, upon invitation of that highly respectable body, to assist in presiding over its deliberations. I approved its object and principles, and, in the main, its work. If I understand them, there is no slaughter of the innocents contemplated. Our various colleges are really injured by being represented as unable to survive the presence of this University, or as a small fry, in peril of being devoured by a big fish.

Will the Bishop allow me to lead his mind up to this subject from a point of view he has not occupied? He will see nothing monstrous or disloyal about it.

Beginning at his own Emory College—Has it not two patronizing Conferences? The Georgians would not object to see the adjacent Florida added, and if Wofford were out of the way they would doubtless invite South Carolina to co-operate. Four Annual Conferences are united on Central College, Missouri, and five on the Texas University—the last aiming for $500,000. Does he object to this arrangement? He approves it. Even the word university does not offend him. They were not established by General Conference action, but are the result of "spontaneous action," of "individual enterprise." Now, why may not seven or eight Annual Conferences unite on the "Central University?" Indeed, we already have his consent, in part, and hold him to it:

"To the original proposition, as submitted to the Tennessee Conference, I had no special objection. As I understood it, the project was to unite the Tennessee, Memphis, the North Mississippi and North Alabama Conferences in an institution (a university) which should represent themselves—meet their local wants, and, of course, be open for general patronage. Leaving out the theological school, this scheme might work—would and ought to find favor in those boundaries."

To these let us add the three Conferences in Arkansas adjoining to the west. No matter if the "Father of Waters" does roll between, our connectional principle ought to be able to bridge it, if railroad engineers can. One of these Conferences met before the "invitations" got out, but doubtless will accept; the other two have accepted, and they may be allowed to know their own wants and wishes, notwithstanding they are on the "wrong side of the Mississippi" for the Bishop, who seems resolved to detach them from the company they have chosen.

Here, then, is a territory compact and convenient, about half the size of Texas, embracing a homogeneous population, united by currents of trade and emigration, and with the following Methodist strength, according to the latest official returns:

	Members.	L. P.
Tennessee Conference	36,475	317
Memphis ....do....	27,832	278
North Alabama ....do....	21,179	293
North Mississippi ....do....	23,176	185
Arkansas ....do....	9,530	116
Little Rock ....do....	11,015	171
White River ....do....	8,827	92

Making an aggregate of 1,452 local preachers and 144,034 members, who are served by 716 traveling preachers. Upon such a "basis" something can be done. The combination ought to achieve a high grade of scholarship, and a broad culture, and that effect would be quickening, stimulating and elevating generally. These boundaries contain none of the colleges for which the Bishop pleads; the field is clear, and the circumstances propitious, for attempting more than has yet been achieved among us. What is proposed? The first resolution of the Memphis Convention tells:

"Resolved, by the convention: 1. That measures be adopted looking to the establishment, as speedily as practicable, of an institution of learning of the highest order and upon the surest basis, where the youth of the church and country may prosecute theological, literary, scientific and professional studies to an extent as great, and in a manner as thorough, as their wants demand."

Would the Bishop have it of a low or middle order, and upon an insufficient basis? Would he have anything less extensive or thorough proposed for the benefit of the youth of our church and country?

In opposing this concentration by advising Tennessee to build, and Arkansas to build, where both could be better served, and serve the church better by combining, Bishop Pierce is opposing Bishop Pierce. I quote him against himself. The address to the General Conference of 1870, to which his name is appended, holds this language on the subject of education:

"The impolicy of multiplying colleges under the patronage of the Annual Conferences must be evident to those who are acquainted with the present condition of many of those already in existence. In wielding aright this great agency, there must be more foresight and concentration of effort and liberality. Let those institutions to which we are already committed be encouraged with increased effort to sustain and endow them. Let a higher grade of scholarship be established in them, and the most earnest spirit of religion be cultivated by officers and students. If there be those which cannot sustain the rank of collegiate establishments, they must be content with a lower position."

Surely the Bishop will not continue to oppose the first effort made to carry out his own recommendation. But it is objected that the committee went beyond their proper limits in inviting consultation and co-operation. I grant that there is plausibility in this objection, so far as the Alabama, and the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences are concerned; and, when consulted, I advised the committee against that course, on the ground that those Conferences were already committed to excellent colleges that depended on them for support, and their invitation might provoke suspicions, if not jealousies, and lead to complications. The result has justified my predictions sooner than I expected. Bishop Pierce has interpreted the act of "mere civility" with severity, not only in reference to the colleges in Alabama and Louisiana, but all others, and feels warranted in using this novel and startling figure:

"After all their struggles, labors and fruits, to say to them: 'You are weak and starving; we are going to put a big, fat trout into our Methodist pond and gulp you all down.'"

Those who did not see proper to take my advice in this matter have given me these reasons. They considered that inasmuch as the institution proposed to be established would, in addition to a literary and scientific department, have theological and professional departments, not in common with the other colleges, their friends and patrons would be interested, at least to that extent, in the Central University. And more—that a stronger endowment and patronage than had heretofore been concentrated, might enable the Central University, besides presenting all the advantages of the ordinary collegiate course as taught by others, to add a story or two to the average scholarship in its literary and scientific department; and this fact might be utilized by the friends of church education elsewhere. The Bishop may differ from the committee in his estimate of the propriety of an act which was open to misconception, and which he has unintentionally misconstrued against their cause.

We all agree with him when he declares: "High culture can never be general." But let us make it as general as possible. "It is Utopian to dream of its commonness." Even so; but shall Methodists have none of it, except such as others provide for them? "To reach it requires time, talent, money, leisure." True; and those conditions are not monopolized by others to the exclusion of our people. If any fact in education, secular or religious, is well established, it is this—that the higher forms of it nourish and control all the lower.

But here is the difficulty. The Central University provides not merely for a biblical chair, to which one professor devotes, perhaps, half his time; but for a full, thorough theological department, with all its furniture of tutors, lectures and library—a school of training for preachers, to which any of them may have access and take the whole course, or as much of it as they have taste and time and capacity for. Does not my pen touch the joint in the harness when I say that it is barely possible the Bishop's opposition is due less to a concern for the colleges that are to be killed off by the University than to the theological school, which is to come into life with it? On this I have no comfort to offer him, no compromise to suggest. The theological school is at the head and front of this scheme, and I hope it will be kept there. We need it. The church is suffering for it. May it come soon in the fullness of the blessing. He speaks out plainly:

"As to the theological school, I am against that, out and out—toto coelo. This letter is too long to discuss it now. It is proposed, I know, in a modified form, having checks and limitations. But I am afraid of the thing. It cannot be controlled. It will run into the old groove. It will encroach upon our economy at several vital points. It does not suit our system, nor our exigencies."

"The thing" would hardly suffer more in a discussion than by this summary manner of treatment. There is no defense against that line of argument. The friends of the measure may be excused from replying to objections that have been met over and over again, or that in their very nature are unanswerable; I therefore confine myself to two points—as brought out by the Bishop—the nature of his opposition to an advanced step in ministerial training, and the alternative he presents.

Speaking of recommendations on this subject, in episcopal addresses, he tells us:

"In 1870, when a similar recommendation, on ministerial training, was read in private councils, on objection made by me, after free discussion, it was ruled out. So I am consistent in the record, albeit I am 'in a small minority.'"

I have not felt at liberty to allude to anything of that sort, except what has transpired publicly. My recollection agrees with the Bishop's narrative. Since he has drawn the curtain from those councils, I may say, farther, that the original copy of the address designed for the General Conference of 1870 is before me, in the neat and careful hand of Bishop Paine, and the recommendation in favor of a theological institute was emphatic.—Bishop Pierce could not yield his objection, and finally it was ruled out—a concession to him, not to his argument. It was then suggested, I think by Bishop Andrew, to insert the paragraph of the address of 1866, on the subject, and repeat that recommendation. Bishop Pierce again objected; and when surprise was expressed, informed us that he was not there when that address was presented, and felt in no way committed to it. To leave out so important a subject from such a document would not do, and finally it was disposed of in the following non-committal paragraph:

"The proper training of young ministers is a matter of high and acknowledged importance. How this may be best and soonest accomplished will claim your most thoughtful consideration. We commend the subject to your earnest attention."

What effect a more pronounced deliverance of the College of Bishops would have had upon the deliberations of the General Conference I cannot say; but I learned afterward that some members interpreted this paragraph of the address as an intimation of indifference, if not of a backing down from the higher ground formerly taken.

Looking on the course of events, I have been led to question the expediency of those remarkable concessions in "private councils." They were made in the interest of unity and peace; but it seems impossible to avoid "a controversy" before the public, notwithstanding it appears to some to be neither "comely nor profitable." It is not enough that our beloved Bishop is not committed officially to the measure—he will not allow others to commit themselves personally. It is not enough that General Conference legislation is not invoked—he forbids "individual enterprise" in this direction. A connectional movement is yielded, and he does not like "spontaneous action." In whatever direction we move he throws himself right across the track. The unseemly controversy is thrust upon us. There is nothing left, but in the most friendly and loving, yet firm manner to withstand him.

The Bishop's candor is as admirable as his consistency, and both are unimpeachable. Give up a scheme for broader and higher literary and ministerial training in our church, and what then? We must be content with a lower and restricted sphere of usefulness. "The mission of Methodism," he lets us know, "is to the masses of society—not to the select few—a favored class." What our enemies and patronizing friends have said of us is even so—that Methodism will do very well for rude settlements and common people, but when they have become cultivated and refined we are to turn them over to other churches prepared to take charge of them! I hope to be pardoned for declaring that I am not resigned to that condition, either for myself or my brethren. I claim for Methodism a mission to all classes. "All souls are mine," saith the Lord. A church of Jesus Christ has no right to confine itself to, or exclude itself from, any class; and if any necessity appears for doing so, it is a demonstration that its ministerial training demands enlargement. The following sentence we take as applying to religious teachers among us, and is still more explicit:

"We common people hope, however, by some schooling and study, reading, thinking and observation, to be respectable, and to serve a generation, after all, not wiser than ourselves."

If we read it correctly, there is that in these words which can, dexterously handled, not only defeat the Central University with its theological school, but destroy the biblical chairs in our colleges, and the colleges themselves, and strike out of the Discipline the present Course of Study. Others have superciliously assigned us an inferior place, but this amounts to a proposition on our part humbly to accept it, and systematically to arrange for it.

A commission has been organized for revising our English Bible—a work in which all Protestant Churches are interested, and ought to be represented. British Methodism has two or three men on that commission; Northern Methodism one, and considering their strength, as compared with the denominations about them who have Andover and Princeton and other old theological schools, they ought to have more. In each case these Methodists have supplied their representatives from their theological schools. Southern Methodism has no representative in that commission. Perhaps the old prejudice against the slave region had something to do with this. But suppose we should complain, standing on the platform Bishop Pierce offers us? The commissioners could reply: "Gentlemen, you have some eloquent preachers and fervent evangelists—men who are a power among the common people—but critics are wanted for this work—scholars deeply learned in Bible lore—and by your own confession you don't produce the article. Confine yourselves to your mission among the masses, and take such a book as we make up for you."

In what I hope are concluding words for me on this subject, let me say:

1. To all the brethren.—Beware of prejudice and party feeling. They can be easily excited on this subject if anybody is unkind or thoughtless enough to appeal to them.

2. To those who do not favor the proposed University with its theological school.—If you cannot conscientiously help forward the work, we hope you will not feel obliged to hinder it.

3. To its friends.—Go forward. Opposition may delay the accomplishment of what you design for the glory of God and for Methodism, but success is sure; and when it crowns your efforts, none will rejoice over the result more sincerely than those who now honestly differ from you.

FALLING FROM GRACE.

Falling from grace! Can that be the state of any who have experienced the sweet peace and love of a faithful believer? Ah! too well do we all know the truth of the accusation. Who of us has not felt the bitter pangs of alienation from a Savior whose service was once our purest delight!—some of us to be restored to the full joy of communion with Christ; others, alas! groping in the dark, striving earnestly for enlightenment, but not finding it, until they are almost tempted to give up in despair. And why is it? What can be the cause of their unhappy state?

The want of faithful, earnest prayer; the yielding to amusements, seemingly harmless, until the soul is drawn away from devout contemplation, to be wholly engrossed with the world's pleasures. Young Christians are peculiarly liable to unhappy influences. Surrounded with temptation, in the first flush of confidence and Christian joy, they will participate in amusements that seem innocent, too confident in themselves to think they are in danger, believing that they can love and worship their Savior with as much zeal while mingling with a few friends to pass a social evening in dancing, music and conversation. Nor would it be harm, could it be confined to a social evening; but such amusement has a wonderful fascination. The first evening, wearied with the excessive dancing, which they had intended to but moderately indulge in, they either neglect the evening prayer or fall asleep with a few careless words upon their lips, their hearts filled with the evening's enjoyment. The omission of morning as well as evening prayer, or said hurriedly to attend to the day's duties, follows the next evening "social," until prayer, ceasing to be a pleasure, becomes repugnant, the attendance on the sanctuary becomes irksome, faith dies away, and the soul is completely alienated from God. It is a fact that few young Christians note, that the neglect of one prayer is dangerous, easily followed by repeated omissions—that prayer is the Christian's life. Without it there can be no progression, no guard against temptation. If there is no progression there must be retrogression; and the soul sinks into the terrible apathy of a backslider. No comfort in the duties and privileges of a Christian life, no congeniality with God's people—all darkness and hardness of heart.

O soldiers in Christ! particularly you who are but young in your Father's service, pluck from your lives the fatal cause that is hurrying you into a state of chaotic gloom. Burnish the shield of faith; steel your hearts against the fascinations which surround you by fervent, constant prayer. Lay all your doubts and fears at the feet of him who is waiting to receive them. Let your motto be "onward and upward." Remember that your actions are watched by a censorious world; that the humblest have a mighty influence for weal or woe; that your crowns may be gemmed with radiant souls. Let your lives be progressive, that in the glorious future you may hear the welcome words: "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter into the joy of your Lord."

A VOICE FROM THE PINY-WOODS.

MR. EDITOR: To contemplate the soul of man in the image of God is to rise to the sublime, inspiring, refining, and gives overpowering understanding—the inspiration of the Almighty.

The soul was a separate creation from the body. It is in part unknown spiritual substance, which had a beginning, but is eternal in duration in the image of God. This soul was associated and identified with the body of Adam; hence he is called a living soul.

Adam was put in the Garden of Eden, and was under penal law. That law he violated, and his soul, though associated with its body in the act of transgression, did not lose its immortality, spirituality, or the image of God. (The morality of the case is altogether different in principle and range of thought.) The penalty or suffering was not clothed with annihilating powers; and the soul of Adam, one hundred years after creation, was the identical, specific, created, undivided soul it was in the day of creation. Having no subordinate part, it is indivisible. Even that which is quite inferior to the soul, to wit, a mathematical point, is indivisible. The facts in the case rise above the idea of a body with its members; there is no member of the soul to receive less or more abundant honor.

The different existing forms and laws of matter show that not a particle can be lost. Its weight is the same in air, fluid or solid forms, and under different laws. What God has brought into being will ever continue to be, and be governed by the same laws. If a man loses a limb for life, he will find it again at the resurrection morn; bone will come to his bone. But under the old theory that the soul is composed of faculties, and one named the Image of God is lost by the fall of Adam—what are the facts in that case? Shall we look for this portion of man's soul, as we would that lost member of his body (his arm,) among the many forms and laws of matter, or shall we examine the heterogeneous state? or has the wandering faculty, in fright and haste, passed the door, and gone to annihilation?

Here our pure minds are stirred up by way of remembrance that matter only changes its manner of existence and laws, and is not destroyed forever, but will be forthcoming in the new heaven and in the new earth. In reply, shall we hear a voice from the fields of science by some critic, that the blind may not lead the blind?

A MAN OF SIXTY.

BROOKLYN, ALA., Feb. 12, 1872.

THE POWER OF SATAN.

As regards the power of Satan, a striking contrast exists between the material world and the spiritual world, or the world of things and that of human personalities. In the one he is utterly powerless. Against the will of God, as expressed in the movement of every star or beam of light, in the outburst of the hurricane, the growth of a flower, or the formation of a drop of dew, he can do no more than any intelligent creature, whose sole power consists in yielding obedience to God's laws regulating nature. But in the far higher and nobler world of personality it is different; for this implies will, and the awful power on the part of its possessor to choose that which may be against the will of God as truly as wrong is against right, and falsehood is against truth. It is thus that Satan, without having any power to change that world "without," which is "of the Father," may so change through sin the world "within" the spirit of man as to make the glory of the former minister to the desires of the latter, and make it the means of gratifying the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. Who can limit the extent of Satan's power within the kingdom of human spirits, devoid of principle, preferring darkness to light—"children of disobedience," who are "led captive by Satan according to his will?" And what bribes may he not be able to offer to such and by such? It may be mysterious, but it is nevertheless the fact, that the kingdoms of this world, with all their power and glory, yea, all the noblest gifts of God, have been possessed by those who are described by the apostle as "children of the devil," and who have practically acted as if they worshiped the devil, received all they had from him, and used it in his service.—Good Words.

IT IS ESTIMATED that at least six hundred thousand cattle have been driven from Texas this year into Kansas, Nebraska and the Western States. It takes about two hundred thousand head of beef to feed the Indians every year.

NO THANKS.—"If I help that man who applies to me, I shall get no thanks for it." Very likely not. And if you do good in order to get thanks for it, what are you more than the Scribes and Pharisees?

REST.

BY GEORGE HERBERT.

When God at first made man,
Having a glasse of blessings standing by,
Lord, said he, pour on him all we can
Let the world's riches, which dispersed lie,
Contract into a span.

So strength first made a way;
Then beautie flowed, then wisdom, honor, pleasure.
When almost all was out, God made a stay,
Perceiving that alone, of all his treasure,
Rest in the bottom lay.

For if I should, said he,
Bestow this jewel also on my creature,
He would adore my gifts instead of me,
And rest in nature, not the God of Nature;
So both should losers be.

Yet let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessnesse;
Let him be rich and wearie, that at least,
If goodnesse lead him not, yet wearinesse
May tosse him to my breast.

NOT YET.

BY CARL SPENCER.

When I hear souls lamenting while they pray,
That so small fruit of good in them appears,
I think of earth before her first spring-day,
When the half-trusted promise of her years
Slow in the weary waiting dies away.

I know that heaven need only stoop and smile,
To find her flowers were growing all the while.

God is more kind than sunshine, and he knows
What souls are his—more hopeful thus than we,
Who for the possible glory of a rose,
Leave in our gardens many a thorny tree;
So in this wintry world our nature grows.
What joy, if at the feast we see him stand,
And know our perfect flowering in his hand!

HISTORICAL COPIES OF THE BIBLE

Steering away from these little creeks of private narrative, with all their picturesque surroundings, for the open sea of public history; it is there, as among islands of the ocean, that we find the most fitting examples of what we mean by historical copies of the word of God. And even here, though our skiff wind among an archipelago of noble instances, we can pause to mention only three or four, as illustrations of many, that the Bible student, curious in such matters, may register in his book of common places.

1. What a dainty volume must this have been when, in its cover of royal blue velvet, it first came from the binder's hands, enriched with ornamental devices by the decorator's art! Still clearly distinguishable upon it are the badge of the principality within the quarter, surmounted by a royal coronet in silver gilt; the initials C. P., apparently improperly altered to an R.; and the badges of the Rose and Thistle. When Mr. Roach Smith wrote a description of this volume in his Collectanea Antiqua, it was in the possession of James Skene, Esq., (formerly of Rubislaw, and afterward of Oxford,) the last survivor of the six friends to whom Sir Walter Scott dedicated the respective cantos of Marmion. The interest that attaches to this volume is derived from the fact that it is believed to have been the dying gift of King Charles the First to his son, the Prince of Wales. Sir Thomas Herbert, who was in attendance upon the King, says (in his Threnodia Carolina—last two years of Charles the First:) "The King thereupon gave him his hand to kiss; having the day before been graciously pleased, under his royal hand, to give him a certificate that the said Mr. Herbert was not imposed upon him, but by his majesty made choice of to attend him in his bedchamber, and had served him with faithfulness and loyal affection. His majesty also delivered him his Bible, in the margin whereof he had, in his own hand, written many annotations and quotations, and charged him to give it to the Prince so soon as he returned." The story that it was to "honest, plain-spoken Juxon," Bishop of Winchester, that this gift was confided on the scaffold, may have been originated by the fact that after that prelate had said, "You have now but one stage more—the stage is turbulent and troublesome, but it is a very short one—it will soon carry you a very great way—it will carry you from earth to heaven;" the King gave his George to Juxon, with the single word "Remember!" It was not unnatural that afterward the idea should arise that the Bible went with the George, as indeed it may have done, having been probably intrusted to the worthy bishop for that purpose by Sir Thomas Herbert himself. Whether the son greatly profited by the father's dying bequest will be doubted by most who are at all conversant with the character of the merry monarch.

2. A remarkable contrast to the last, both in appearance and history, is presented by the field-preaching Bible of the apostolic Wesley, whose first sermon in the fields is said to have been delivered, the rain meanwhile descending in torrents, as he stood under a sycamore tree in the neighborhood of Kingswood, from that singularly appropriate text: "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven," etc. This constant companion of the great modern evangelist, a small pocket Bible, is now held, along with the "Conference seal," by the president of the Wesleyan Conference for the time being. If not a "key of office," it is a constant reminder of that great religious leader who, like his Divine Master, went out into the highways and hedges, preaching the gospel to the poor, and whom the common people heard so gladly; and who, writing to one whose style was very fine, said: "When I had been a member of the University about ten years, I wrote and talked much as you do now; but when I talked to plain to people in the castle or the town, I observed they gaped and stared. This quickly obliged me to alter my style, and adopt the language of those I spoke to. And yet there is a dignity in this simplicity which is not disagreeable to those of the highest rank." May the mission of Methodism be vigorously promoted by a practical remembrance of the use of this pocket Bible of its venerated founder!

3. Carefully preserved beneath a glass case in the British Museum, where any visitor may see it, is the volume known as the Bible of Charlemagne. This great king invited from England the learned Alcuin, made him his companion, employed him to write in the defense of orthodox Christianity, and founded an academy over which Alcuin presided. It is certainly creditable to an age essentially popish that Alcuin presented his illustrious pupil with this magnificent folio copy of the sacred Scriptures. "It is bound in velvet, the leaves are of vellum, and the writing is in double columns. Prefixed is a richly-ornamented frontispiece in gold and colors. It is enriched with four large paintings, besides seals, historical allusions, initial capitals, and emblematical devices, which well represent not only the state of the art at that early date, but also the undoubted reverence that was then paid to the Holy Scriptures." This precious manuscript was sold in 1836, by public auction in London, for £700.

4. About twenty years before this last-named Bible was brought to the hammer, i. e., in March, 1814, the library of the Rev. S. Palmer, of Hackney, was sold. Among the books then disposed of was a Bible bound in morocco, and printed by Bill & Barker. This book, put up by itself, was presently knocked down to Samuel Whitbread, Esq., for the sum of £21. So high a price for so unpretending a volume is accounted for by the fact that, along with the "Book of Martyrs," it constituted the whole library of John Bunyan during his long imprisonment in Bedford gaol. The glorious old dreamer has gone to the land where dreaming is unknown, but where the purest visions of earth are more than realized. His wish is fulfilled: "Now, just as the gates were opened to let in the men, I looked in after them, and behold, the city shone like the sun; the streets also were paved with gold, and in them walked many men, with crowns on their heads, palms in their hands, and golden harps, to sing praises withal. There were also of them that had wings, and they answered one another without intermission, saying, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord! And after that they shut up the gates; which when I had seen, I wished myself among them." He has realized his dream, of which the record remains, "as natural as Shakespeare, as familiar as Robinson Crusoe, and as idiomatic as the Authorized Version, the spring and fountain of the glorious dreamer's inspiration; it has been read with avidity wherever the English language is spoken, and has been translated into more than thirty languages besides—an honor paid to no other book, the book of God alone excepted."

5. On some accounts a copy of the Bible now to be described is yet more interesting than those already referred to. It is with this Bible that the name of William Bowyer is associated, and hence it is known as the "Bowyer Bible." This William Bowyer, having procured a copy of Macklin's edition of the Bible (so called from the Macklin's of Fleet street, engravers, though it was printed and published by Thomas Bensley, who died in 1835,) occupied the leisure of nearly thirty years in illustrating it. From every part of Europe he obtained original drawings, etchings and engravings relating to biblical subjects. This collection also included the best Scripture atlases; but its most original features were two hundred drawings by Lauthorbourg. Thus, for all these years, he advanced in his work, bringing into requisition every artist, from Michael Angelo and Raffaelle to Reynolds and West, whose Scripture subjects had been engraved. His Bible, interleaved with these seven thousand illustrations, including examples from nearly six hundred different engravers, expanded to forty-five folio volumes, and is said, with its costly binding and an oak cabinet to contain it, to have cost him four thousand guineas, and to have been insured in the Albion Fire Office for £3,000. William Bowyer at length died, and his Bible having been disposed of by lottory, for the benefit of his daughter, became the prize of a Somersetshire farmer. Since then it has passed into various hands in succession, and is now the property of Mr. Robert Heywood, of Bolton, by whom it was purchased, in 1856, at the sale of the extensive library of Mr. Albinson, of the same town, for £550. "Ponderous as such a work must be for any private library, it would nevertheless be a pity that so unique a collection should ever be broken up and scattered."—Gray's Bible Lore.

PULPIT PECULIARITIES.

"A parson," writes George Herbert, "is the deputy of Christ for the reducing of man to the obedience of God." He further quaintly adds: "His apparel is plain but reverend, and clean without spots or dust; the purity of his mind breaking out and dilating itself, even to his body, clothes an habitation." This remark of Herbert probably originated the saying that "cleanliness is next to godliness," which has been ascribed to John Wesley.

Some regard the clerical profession with a blind, superstitious reverence—these are the victims of priestcraft. There are others, with equal absurdity, who deem it the asylum of infatuation and indolence—these are the skeptical and profane. A third class are those who appreciate its worth, and who venerate the sacred office, regarding it as Heaven's expedient for securing the moral elevation and happiness of the race; an institution of the highest importance to man's present and eternal well-being.

That the embassy with which the Christian minister is charged is one of difficulty, is undeniable, for it has to contend against the moral forces constantly in operation in the human heart, which are antagonistic to its claims. Yet the sacredness of its sanctions may well fire the zeal of its advocate, and render him superior to all opposition.

Among the early Christians the modern style of preaching was reversed; the preacher generally delivered his exhortation in a sitting posture, while the congregation heard him standing. Chrysostom preached in this manner.

It is related even of Constantine the Great that he did not resume his seat during a long sermon by Eusebius, and that all the assembly followed his example.

The old English name, parson, is supposed to be a corruption of person, the person—by eminence. Fuller remarks that the Scriptures give four names to Christians, taken from the four cardinal graces: Saints, for their holiness; believers, for their faith; brethren, for their love; disciples, for their knowledge.

The clergy were originally styled clerks, from the Norman custom of their judges being chosen from the sacred order. In the first century they were distinguished by the titles of presbyters and bishops. Church music is supposed to have been first introduced by Gregory the Great, A. D. 602. Church steeples were originally parochial fortresses.

Sydney Smith thus defines the object of preaching: "It is constantly to remind mankind of what mankind is constantly forgetting; not to supply the defects of human intelligence, but to fortify the feebleness of human resolutions; to recall mankind from the by-paths where they turn, into the path of salvation, which all know, but few tread."

The aims and topics of the pulpit have been eloquently condensed by Talfourd. We transcribe the passage:

"The subjects of the pulpit have never been varied from the day the Holy Spirit visibly descended on the first advocates of the gospel in tongues of fire. They are in no danger of being exhausted by frequency; or changed with the vicissitudes of mortal fortune. They have immediate relation to that eternity the idea of which is the living soul of all poetry and art. It is the province of the preacher of Christianity to develop the connection between this world and the next, to watch over the beginning of a course that will endure forever, and to trace the broad shadows cast from imperishable realities on the shifting scenery of earth. The mysteries of our being, life and death, both in their strange essences and in their sublimer relation, are topics of their ministry. There is nothing affecting in the human conditions, nothing majestic in the affections, nothing touching in the instability of human dignities, the fragility of loveliness, or the heroism of self-sacrifice, which is not a theme suited to their high purposes. It is theirs to dwell on the oldest history of the world, on the beautiful simplicity of the patriarchal age, on the stern and awful religion and marvelous story of the Hebrews, on the character, miracles and death of the Savior, on all the wonders and all the beauty of the Scriptures."—Salad for the Solitary.

The minister who divides his discourses into too many heads will find it difficult to procure attentive ears for all of them.

SCOTTISH ANECDOTES.

Dr. Norman Macleod was on a Highland loch when a storm came on which threatened serious consequences. Dr. Macleod, himself a large, powerful man, was accompanied by a clerical friend of diminutive size and small appearance, who began to speak seriously to the boatmen of their danger, and proposed that all present should join in prayer. "Na, na," said the chief boatman; "let the little une gang to pray, but first the big une mann tak an oar."

A Scottish piper was once passing through a deep forest. In the evening he sat down to take his supper. He had hardly begun, when a number of hungry wolves, prowling about for food, collected round him. In self-defense the poor man began to throw pieces of his victuals to them, which they greedily devoured. When he had disposed of all, in a fit of despair he took his pipes and began to play. The unusual sound terrified the wolves, which, one and all, took to their heels and scampered off in every direction; on observing which Sandy quietly remarked: "An I'd kenned ye liket the pipes sae weel I'd a gien ye a spring afore supper."

A Scotch minister had been preaching against covetousness and the love of money, and had frequently repeated how "the love of money was the root of all evil." Two old bodies walking home from church—one said: "An wasna the minister strang upo' the money?" "Nae donbt," said the other, rather hesitatingly; and added, "ay, but it's grund to hae the wee bit siller in your haund when ye gang an errand."

An honest Highlander, a genuine lover of sneeshin, at the door of a hotel observed a magnificent man in full tartans, and noticed with much admiration the wide dimensions of his nostrils in a fine upturned nose. He accosted him, and, as his most complimentary act, offered him his mull for a pinch. The stranger drew up, and rather haughtily said: "I never take snuff." "Oh," said the other, "that's a peety, for there's grand accommodation!"

"What, no further!" said the minute-hand to the hour-hand of the time-piece. "Why, I have been all round the dial since we parted, and there are you just one figure from the place where I left you." "And yet I have done as much work in the time as you have," answered the hour-hand. "How do you make that out?" asked the other, as he advanced to pass him. "So," was the reply. "Your journey all round, and mine from figure to figure, are each an hour's value; all are not able to arrive at the same conclusion with the same ease and readiness. But this is no fault on either side; only they who fancy, because they are always in a bustle, that they are doing the work of the whole world, are mistaken, and plume themselves on an importance and superiority by no means belonging to them. If you were to creep like me, the day would last nobody knows how long; and if I were to gallop like you, it would be over before it had well begun!"

A New Profession.—In a trial in London, the other day, a witness described himself as of a profession or trade of the existence of which neither his lordship nor the barristers in court seemed to be aware. The witness said: "I am an early caller." "An early caller! what's that?" "Why," replied the man, "I calls different tradesmen at early hours, from one till half-past five in the morning, and that is how I makes my living. I gets up between twelve and one, I goes to bed at six, and I sleeps till the afternoon." "But surely you don't call any person as early as one o'clock?" "Yes; I calls bakers between one and two; but I ain't had no bakers on my lists for the last two months. The bakers is the earliest of all!" What a view of life in London! What ways there are of making a living in that vast city! Only think of the trade of "early caller," and a man of about five-and-twenty settling down to it.

A late number of the Reformed Messenger contains the following incident:

"Not long since a son of an esteemed clergyman of the Reformed Church was married to a lady who held membership in an Episcopal church. Her pastor was invited to unite with the father of the groom in the marriage ceremony, but declined to do so. He assigned to others as the ground of the refusal that he could not recognize the official position of the father of the young man! and subsequently had the effrontery to visit the young bride, and to tell her that she was not married!"

The enormous conceit and sectarian impudence of this inflated fellow, says the Lutheran Observer, are not often surpassed, and all parties concerned should have dealt with him according to his folly, as enjoined in Prov. xxvi, 5.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Sabbath.—A congregation of Israelites in Chicago have given up the Jewish Sabbath, and observe the Christian, on the first day of the week.

What Ladies are Doing.—It is stated that the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church has appropriated $37,000 for the current year. The amount raised last year was $22,397.

Persecution.—Shocking details are given of the persecution of the Jews in Roumania. Their lives and property are ruthlessly destroyed, and they are fleeing the country to escape their oppressors.

A new edition of Adam Clarke's Commentary on the Old and New Testaments is about being published in London. It will be pruned of a large amount of extraneous matter, and will embody, in popular style, the latest researches in biblical criticism.

A Memorial Church in Washington city is in process of erection by the Lutherans, Rev. Dr. Butler, chaplain of the House, being its pastor. It is to be a free church—commodious, chaste, commanding—an ornament to the city, not exceeding in its aggregate cost about $75,000.

Legal Visitation to Convents.—A vigorous movement is on foot in Great Britain to secure a legal visitation of all convents. It is curious, if true, and its truth is asserted, that in Protestant England and America the convent is more free from all governmental interference or control than in Roman Catholic countries.

From the published official reports of last year's "Peter's pence," which, every one knows, is a perpetual subscription in all countries in aid of the Holy See, it appears that North America gave about three millions of francs, or $600,000. In Europe, Belgium stands at the head of the list, France having fallen behind.

A Sign of Promise.—The missionaries of the United Presbyterian Church in Egypt have recently ordained Tadrus Yusef the first native pastor, and installed him over the church at Nakhaileh. Three years ago there were only two or three Christians there; at a recent communion twenty-two were added to the church, and its membership is now larger than any congregation in Egypt.

A letter from Rome, in the Paris Débats, states that the Pope recently ordered a solemn triduum (a three days' service) to be celebrated in St. Peter's, by way of reparation to St. Peter and St. Paul for the doubts expressed a short time since as to their residence in Rome. The ceremony commenced on the eighth instant, and was attended, it is estimated, by from eight to ten thousand persons. They are described as appearing to belong to the upper and middle classes. The members of the various religious bodies were in ecclesiastical dress.

Mission Among the French Canadians.—The conductors of the Grand Ligne mission in Canada report that the past year was the most encouraging and successful for twenty years. In their different stations forty-five persons have entered into the church, many of whom were recently Roman Catholics. In one place ten Romanists, heads of families, sent in their resignations to the priests, thus avowing their intention to accept the pure gospel. In the Feller Institute there are over forty pupils, the largest number they have ever had, and at Grand Ligne the school is as full as they can accommodate.

Religion No Test For Office.—Prince Bismarck neither fears nor favors the papal power which other rulers are so anxious to conciliate. A member of Parliament complained that the German Catholics were not allowed their proportionate share of public offices. Bismarck replied that there was no special state religion in their country, and that every other religious body had as much right to claim office as the Catholics, "the Lutherans as well as the Jews," and added: "I have found that it is just the latter who are the most distinguished by their special intelligence and capacity for administrative work."

Mr. Van Meter has gone to Rome to establish a branch of the Howard Mission, and the Catholic Telegraph refers to him in the following language, which is more of a threat than a prediction: "Van Meter need not fear the vengeance of the enslaved Catholics of Rome; but he has reason to dread the stiletto of some revolutionist, who, if he has abandoned God, may still love his children and his country. Men who have no scruple about the murder of an innocent fellow-being will not be very merciful to a prowling wolf. It would not surprise us to learn that Van Meter had gone to Rome in search of a just reward and to prepare his own funeral."

Tartar Schools.—It is a mistake to suppose that heathenism is without schools. China has an elaborate system of education sustained by the State. There is a school in Turkish countries connected with every mosque. And even in that wild and comparatively unknown region in Asia occupied by the various tribes of Tartars, there are village schools. But in all these schools alike, the Chinese, the Mohammedan and the Tartar schools, no progress is made. Children are not taught to think for themselves. They are taught to accept what their fathers have believed before them, without questioning.—The Christian Weekly.

Saved by a Woman.—The Congregational church at Sandown, New Hampshire, which was organized in 1750, has had no pastor or stated supply since 1800. It had become reduced to one member—a woman. During the past year or two students from Andover Theological Seminary have preached occasionally in the town, and their labors have resulted in some "hopeful conversions." The converts, together with Christians who have taken up their residence in the town, desired to be united in a church, and, with the single remaining member of the old church, called a council February 9, which declared that the original church still exists in the one representative, and they examined and propounded several persons for admission to the same.

The Rev. Alexander Williamson, D. D., presents the following view showing the relative importance of China as a field for missionary labor: "Suppose no China, and suppose that the Chinamen were distributed over the whole world—Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Australia, and the isles of the sea—every third man you should meet would be a Chinaman, and every third house a Chinese dwelling! Speak of Jamaica—why there are more people in Pekin than in the whole island; or of the Samoan Islands, a most promising group of the South seas, with its 35,000 people; that would only be a little bit of a city in China. There are a dozen cities, within a few days' journey of Chefoo, in which there are as many, and in several instances double that population. Speak of Madagascar, with its 4,000,000 or 5,000,000—that is only one-seventh of the population of the province in which it is my privilege to dwell."

Persecution of the Jews.—A correspondent writes to the London papers: "The latest news from Roumania is truly heartrending. Great as have been the cruelties committed at Ismail, they were by far exceeded by the horrors perpetrated at Cahul. This is a town with a population of about seven thousand, one thousand of whom are Jews. These were suddenly set upon by their fellow-townsmen, and for three days beaten, wounded, plundered, driven out of their houses, which were battered to ruins and the tenants forced to take refuge in the barracks, where, instead of being defended, they were allowed again to be beaten, and for several days left without food. One of the sufferers, named Gold, more courageous than the other victims, defended his house for three days, his four sons standing by him. He made them swear that, should he fall, they would continue to fight. The bands surrounding his house were for a considerable time held at bay by these brave men, but they were at last compelled to give way, as the villains set fire to the premises. The two synagogues were devastated and polluted, and the sacred objects found scattered in all directions."

The Wesleyan Missionary Society. At the November meeting of their General Committee the secretaries reported that a telegram had been received from Rev. Mr. Piggott, the superintendent of their Italian mission, stating that difficulties in reference to premises in Rome were removed, and that, as competitors were in the market, it was desirable that the agreement to buy should be closed without delay. The sub-committee had agreed to send an authorization to purchase. The committee approved of this action and resolved to send a deputation to Rome to survey the premises, the report to be given at a future meeting.

To Raise Moneys.—The Rev. William Arthur and James Budgett, Esq., were requested to visit the provinces and solicit subscriptions to pay off the society's debt, and to raise the money required for Rome and Naples.

Testimony in Relation to the Mission in Rome.—"Dr. Walker, a competent witness, writes to Rev. William Arthur that, having just returned from Rome, the first person he met with was Sciarrelli, the Italian missionary of the Wesleyans. He is not obstructively sectarian, has a lively way of ministering the word, and a real love for sinners. All zealous Christians must rejoice that he is laboring in Rome in the cause of our Redeemer. I myself labored in Tuscany from 1847 to 1853, during a period of tribulation, and my interest in Italy, and, I may add, my former experience, will, I hope, be accepted as my apology for addressing this to you."

WOMEN TO THE FRONT.

Besides the awkward and perplexing question of electing a negro Bishop, the General Conference at Brooklyn is likely to be pestered by the woman agitation. Considerable alarm was excited by the recognition of female laborers in the India appointments, which the Northwestern states and explains:

The annual lists of appointments in India Conference this year include the names of several ladies, as follows:

Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.—Bareilly: Miss Swain, medical missionary; Miss Sparkes, in charge of Educational Department Girls' Orphanage. Lucknow: Miss Thoburn, Miss Tinsley. Moradabad: Miss McMillan.

The friends of these unmarried ladies in the United States very naturally will want to know where the unmarried lady missionaries are laboring. The regular Conference list contains the appointments of ministers, and by a very natural inference the whereabouts of their wives is ascertained. In the present instance the paragraph occurs merely by courtesy. It will not occur in the regular Conference Minutes in answer to the sixteenth disciplinary question.

This act of "courtesy" is all well enough, but the good sisters may make something else of it after awhile. As they voted by General Conference authority on the plan of lay representation, why should they not have a hand in church legislation, and be eligible to every office and position, including the episcopacy?

Not long ago a convention of women was held in St. Louis, the object and result of which was to petition the General Conference to confer orders upon women, and to admit them into the regular work of the ministry. In New England, as is most fit, the movement is advancing rapidly. The organ of progress, Zion's Herald, gives us such items as these:

The Wilbraham delegate to the New England Electoral Conference is Mrs. John Wesley Bliss, a very competent representative, who would make a fine appearance on the General Conference floor.

The Quarterly Conferences at Newburyport, Massachusetts, at their meetings, followed the example set by Wilbraham, and elected as their delegates to the Lay Conference at Worcester two ladies. Washington street sends Mrs. Eliza A. Parsons, and Purchase street Mrs. Harriet A. Currier.

The Boston Preachers' Meeting have lately been discussing the ecclesiastical status of women, with much ability. Drs. Clark, Lindsey and Newhall, and Rev. Mark Trafton, made the chief arguments. All the speakers conceded the right of woman to preach; they differed only as to her ordination.

We are surprised that our friends at the Hub should stickle about the matter of ordination—that is, about the shadow, when the substance is so unanimously conceded. But these ladies from Wilbraham and Newburyport have voted for lay representation, and they are also to vote for delegates. The committee on credentials may wink at the matter, but in some shape, by petition or otherwise, the subject will come before the Conference, and be ventilated more or less. The sisterhood are by no means to be satisfied with the right to vote and preach. They must have orders, official position, and such ecclesiastical recognition as shall make them the peers of the brotherhood in the church. In the same sense that there is neither bond nor free in Christ, there is neither male nor female. Conditions social, political and sexual are all obliterated. There is absolute equality of rights, privileges and authority, and a clamorous sisterhood are determined to force the recognition of their just and godly claims upon the great council of the church.

Paul would seem to be somewhat in their way, but he said some hard things about servants. Therefore away with him. Ungallant apostle that he was! "Let your women keep silence in the churches." What an unreasonable man for one pretending to be inspired! And the explanation is worse: "But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve." The venerable fathers of the Methodist Episcopal Church did not allow patriarchs, prophets or apostles to hamper them much in their action on slavery, and in dealing with the woman question Paul will not be in their way. If the thing is politic and expedient, an apostle's extravagant style of putting the subject will be easily disposed of. But then the expediency—whereunto will this thing grow? They have, however, declared for female suffrage in the Church, and in the State also to a considerable extent. Where and how are they to put on the brakes, and to draw the line where this tidal wave of feminine zeal and radical folly is to be stayed?

God has himself defined the position and relations of woman. In nature and in revelation his language is clear enough; but radicalism is the renunciation and defiance of moral obligation. Constitutional morality has been cut up by the roots, so that no civil compacts are binding. In political plans and in the maintenance of sectional supremacy all constitutional barriers have been broken down. In ecclesiastical matters the Methodist Episcopal Church kept a solemn contract only so far as the Supreme Court compelled it to do so. The question which now agitates the church and society about women's rights springs up in such a moral soil as this. It is a part of "the great falling away," which manifests itself in religion and in politics. The foundations of moral obligation are loosened, and there is no conscience left. Nature and the Bible have settled the question long ago; but having cast the rein upon the neck, and proclaimed a general emancipation from authority, this and everything else is given over to the drift and caprice of public opinion. Circumstances have changed since the Scriptures touched upon the rights and relations of women in the church. So it was argued concerning another great social question, and so, we suppose, the violations of church compacts and political constitutions are to be explained and vindicated. The Bible is to be obeyed when it is perfectly agreeable, and to be consulted when convenient. All authority and obligation, however, are to give way when they conflict with our supposed interests and the advanced ideas of modern progress. Women coming to the front in the present style is but a symptom; a single manifestation, in a series of phenomena which has sprung from a common parentage—the renunciation of the authority of God and of moral obligation.

The New Orleans District Conference met at the Felicity Street church on Wednesday, the tenth instant, at half-past seven P. M., and adjourned at a late hour on Friday night. Reports were made by the pastors of their several charges, and the various interests of the district were examined and discussed with considerable thoroughness.—The camp meeting enterprise has so far been determined upon that a board of trustees has been appointed, with instructions to purchase a certain plot of ground near Biloxi, and to go forward in holding a camp meeting as soon as practicable. The debt on the Depository building, 112 Camp street, was brought before the conference, and a committee was appointed and authorized to raise collections and solicit subscriptions for its speedy payment. The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, William H. Foster, John H. Keller and Edward Booth. Reserves: Dr. J. J. Lyons, John L. Dunnica and R. M. Walmsley. The next conference is to be held at Baton Rouge.

Bishop Keener presided over the conference, very much to the satisfaction of the body, and contributed greatly to the interest and profit of the occasion by his presence and counsels.

In a Destitute Condition.—The Pope is always making a poor mouth, and especially since he has ceased to be a temporal prince has he complained of poverty and imprisonment. His friends cannot well overstate his wretchedness and want, and the pinching necessities of his penniless condition. The disclaimer of Peter made at the gate called Beautiful applies with pitiful emphasis to his humble successor. "Silver and gold have I none," is the mournful plaint of the holy father. The stater which Peter took from the fish's mouth would be a most opportune boon to the prisoner of the Vatican. And why not go a fishing, as Peter did, in this impecunious exigency? We can well believe that the Pope is suffering when, in addition to house rent, the free use of other church property, and the millions flowing in from the faithful as gifts to their impoverished head, the Italian government has issued a decree ordering that "the Holy See" shall receive in perpetuity from the public treasury annually only three million two hundred and twenty-five thousand francs, a beggarly pittance in our currency of barely $645,000 in gold. Such facts as these ought to stir up the generous sympathies of those who are capable of being touched by the extremest instances of human suffering.

ANOINTED TO PREACH.

We find the following in our Northern Methodist exchanges.—There are many conditions and circumstances under which a preacher may fill positions like that occupied by Mr. Steele, but it is rarely the case that an effective preacher is not crippled by assuming work out of the regular pastorate.

Rev. Daniel Steele has written his resignation of the vice presidency of Syracuse University. In a note to the Syracuse Journal he says: "My resignation has been written for more than two months, awaiting the next meeting of the Board of Trustees in June next. The sole motive is the fact that the Lord has anointed me to preach the gospel. This recent anointing has so drawn my attention almost exclusively to Christian themes, and to efforts for the salvation of my fellow-men, that I find myself constantly exhausting my energies in this kind of labor. In this state of the facts, I have deemed it best for the University and for myself that I should devote myself to the Christian pastorate, for which my soul has an unappeasable hunger, and that I should not rob the University by serving her with a divided heart."

A Concert is to be given at Odd Fellows' Hall in this city, on the night of the twenty-fifth instant, for the benefit of the Young Men's Christian Association. We acknowledge the reception of complimentary tickets. The rooms of the association are at No. 82 Camp street, where they have a well-furnished reading room, supplied with a very good library, and with the leading papers and periodicals of the day. The organization appears to be well conducted, and is doing much good. A prayer meeting is held every Saturday night, to which the public are cordially invited. We earnestly urge all to give the association their liberal encouragement and support.

A New Sunday School Tune Book.

Dr. Haygood has prepared a new book, which will soon be issued by the Publishing House at Nashville. Dr. Summers speaks of it as follows:

The Emerald is the taking title of the new Sunday school tune book prepared by our excellent Sunday school secretary and his faithful co-laborer in this department, Bro. McIntosh. They did us the honor to take us into their counsels in regard to the admission and rejection of music and hymns, so that we are prepared to give an opinion concerning the merits of the work. We consider it the best book of its class we have seen. The style is popular, but care has been taken to exclude pieces of a trifling sort, and such as contain erroneous sentiment. The work is eclectic—the best tunes have been selected from various sources, and a great many new pieces composed expressly for it. We wrote a song or two, by request, to suit some music which the compilers desired to insert, and they have set music to one or two hymns for children which we wrote years ago, that are in the Sunday-school hymn book, which unexpected compliment we duly appreciate. The subjects of the hymns are varied, so as to suit all Sunday school occasions. We advise all our friends who have sung through the Amaranth, and want another work of the sort, to forward their orders for the Emerald, and they will be filled as soon as it comes off the press and out of the bindery, which will be in a short time.

The Best Paper File.—The Eclipse Paper File, manufactured at Livingston, Alabama, is the thing we have long wanted, and to our mind the best we have yet found. We fully indorse the following paragraph from the circular of the Eclipse Paper File Company:

These files are in many respects superior to any others; but their chief excellence consists in the fact that they file papers in such a manner that the pages (no matter how many) of each number follow consecutively. The old abomination of straddling papers across a stick need no longer tax the patience and temper of readers, nor deter them from securing a photograph of the times by preserving files of the newspapers of the day.

On our second page will be found the response of Bishop McTyeire on the Central University question. We can well afford to leave the subject to such representative men as Bishop Pierce and himself. We have published such articles as have been sent us on the theological school, and are desirous that both sides should have a full and fair hearing. The mature and final decision of the church, we doubt not, will be in wisdom, and satisfactory to the great majority of our people.

Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, pastor of the church at Baton Rouge, was in the city last week in attendance upon the District Conference. The reports from his important charge were encouraging, and his presence among us was pleasant and refreshing in the highest degree to his many friends in New Orleans. Bro. Goodwyn is an alumnus of the McGehee church and Sunday school.

We were right glad to meet Prof. W. H. N. Magruder at the District Conference. He came, of course, from the Baton Rouge church. Prof. Magruder is also one of our representative educators, and he is widely known as the principal and proprietor of the Baton Rouge Collegiate Institute. There are no better schools in the country for a thorough classical education for boys.

The Observer, published at Cattettsburg, Kentucky, has changed its name to the Central Methodist, and has changed its form to an eight-page sheet. We congratulate Bro. Meek on the adoption of the new name, and on the handsome new dress of his always excellent journal.

Revival at Randolph Macon College.—It gives us pleasure to announce, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of April 4, that there is a deep religious feeling among the students at Randolph Macon.

Afternoon prayer meetings are held daily in the chapel from five to six o'clock, which are well attended by students and citizens. Several have been happily converted, and others are still penitent. Let the church pray that all the young men now at the college may be converted and brought into the church of God. While we give of our money to institutions of learning, we should not withhold our prayers.

REV. LEONIDAS R. REDDING.

The second Quarterly Conference for Hazlehurst station, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, was held March 30, 1872. Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, presiding elder, was present.

Upon asking the tenth question, Who have died? Rev. P. A. Johnston, preacher in charge, announced the death of Rev. Leonidas R. Redding, and upon his motion a committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions for the adoption of the Quarterly Conference. E. G. Cooke, John Dunning and J. P. Holmes were appointed, and reported as follows:

"The death of Bro. Redding, just announced, though expected, is none the less the source of unfeigned sorrow. He had established a claim upon our warmest regards by traits of character which must be appreciated wherever found to exist. His mind was naturally the equal of others, and was cultivated beyond that of men generally. His counsel in our church was of great value, because he thought upon subjects involving its interest, and could express very clearly his convictions, and was always free to make them known. As a minister, without enthusiasm, he had a zeal according to knowledge. His permanent residence among us, and consequent connection with our station, gave pleasing hope of advantage to our church, and, we may say, to our community, over whom he had just been elected to preside as mayor of our town. This early termination, by his death, of all our expectations, in the increasing estimation in which he was held, and in the meridian of his life, requires that we accept this dispensation of Providence in the Christian's faith; that while we know not now, we shall know hereafter. The official members of the Methodist Church in Hazlehurst condole with those more nearly related to him by ties of nature, and express our sympathy for them in their great and irreparable loss.

"We direct our secretary to give a copy of these resolutions to the wife and send one to his father, and also cause their publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and the Copiahan, published in our town."

The resolutions were unanimously adopted. E. G. Cooke, Sec'y.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Bible Music. Being variations in many keys on musical themes from Scripture. By Francis Jacox, B. A. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1872.

A handsomely bound duodecimo, 323 pages, on cream-tinted paper. Quaint, nervous, picturesque in style, and devout, humorous and pathetic in tone, as occasion requires. The author's text is Bible music; but he treats of all music, scriptural, classical, historical, natural and artistic. The philosophy, poetry and literature of the subject are presented with the richest vestures of word-painting, and in a manner to attract and instruct. The anecdotes, personal delineations and literary curiosities in the text and copious foot-notes, are as rare as they are entertaining. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

A Commentary, Critical, Experimental and Practical, on the Old and New Testaments. By the Rev. Robert Jamison, D. D., St. Paul's, Glasgow; Rev. A. R. Fausset, A. M., St. Cuthbert's, York; and Rev. David Brown, D. D., professor of theology, Aberdeen. Volume 1. Genesis—Deuteronomy. By Rev. Robert Jamison, D. D. 8vo., pp. 715. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

This is a standard work, which has been before the public for several years. The first edition was in duodecimo, the second was in one large and unwieldy volume. The present edition is better for convenience and reference. The volumes will not be too large for easy use and the notes are clear and in good-sized type. The publishers have left nothing to be desired in this new edition of a valuable work. Paper, type and binding are all excellent. Volume 1, just issued, covers a very important and interesting portion of the Old Testament. Several volumes are to follow this. Volume 1 is for sale by R. J. Harp, at the Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Music and Morals. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis, M. A. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872.

This work is written in a flowing and ornate style, but is not wanting in vigorous thought and industrious research. The author displays a good deal of learning, and announces some rather dubious and startling conclusions. The book is well worth the reading, and contains a great deal of interesting information. Mr. Haweis maintains that music is solely the creation of man, and not to be found in nature. He affirms that "there is no music in nature, neither harmony nor melody," and that true music, as distinguished from the rude attempts of the past, is only about one hundred years old. The book has four parts: philosophical, biographical, instrumental and critical. Duodecimo, 478 pages. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

History of Methodism in Texas. By Rev. Homer S. Thrall, of the Texas Conference. Houston: E. H. Cushing, publisher, 1872.

The author modestly intimates that his work is scarcely more than a contribution to the materials out of which the history of Methodism in Texas is to be written. He has, however, produced a work of great value and of thrilling interest, which every Methodist will be fortunate to possess and read. The work is timely. If it had been postponed much longer, much of the data here embodied would have been lost beyond recovery. The early planting of Methodism in Texas abounds in romantic incidents and heroic adventures, and many of those who led in the work were characters of grand proportions, and representative men in talent, cultivation and piety. Fowler, Rutor and Richardson are names reverenced throughout American Methodism. We heartily thank the publisher for a copy of this most interesting volume.

Friendly Talks on Church Union. Between a Northern and a Southern Methodist is a capital little pamphlet just issued by our Publishing House at Nashville. The colloquies originally appeared in the Nashville Advocate. Their publication in the present form will doubtless be of use in some sections. The subject of union is most ably handled, and ought to end the matter where it is not already dismissed from the thoughts of Methodists, either North or South.

Starkweather's Sunday School Geography, published by U. D. Ward, New York, is a desirable work for Sunday schools. It is a sacred geography, made up of maps and questions, and will prove a convenience to ministers and Bible students generally. A pronouncing gazetteer is appended, which will be appreciated by those who wish for an authority of convenient reference.

The Contemporary Review for March has articles on the English Land Question; Dean Stanley in Edinburg; Science and Immortality, Henry Ward Beecher; The State—the Government, and Scientific Morality; John Hookham Frere; Social Forces of the Hour.

We have received the Minutes of the South Carolina Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held at Spartanburg, South Carolina, December 13 to 18, 1871—a pamphlet prepared with care, and published in handsome style.

The March number of Good Words for the Young is splendidly illustrated, as usual, and among other articles of merit contains: The Great Dutch Admirals; The Traveling Menagerie; A Night with Glass-Blowers, and Gutta-Percha Willie.

Barne's Notes on Second Corinthians, Harper's new edition, has been laid on our table. A convenient 12mo of 367 pages, in the style and binding of the volumes already noticed. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

The St. Paul's Magazine for March contains: Septimus; Two Pen-and-Ink Sketches; The False Demetrius; People and People's Looks; Colonel Shark; Tennyson's Charm; Off the Skelligs; The Law and the Lyre.

Littell's Living Age of March 30 contains: Lanfrey's Napoleon the First; French Food; The Next Phase of the American Difficulty, and other articles, besides poetry and short articles.

Old and New for this month affords a good table of contents—good in point of literary quality and variety, but not good in doctrine.

The National Sunday School Teacher for April, accompanied by the Sunday School Scholar and the Little Folks, has been received.

The Little Corporal for April is handsomely illustrated, and contains the usual amount of excellent reading matter for the young.

We have received the April number of the American Agriculturist and the Household, both the best of periodicals in their line.

A Question.—A lady had written on a card, and placed on the top of an hour-glass in her garden-house, the following verse from a rural poet; it was when the flowers were in full bloom.

"To think of summers yet to come
That I am not to see!
To think a weed is yet to bloom
From dust that I shall be!"

The next morning she found the following lines in pencil, on the back of the same card:

"To think when heaven and earth are gone,
And times and seasons o'er,
When all that can die shall be dead,
That I must die no more!
Oh! where will then my portion be?
Where shall I spend ETERNITY?"

Well would it be if all would ponder the question.

Your best friend or your worst enemy will often be found in yourself.

Married.

At the residence of the bride's father, in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, April 2, 1872, by Rev. Joseph W. Mellock, Mr. ALBERT S. MCELWEE to Miss LETTIE HUFF.

Obituaries.

DIED, at Fitler's Landing, Issaquena county, Mississippi, on Sunday, April 7, at six o'clock P. M., MRS. ELIZA L. FITLER, aged thirty-seven years, wife of Dr. Charles A. Fitler, and late widow of the Rev. C. J. Hallberg.

After a long and painfull illness, death came at last.

She leaves to mourn her untimely death a husband and five little children. May the Good Shepherd, who tempers the winds to the shorn lamb, be mindful of the claims of this sorely-afflicted family.

DIED, at the residence of her husband, in Tuskaloosa county, on the evening of February 18, 1872, MARY JANE HOLMES, second daughter of Mr and Mrs. T. K. Oliver. She was born March 5, 1848, and united in marriage to Mr. W. T. Holmes April 20, 1870. At the early age of fourteen she professed the religion of Jesus Christ, and united herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Wesley chapel, now embraced in Northport circuit. She lived a bright and shining Christian, exerting a strong religious influence, discharging faithfully all her religious duties, and with her husband was a faithful, constant teacher in the Sabbath school. She was a dutiful daughter, a loving wife, and was a mother only nine days. In short, she was a lady and a Christian. Her place in the Sabbath school, in the hearts of her friends and relatives, and around the hearthstone can never be filled. When told by her friends that she could live but a short time, she called around her death-bed, separately, each of her friends and relatives, and exacted a promise from them to meet her in heaven. After obtaining a promise from each of them, her face brightened up, and with a countenance beaming with joy she exclaimed: "Death has no sting for me! How happy to leave this world of trouble, and live with my Master! My dear husband, I bequeath you this Bible, given to me by my father; my mother, (after kissing and naming her little infant,) I give you my babe. Please bring it up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and have sing over my grave:

'Oh, that will be joyful, joyful,
When we meet to part no more,'" etc.

Much more might be said in her praise. Her death was so triumphant and her evidences so clear that it places it out of the reach of doubt, on the part of those who witnessed the same. Some who were present had been disposed, when reading notices of triumphant deaths, to conclude that they perhaps were too highly colored; but when they witnessed her death they were ready to say of a truth: "A Christian may die even in sight of heaven."

She leaves a husband, a sweet little babe, a father, mother, sisters, brother, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. But their loss is her eternal gain; and while they sorrow, they "sorrow not as others who have no hope." May the Lord sustain and keep the bereaved friends, and finally bring them all to heaven together,

J. G. GURLEY.

DIED, in Mobile, February 27, 1872, FANNIE, youngest daughter of Darcy W. Bott, in the sixteenth year of her age.

The subject of this brief notice was one of those quiet, gentle, lovely characters that must be known to be appreciated; and although short her life, we know her work, too. Was finished—finished as perfectly as that of him who passed his threescore years and ten. She fulfilled the mission appointed unto her; and the buds of sweet spring-time that bloomed around her brow were called to expand into perfect beauty in heaven.

Early deprived of a mother's tender care and love, she lavished on her remaining parent the whole wealth of a daughter's purest affection. To please her father, to contribute to his comfort, to merit his approving smile was her sole desire; to sit by his side and listen to his voice her chief happiness. In the home circle she was the sunbeam that softly found its way to every heart, and was herself happy in the consciousness of possessing the love of all.

In the school room, that place where the characters of youth are truly tested, her loveliness shone oright. For six years in one school, under the guidance of the same teachers, associated with the same classmates, loving all and beloved by all, it is no wonder that her removal created a void which will long be felt—no wonder that teachers and pupils wept when they heard: "Fannie is dead!" During these long years of school-life and school trials her duties were ever faithfully performed. Prompt and cheerful obedience to the wishes and requests of her teachers, kindness and consideration toward companions, marked her daily life. Modest and retiring in her nature, her enjoyments were of that calm and serene kind so beautifully adapted to a delicate and refined organization. Gifted with a fine taste for the beautiful, she seemed supremely happy while sitting at her easel, quiet and contemplative, watching with delight the magic effect of her pencil, and encouraged in her work by the thought: "Papa will like this."

From earliest years she was a constant attendant at Sabbath school, which she loved; and the precious lessons there learned were not forgotten during the week. In all her conduct and conversation she truly honored both parent and teachers.

It was a lovely day when Fannie's mortal body was consigned to the quiet tomb. Companions scattered over her grave fair white flowers—emblems of her purity, and testimonials of their love. Her place in the school room, in the class, and, where she is most missed, in the home circle, is vacant. In vain we look around for her.

"She has found the joys of heaven,
She tastes of the angel band."

During her illness she often expressed a desire to return to school. "The class will get before me," she said. "Ah! she knows now more than they more than her teachers; and has left a lesson more impressive than any human lips can utter. To her young companions she says: "Trust not to youth; for the young are often called first." Father, sister, brother, could you know the happiness of your darling Fannie as a glorified spirit, welcomed by the arms of so many loved ones who have gone before, you would not call her back.

Sister, it was hard to give her up. You miss her sweet companionship, her affectionate sympathy, hero on earth; but you will see her again. Soon you will find your loved ones all awaiting where change and death and parting never come.

DIED, at the residence of her father, Rev. J. H. Rhuns, in the city of Houston, Texas, February 9, 1872, NANCY EMELINE, wife of J. A. Brookshier, of Abbeville, Louisiana, aged twenty-one years.

Sister Brookshier, in good health and with a cheerful heart, had left her home to spend a short time with her parents, and receive their assistance and care in her approaching accouchement, expecting soon to return to her husband and home with a second pledge of affection. But without apparent cause or premonition she was taken with strong convulsions, and within a few hours mother and little babe lay in the cold embrace of death. The skill of the best physicians, and the assiduous care of relatives and friends, could not detain her. Death had marked her for his victim, and the young mother and babe entered together the pearly gates of the heavenly city. She left behind a heart-stricken husband and a sweet little son eighteen months old, together with father and mother and six brothers and sisters, to mourn her loss. But they mourn not as those who have no hope. "Our loss is her infinite gain."

Sister Brookshier adorned all the relations of life. She exemplified the spirit of a pure Christianity in her daily walk and conversation, and, though of few years, was fully ripe to be gathered into the garner of the Lord. She had been raised piously, and early in life had entered the church, of which she remained a consistent member. But a few months before her death, as if in preparation for that sad event, at the District Conference held in Abbeville, God manifested to her his special grace, and she was enabled to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Death came suddenly, but found her not unprepared. She has entered into the joy of her Lord. Many die as suddenly; few as safe.

A FRIEND.

DIED, of consumption, at his residence in Sabine parish, Louisiana, on the thirteenth day of February, 1872, THOMAS B. CONNERLY, the son of Charles T. and Elizabeth Connerly. He was born February 6, 1825, in Newberry district, South Carolina, where he was raised. He removed with his parents from South Carolina to Georgia in the spring of 1843. In the fall of the same year he removed to Russelville county, Alabama, where he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1849, and here he filled several prominent positions in the church as class-leader and Sunday-school superintendent. In 1850 he was married to Miss M. A. Thompson. In 1859 Bro. Connerly removed from Alabama to the State of Louisiana, and soon after arriving here he attached himself to the church by letter, and since has been filling the office of steward, which office he filled with honor to himself and glory to the church.

In the death of Bro. Connerly the church has sustained a great loss. He was blessed with the spirit of liberality—so much so that his door was always open to the itinerating preacher. He was one of those Methodists that could not find it in his heart to neglect the preacher's family—in a word, he was a liberal giver, an active, energetic Christian. Being apprised of his death two months before he died, he was not alarmed when the message came, but was ready, standing firm at his post. He called the writer to his bedside the day before he fell asleep, and said: "I want you to take the money and send it on; have my subscription renewed for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I will be gone when the next number comes; but I want it to visit my family. They must not be without our paper," calling a widow woman, he said: "Here is money; send for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; you too must have the paper. Then," said he, "here is Emma, my youngest child, the only one of my family not in the church. I want you to try to get her to join the church." He then said: "I want you to write a short notice of my death, and ask Bro. Parker to publish it in his paper, and also the Southern and Nashville Christian Advocates to publish the same; for I have many friends in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Louisiana. I want them to know that I fall with my face toward Zion, in full view of the organ, with my eyes fixed on Jesus, for I feel that he is with me day and night." Then his strength failed, and he closed his talk with me on earth. So we must say farewell until we meet again. Bro. Connerly leaves a wife, two daughters and a son-in-law to mourn his loss. J. M. F.

WOOD AND COAL.—Attention is directed to the advertisement of Mr. J. J. Clarke, corner of Julia and Dryades streets, who proposes to sell wood and coal at greatly reduced prices.

CHEAP BOOKS.—Now is your chance to buy books of great value, at rates in many instances below cost. See the list of R. J. Harp, under the head of "Reduction," in another column.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—We call attention to some changes in the advertisement of our excellent neighbors, W. C. Shepard & Co., especially their self-sealing fruit jars and the celebrated Blanchard churn.

THE firm of Wilson & Manard have opened a business at 157 Poydras street, for the purpose of supplying families and hotels with fancy groceries, and every variety of domestic and imported fruits, and have such facilities as will enable them to compete successfully with any other establishment of the kind in the country. They respectfully solicit the patronage of friends and the public generally, assuring them that they are determined to give perfect satisfaction. Mr. Endl, so long and favorably known in New Orleans, is connected with this house. Give them a call.

FRENCH MILLINERY, ETC.—Mrs. M. Doherty, 96 Canal street, calls the attention of customers in the city and country to her extensive and beautiful millinery goods. She guarantees satisfaction in filling country orders.

THE WEED SEWING MACHINE.—We are informed through Mr. A. L. Brunson, the polite agent of the above-named machine, that it took the first premiums at the recent fairs in Marshall, Henderson and Tyler, Texas, over several of the most popular machines. We call attention to his advertisement elsewhere.

BETHESDA MINERAL WATER, which is so highly recommended for Bright's disease, diabetes, inflammation of the kidneys, etc., seems to be growing in popularity. This water has been but recently introduced as a remedy. It is said to be prescribed by some of the most eminent of the medical profession in their practice, and it is claimed that it is perfectly harmless.

COMMERCIAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—The sixth annual report of the above company appears in our issue of to-day. The names of J. H. Oglesby, president, John T. Hardie, vice president, and Walter Huntington, secretary, afford an ample guarantee of efficient and skilful management. The Commercial is gaining in strength and in the confidence of the people all the time, and is now deservedly ranked with the first companies of the city.

THE NEW DEPARTURES.—Great Ocean Mail and Passenger Express to Europe and Back.—The Anchor Line of steamships, advertised to leave New York semi-weekly—Saturdays and Wednesdays—during the season, will be a great convenience to persons travelling hence to Europe. Excursion tickets can be obtained at the office of Alexander Hay, agent of the line, No. 120 Peters street, New Orleans, by which trouble and delay at New York may be avoided, and at the very reasonable rates of $150 to London or Paris and return. It would be well for those who expect to make the excursion to call on Mr. Hay at an early day, as suitable rooms or berths may be secured here.

REAL ESTATE AND HOUSES.—Rent and Sale.—We are indebted to Mr. H. M. Robinson, the well-known real estate agent, No. 24 Commercial Place, for his three well-printed and very clearly and methodically arranged bulletins. One gives a daily corrected list of houses and other property "for rent," in three classifications of prices and by districts. The second gives a list of improved "city property" for sale, the property classified in districts, prices named, and the streets arranged in alphabetical order. The third is a monthly Bulletin of "country property for sale," by States, counties and towns, with full details, prices, etc.

The information furnished in these three bulletins is evidently carefully compiled, and is so systematically arranged as to greatly assist all persons interested.

Those desirous of selling, and wishing to avail themselves of one of the best agencies, will do well to examine Mr. Robinson's advertisement on the fifth page, or address him at his office, as above described.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A Card.—Having opened a business at 157 Poydras street, for the purpose of supplying families and Hotels with Fancy GROCERIES, and every variety of Domestic and Imported Fruits, and having such facilities as will enable us to compete successfully with any other establishment of the kind in the country, we respectfully solicit the patronage of our friends and the public generally, assuring them that we are determined to give perfect satisfaction.

A Warning.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a graveyard: and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many graveyards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility, or similar functional derangements, to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating stimulant. Imparting a healthy tone to the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

A FLASH LITTLE LOG HOUSE.

BY OLIVE THORNE.

[illegible] It looked more like a tumble-down two. But, then, it was a genuine house, regularly built and stuck together with mud, and the owner lived in it like a prince.

I found it in the woods and you can find them too—not only log houses, but very many other kinds of houses—that is, if your eyes are very sharp. You might walk over a whole village of these mites of houses and never see one if you were not careful.

The little builders who make such curious homes for themselves belong to a family that I'm afraid you don't like very well—the caterpillar family. But I think you'll like them better when you know how they live. I dare say you already know that all this family, after crawling about the world as caterpillars, become at last beautiful gay butterflies; but perhaps you don't know that each one of them has to make for himself a house, where he can shut the door and be safe from his enemies while the wonderful change happens to him.

One little fellow—a black, prickly caterpillar who blossoms out into the tortoise-shell butterfly—takes a funny way to build his house. The first thing he does is to place himself in a position where you would think he couldn't do anything. He hangs himself up to a tree, head down!

How would you go to work to build a house hung up by your heels? I'll tell you how he does. In the first place, to get a good hold, so the winds won't blow him off, he spins silk threads, like spiders' webs, around a twig, till he makes a sort of loose network sack. His legs are armed with hooks, so when he gets the network done he just hooks his last pair of legs on to it and lets his body drop down. Then a very droll thing happens. Before he builds his house he wants to get rid of his old black skin. This caterpillar family, perhaps you know, change their skin as easily as we do our clothes. Well, this prickly gentleman, after hanging awhile, gets uneasy, wriggles about, and finally splits open the back of his skin. Then he twists and pulls, and draws himself carefully out of the black coat, and hangs his new white body to the same network. Naturally he don't want his old black worn-out suit hanging there by his side, so he proceeds to dispose of it.

You know it is firmly fastened on. Well, the curious little fellow seizes it with his legs, and gives himself a jerk that spins him round like a top. All the time he is pulling and working with his feet. Usually the skin is twisted off at once; but if it is obstinate, the plucky fellow tries again, turning the other way this time. When it breaks off he lets it drop, and then builds his house.

You've seen the pretty little white butterfly, so common in summer; you country children know it to be the cabbage butterfly. This little builder—or rather his caterpillar—makes his house in a different way. First he hangs himself to a branch by a silk network, as his black cousin did. But he don't consider that safe enough, so he ties himself on to the branch by cords passed over his body.

This droll fellow can turn his head over his back, fairly doubling himself up; so he leans over, fastens a thread to the branch on one side, then moves his head over and fastens it on the other side. So he goes on till he feels safe, when he is tied in like a squaw's baby to a board.

Some of the little builders make their whole houses of the silk threads they can spin. You all know about the silk worm, who makes himself a house so valuable to weave into silk for our use that he is cultivated for that purpose.

He isn't the only one of the family who makes cocoons. One of them, not satisfied with a simple silk house, ornaments it with hairs, which stand out all round, making it look like a ball of fur.

Perhaps you wonder where he gets the hair. Nothing is easier to get—it grows on his own back. He deliberately takes the tufts of hair in his mouth, pulls them out, plants them on the house he is making, and fastens them by spinning thread over them. When he has finished he has a hair on his back; but he don't care a bit for that, for he has a nice warm house, from which he will come out a butterfly who has no need of a house.

The woolly bear caterpillar also uses his hairs for his house; but he don't pull them out; he cuts them off. Another of the woolly caterpillars has a very odd way of getting off his hairs. First he spins a loose cocoon, and then rubs himself back and forward against it—of course, you know he is inside. Till the hairs actually wear off and stick in the network, while he spins threads to hold them in.

Not all the family have hair to use. The pimpernel caterpillar draws the edges of a leaf together, and spins a thin, white silk robe for himself inside of that.

The Farm and Garden.

CULTURE OF THE WATERMELON.

There is no reason why every farmer should not raise the finest watermelons for the use of his family. Not one in a hundred is properly cultivated. The seed is put in the ground and hoed at little expense, and is considered all the culture it requires. A few hills of melons should be planted within reach of the house, and the ground for them should be made rich and mellow. Many suppose that melons will grow on any kind of land, and that the richer the land the better the melons. This is a mistake. Melons require a warm, sandy soil, and to have them in perfection they should be planted on a dry piece of land with a southern exposure. Select a piece of ground for the melon patch that has been well manured for a crop of corn, and after the corn is laid by, run furrows both ways, four feet apart, and plant the seed in the hills where the furrows cross each other. The hills should be about eight feet apart. The watermelon vine is very subject to the attacks of the striped bug, and the insect is sometimes so numerous as to destroy the entire crop of young melons before the necessity of planting a second time is known. Hoes should be provided, and after the vines begin to run they should be carefully hoed, and the soil drawn around the vines. Never hoe deep, as the roots of the vine are near the surface, and deep hoeing destroys many of the roots. Keep the ground clean around the vines, and as fast as the vine elongates a branch peg it down, so that the winds may not blow them about and break them. If the striped bug is troublesome mix one portion of guano or strong hen manure to two of gypsum, and dust over the vines while the dew is on, and the bugs will quickly depart. The first melon that sets on the vine will mature in four weeks from the time of setting; the second setting in about three weeks. As the season advances they will mature in less time than three weeks. Fine crops of melons are made by using brush for the vines to run on and cling to. The seed of the first melon that ripens should be saved for next season's planting, provided it grew where no other member of the melon family could impregnate it. Heavy crops of melons may be produced by watering every alternate day with a liquid made of the cleaning of hen roosts mixed with water, and soaked until the water fermented. Half a pint was poured on each hill at a time, and the offensive odor drove away nearly all the bugs.

APRIL WORK.

Cotton, still the great market crop of the South, should be planted during this month. While we would not stop here to detail the mode of planting and culture, we gently suggest that there is room to doubt the propriety of the prevailing custom. Nearly every year we see most astonishing results of planting cotton in checks three to four and a half—and even a greater distance—each way, according to the strength of land and variety of cotton cultivated. If this is the better way, why is it not more generally practiced? The cultivation is less difficult, a smaller quantity of seed is required, the plant is less disposed to shed its forms while growing, and the cotton is not so likely to rot unopened. Will not some of our readers test the advantages of this plan the present year by planting a portion of a plat in this way, and a portion after the usual practice, and report the results? We invite the attention of agricultural clubs to this matter.

But we desire to impress upon our soil culturists, that there are other crops adapted to our soil and climate and necessities besides cotton, the neglect of which has brought us to poverty and dependence. Cane and rice, hay and potatoes, peas and peanuts, fruits and vegetables of infinite variety, flourish as well with us—many of them better—as with those from whom we buy them. At all events, they are articles of prime necessity, and we can raise them at less cost of labor and means than we can raise the cotton that will buy them. Therefore we urge farmers to plant largely of feed crops of all kinds, giving such preparation as will insure abundant returns. Let our farmers remember that the capacity of the cotton crop to buy feed crops is reduced in a ratio corresponding with the necessity of such purchase. If the feed crop is neglected, it is done that the cotton crop may be increased. An increased cotton crop reduces the price, and hence the capacity of this crop to purchase home necessaries, and these having been neglected, are correspondingly high.

Our sugar planters will find plenty to occupy them in their cane-fields during April. The loss of seed-cane from the severe cold of the past winter will materially reduce the crop the present year, but the labor and lands can be profitably employed in the production of other crops but a trifle less valuable to the producer than sugar. The sugar region of our country is equally well adapted to the production of rice and other cereals, besides some of the fiber-producing plants. Jute, by the way, has proven a very successful crop with some of our river-coast planters, and would doubtless succeed throughout the [illegible] region of our glorious South where ample rewards are the sure meed of intelligent and persevering industry.—Ed.

RAISING TURKEYS.

It takes about twelve years for a turkey to attain its largest weight. If at twelve months a gobbler reach thirty pounds live weight, at five years he would reach thirty-five and at three years forty or a little more. But it is rare to get a male bird above forty pounds, and that it is generally by some process of feeding that destroys the stamina and oftentimes the life. This weight is considered a maximum; but about the time one thinks he is almost sure of a forty-five pounder, the poor thing sickens and dies. It may be assumed, then, that forty pounds is the limit to which a vigorous turkey cock may be safely carried, and from that to two-thirds of that weight is the last side limit for the hen. With freedom of exercise, and a little variety, we should get large, vigorous chicks, that will soon outgrow and seldom suffer from the offspring of common-sized birds. No bird pays more liberally for liberty than the turkey. The influence of a large-sized gobbler in a flock is immediately visible in the increased size of the chicks. The infusion of wild blood increases the hardiness of the young. A larger proportion of the eggs will hatch, and a much larger number of young will be likely to grow up. With a little painstaking, it is quite easy to breed to any desired shade of plumage.—American Agriculturist.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

How to Make Pudding Quick.—Split a few crackers, lay the surface over with raisins, and place the halves together again; tie them closely in a cloth, and boil fifteen minutes in milk and water. With a rich sauce it is elegant.

Cure for Coldin the Head.—Inhale hart-horn through the nostrils six or eight times a minute until relief is obtained. Tie it after an hour or so repeat again. This remedy is much used in France, and I have always found the use of it attended with good results.

Glue for Cardboard.—For uniting cardboard, paper, and small articles of fancy-work, the best glue dissolved with about one-third its weight of coarse brown sugar in the smallest quantity of boiling water, is very good. When the glue is in a liquid state it may be dropped in a thin cake upon a plate and allowed to dry. When required for use, one end of the cake may be moistened by the mouth, and rubbed on the substance to be joined.

How to Make Moss Baskets.—Get the moss from some old woodlands; the green feathery moss is best. Then take pasteboard and make a frame in any form desired. When the pasteboard forms are cut out, take bright-colored tibbet, silk or satin, and cut pieces the same shape as the pasteboard forms, only one-fourth of an inch larger. Place the pasteboard on the cloth, glue or paste the edges down and sew the pieces together. Take a narrow strip of pasteboard, cover with the same the basket is covered with. Then take pieces of chenile cord and braid over and under the length of the strip. Fasten each end to opposite sides of the basket. Cut the moss from the roots, paste it thickly on the outside of the basket; take chenile cord, like that on the handle or bail, glue it in every seam inside and around the top, taking pains to do it all nicely, and the work is done.

Extraordinary Transmissions of Sound.

An echo in Woodstock Park, Oxfordshire, repeats seventeen syllables by day and twenty by night. One on the banks of the Lago del Lupo, above the fall of Terni, repeats fifteen. But the most remarkable echo known is one on the north side of Shipley church, in Sussex, which distinctly repeats twenty-one syllables:

In the Abbey church at St. Albans is a curious echo. The tick of a watch may be heard from one end of the church to the other. In Gloucester cathedral a gallery of an octagonal form conveys a whisper seventy-five feet across the nave.

The following inscription in copied from this gallery :

Doubt not but God, who sits on high,
Thy innocent secret prayers can hear's
When a dear wall thus cunningly
Conveys soft whispers to the ear.

In the cathedral of Girgenti, in Sicily, the slightest whisper is borne with perfect distinctness from the great western door to the cornice behind the high altar—a distance of two hundred and fifty feet.

In the whispering gallery of St. Paul's, London, the faintest sound is faithfully conveyed from one side to the other of the dome, but is not heard at any intermediate point.

In the Manfroni Palace at Venice is a square room, about twenty-five feet high, with a concave roof, in which a person standing in the center, and stamping gently with his foot on the floor, hears the sound repeated a great many times; but, as his position deviates from the center, the reflected sounds grow fainter, and at a short distance wholly cease. The same phenomenon occurred in the large room of the library of the museum at Naples.

An intelligent and very respectable gentleman, named Ebenezer Snell, was in a cornfield with a negro on the seventeenth of June, 1776, in the township of Cummington, Massachusetts, one hundred and twenty-nine miles west of Bunker Hill, by the course of the road, and at least one hundred by an air-line. Some time during the day the negro was lying on the ground, and remarked to Ebenezer that there was war somewhere, for he could distinctly hear the cannonading. Ebenezer put his ear to the ground, and also heard the firing distinctly, and for a considerable time. He remembers the fact, which made a deep impression on his mind, as plainly as though it was yesterday.

Over water, or a surface of ice, sound is propagated with a remarkable clearness and strength. Dr. Hutton relates that, on a quiet part of the Thames near Chelsea, he could hear a person read distinctly at the distance of one hundred and forty feet, while on the land the same could only be heard at seventy-six. Lieutenant Foster, in the third Polar expedition of Captain Parry, found that he could hold conversation with a man across the harbor of Port Bowen, a distance of six thousand six hundred and ninety-six feet, or about a mile and a quarter. This, however, falls short of what is asserted by Derham and Dr. Young, viz.: that at Gibraltar the human voice has been heard at the distance of ten miles, the distance across the strait.

Dr. Herne, a Swedish physician, relates that he heard guns fired at Stockholm, on the occasion of the death of one of the royal family, in 1685, at the distance of thirty Swedish or one hundred and eighty British miles.

The cannonade of a sea-fight between the English and Dutch, in 1672, was heard across England as far as Shrewsbury, and even in Wales, a distance of upward of two hundred miles from the scene of action.

Prof. C. A. Young's observation of a supposed explosion on the surface of the sun gave a good opportunity for testing the theories of connection between solar phenomena and terrestrial magnetic disturbances. Accordingly the great magnet of Greenwich Observatory was called on to show its records. Singularly these do not exhibit any unusual vibration at the time of the violent action on the sun's chromosphere; but do report sudden and extraordinary movements two hours and a half later, indicating a magnetic storm, which developed into the beautiful aurora of the evening. While, therefore, the phenomena were not simultaneous, there appears to be a real connection, requiring longer time for transmission than has been supposed necessary; or, as there were faint oscillations at the time, movements on the solar surface of mechanical character only are not so highly magnetic as others which are less demonstrative.

Harmony.—"Ilka blade o' grass hae its ain drap o' dew." A beautiful expression of a lovely fact. Would that it were true of the many individuals composing the church—each one receiving of the grace of God that "distills as the dew;" then would there be unison of feeling and harmony of action.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS,

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of truly sectional, unpartisan, and strictly unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury of the Virginia Military Institute. "A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, Ll.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled for cheapness, sentiment, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are ready everywhere to be diligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele De Vere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

MINERAL SPERM OIL.

GUARANTEED AS SAFE AS SPERM OR LARD OIL.

It Will Not Take Fire in Case of Breakage of the Lamp.

THE OIL WILL EXTINGUISH the FLAME.

The Oil itself has no odor while burning. It gives a Light of TEN-CANDLE POWER at a cost not exceeding ONE-HALF CENT PER HOUR, and for lighting railroad cars, steamers, factories and dwelling houses it is invaluable and cannot be too highly recommended.

The Oil is patented, and made by a process which insures its uniformity.

It burns with great brilliancy in the requires but little attention and no trimming. The Oil never gums in the lamp, as it absorbs no oxygen from the atmosphere. It does not deteriorate by age. This Burner fits all ordinary coal oil lamps.

DUAL BURNER,

INDIAN TURNIP POT

PECTORAL BALM,

Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the Various Affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the Relief of Consumptive Patients.

The Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm completely cures the most inveterate cases of Bronchitis, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Pulmonary Oppression, the Spasmodic Nervous Disorders which attend certain forms of Coughs, Sore Throat, and generally all cases of Inflammation of the Respiratory Organs. It has a soothing action upon the Cough, facilitates expectoration, checks the splitting of blood, and relieves fits of Asthma. In this last disease the Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm has been given with the greatest success. Its use in Whooping Cough remarkably relieves this distressing affection.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the country. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly

Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup.

Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.

It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.

For sale by all respectable druggists.

F. P. DUCONGE, Proprietor,

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We have only a moderate degree of activity to report since our last issue, although most branches of the wholesale trade are still doing a fair business in supplying country merchants and city dealers.

The weather has been clear and pleasant, but we have nothing encouraging to report in our advices from the country. As we remarked last week, there has been too much rain for plowing, and most planters are behind-hand. The indications are that the crop will be late, and the chances of a large yield are much less promising than they were a few weeks since.

The river is 7 feet 4 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twelfth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ....bales..	5,251
Lake	6
Arkansas	6,945
Mobile	303
Texas	92
Total	12,600

On Saturday buyers came forward with a fair degree of spirit, and the sales embraced 3,400 bales, at about previous rates. The advantage nevertheless was, if anything, on the side of the buyer. On Monday the Liverpool dispatches reporting an advance of 1-16d., and the New York telegrams ⅛c., the demand was more active, and, although operations were checked by moderate supplies and the stringent pretensions of factors, the business summed up 6,250 bales, partly at previous rates, but mostly at an advance of ⅛c., requiring a corresponding change in quotations. On Tuesday more liberal receipts, although they had been confidently expected, and it was supposed would be soon followed by a marked falling off, appeared to have a depressing influence, or at least check the demand, which was slack throughout the day, the sales not exceeding 2,600 bales. Prices, however, exhibited no quotable change. Occasional sales were made at a slight reduction from previous rates, but the bulk of the business showed no variation.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 890,815 bales, against 1,246,883 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 946,036 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 115,214 to France, and a decrease of 640,388 to Great Britain, and of 240,452 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The receipts from plantation have met with a good demand since our last review. On Tuesday the receipts sold at 7⅝@8c. for common, 8⅛c. for good common, 9c. for good fair, and 9⅛c. for fully fair. City refinery sugar is retailing in filling small orders at 9@10⅛c. for centrifugal, 11 (@11½c. for yellow clarified, 12⅛@12½c. for white clarified, 13c. for crushed and powdered, and 14c. for ent loaf.

MOLASSES.—Only small lots of odds and ends are coming in from plantation. Those on Saturday and Monday sold at 27½c. for thin fermenting, 35 @40c. for fair to good fermenting, and 47½c. for thin cistern bottom.

CORN.—The market has been dull, with a good supply since our last review. On Tuesday 11,000 sacks were sold at 67@68c. for mixed, and 69@70c. for yellow and white.

OATS.—On Tuesday the market was dull, with a light supply. 2,500 sacks sold at 55, 56@57c. ₱ bushel, mostly at the inside prices.

BRAN.—On Tuesday prices ruled more in favor of buyers, and 1,000 sacks were sold at $1.50@$1.60 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday the demand was good for all good weight, and 600 bbls. mess sold, in three lots, at $13.75, 25 at $13.87½, and 50 at $14 ₱ bbl. Mess is retailing at $14.25.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market was dull. 12 and 16 casks clear rib sides sold at 7¾c., and 10 do. clear sides at 7¾c. ₱ lb. Shoulders are offering at 5½@5⅝c., and clear sides at 7¼@7⅜c.

HAMS.—On Saturday 30 tierces sold, in two lots, at 11¼@11½c. ₱ lb. On Monday 20 tierces sold at 11⅜c. On Tuesday 25 tierces sold at 11⅜c.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The stock is small, but the demand is limited. On Saturday 100 casks, all the supplies in first hands, sold to dealers at 5c. ₱ lb. for shoulders, and 6c. for clear sides.

LARD.—On Tuesday the market was dull. 45 tierces kettle-rendered sold at 8⅞c., and 25 tierces refined at 9¾c., and 25 kegs kettle-rendered and 100 kegs refined at 10c. ₱ lb. Packers' in tierces is quoted at 8⅞@9c., refined 9⅜@9½c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON.—We quote 10@10½c. ₱ lb. for Western. Northern is quoted at 11c.

BEEF.—Texas commands $11@$12, Western $16.50 ₱ bbl. Western is scarce. The market is bare of Northern. It would command $16.50@$17.

BUTTER.—Choice continues scarce and in demand. Western commands 28@30c., Goshen 38@40c. ₱ lb. Inferior is unsaleable.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 111@111¼, (against 111 at New York,) and closed at the opening rates in both markets.

The sales of silver embraced $5,000 in American half dollars on Tuesday at 108@108¼, and $1,000 Mexican dollars at 5 ₱ cent. premium in gold.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Formerly WOOD & MANN.

These Engines are so well and favorably known that a description of them here is not deemed necessary.

They are EQUALED by FEW, SURPASSED by NONE, perfect in workmanship, complete in appointments, safe, simple and substantial. Every boiler is practically tested before leaving the factory. By the use of a CIRCULATING WATER BOTTOM around and underneath the furnace, which lessens the

RISK FROM FIRE,

they are particularly adapted for GINNING COTTON. Engines of all sizes, at prices which challenge comparison for equal size of steam cylinder and measurements of boiler. A full stock of these Engines will be kept constantly on hand by the undersigned, who has been appointed general agent.

Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 17.—Father Gavazzi, the eminent Italian priest, arrived to-day.

The last steamer of the Pacific Mail Line from the East, at San Francisco, brought one thousand three hundred Japanese immigrants, and an agent has gone to Japan to bring twenty thousand more as laborers for different sections of the country.

Gavazzi states that he and the Rev. Dr. Thompson are a deputation from the Free Christian Church of Italy to make its objects and prospects known to our friends in America, and to ask assistance. They hope to carry home from America the beginning of an evangelical college which shall diffuse throughout United Italy the true doctrine of free Christianity. Their creed is simply "the golden rule," and to pay no obedience to the Vatican.

San Francisco, April 17.—The California grape crop is damaged to the extent of one-fifth or one-sixth by the late frosts. Peaches, figs, apricots, almonds, nectarines and English walnuts are also damaged in some localities.

Tallahassee, Florida, April 17.—The Supreme Court met to-day at eleven A. M., Chief Justice Randall presiding, with a full bench.

The decision of Judge Leon in the Circuit Court, sentencing C. H. Pearce, bishop of the African Church, member of the Senate and a prominent politician of this State, for bribery to six months in the county jail and $1,000 fine, was confirmed.

Jackson, Miss., April 18.—The north-bound passenger train on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad was wrecked to-day, at half-past three P. M., by the breaking of an axle of the truck of the smoking car, which ran off the track, on an embankment fifteen feet high. The smoking car and ladies' car were thrown down the embankment and turned completely over. The left-hand side of the ladies' car was entirely torn off.

There were no persons killed, and only one seriously injured—a Mrs. A. W. Pierce, of Beauregard, Mississippi, arm broken and nose injured; also received a flesh wound on her forehead.

The accident occurred near Dulaney's Mill, six miles south of Crystal Springs, Mississippi.

San Francisco, April 19.—Violent shocks of earthquake still continue in Inyo county. An island is rising in Mono Lake.

Chinese advices state that on March 3 the explosion of a magazine at Tien Tsien destroyed eighty houses and many lives.

A riot among the Chinese laborers in the tin mines at Tacoot, in northern China, resulted in the loss of many lives.

Charleston, S. C., April 19.—A tornado swept over the up country on Thursday night. The new market-house at Columbia, about finished, was blown down, but the worst damage occurred in Chester, in which place sixty-two houses were entirely destroyed by the storm, and many others seriously damaged. Nobody was killed, but four colored persons were injured by falling houses. Miles of fencing was blown down, and thousands of large fruit trees were torn up by the roots. The loss in Chester is $50,000, mostly falling on persons of small means.

A meeting held in Chester to-day has taken steps for the relief of the sufferers. The tornado moved eastwardly, and was of short duration.

Eufaula, April 19.—Hon. John Black, editor of the Eufaula News, and for over twenty-five years an editor and publisher here, died at his residence in this city, early this morning, of congestion.

Nashville, April 19.—Nineteen emigrants for Salt Lake City left this afternoon. They are from Virginia and North Carolina.

Baltimore, April 22.—Smallpox deaths for the week were twenty-seven.

San Francisco, April 23.—The growing crops of grain are maturing rapidly. A great scarcity of hands to gather the crops is anticipated. Foundrymen and machinists are scarce, owing to the increased demand for mining machinery. The increased production of bullion and the advance in mining stocks stimulate business of all descriptions.

Parties arriving at Portland, Oregon, from Sitka, Alaska, report great excitement in that region on account of the discovery of rich silver mines within half a mile of the town, and of the discovery of rich gold and silver mines in other places.

FOREIGN.

Yokohama, March 26.—Political affairs are exceedingly quiet.

The first Japanese fair, under the direction of the government, takes place at Kiots, on April 10. Foreigners are allowed to visit it and show their manufactures. This is considered a virtual abandonment of the exclusive policy, and one of the results of the mission of Iwakura to America.

The reception of the news of the hearty welcome given to the Japanese embassy in California by all parties there is highly appreciated both by natives and foreigners alike.

Several severe earthquakes have occurred in Japan.

General Williams and forty Japanese students are about to leave for America. Among the latter there are some high relatives of the Mikado.

City of Mexico, April 7, via Havana, April 19.—A rebellion has broken out in the State of Yucatan. Troops have been sent to subdue it. The city of Merida is in possession of the revolutionists.

The rebellion is again important in the Sierra de Puebla and the States of Chiapas and Tabasco. Several bodies of government troops have been defeated by Generals Negrete and Mendez.

A counter revolution has broken out in Nuevo Leon, under Garcia Melo, who has seized the governorship and outlawed Governor Trovino.

Order has been thoroughly established in the States of Guanajuato, Zacatecas, Aguas Calientes and Durango.

An earthquake occurred on the twenty-seventh ultimo, in Oaxaca, which destroyed many churches, dwellings and levees.

President Juarez, in a message to Congress, stated that the rebellion was crushed, but he still clings to dictatorial powers, and asks for an extension of facilities.

The congressional Committee on the Constitution have reported in favor of extending the dictatorship indefinitely.

It is reported that Juarez wishes to resign the presidency, but his friends will not permit him to do so until his successor has been provided.

Romero, minister of finance, says the Juarez administration will be the last independent government of Mexico. It is believed Juarez will deliver the country to the United States before permitting the opposition party to rule.

Berlin, April 19.—The minister of public worship has given formal notice to the Bishop of Ermland that as the sentences of excommunication against German subjects clash with the civil law, and affect unfavorably their social status, therefore the consent of the government must be obtained before such sentences are pronounced. The minister insists on obedience to the laws as a duty incumbent on all, and intimates a failure in that duty on the part of the bishop will lead to the withdrawal by the government of its official recognition of his ecclesiastical functions.

The Bishop of Ermland answers apologetically, affirming that civil honor is in no way affected by excommunication.

London, April 20.—Some walls in the course of erection at Kirkready, Scotland, fell to-day, killing nine persons.

A special from Rome says that the Italian government thinks that the Geneva arbitration should not consider indirect damages.

A telegram from Hong Kong brings intelligence of a terrible marine disaster on the Chinese coast. The French steamer Avato came into collision with the steamer Rona, and the latter vessel was sunk. Sixty persons who were on board the Rona are missing, and it is believed that all are lost.

Madrid, April 21.—The railway companies have been ordered to hold all their rolling stock in readiness for instant use.

Volunteers in Madrid and elsewhere proffer their services to the government.

The council of ministers met yesterday evening, and was in session all night.

L'Imparcial is assured that the King's speech to-morrow will contain the following declaration: "I will not impose myself on the country, except as a representative of and supported by the majority, but if some turbulent minority seeks to impose its will on the nation, I know my duty and will fulfill it."

Carlist newspaper organs publish the protest of Don Carlos against late elections. A general Carlist rising in all parts of Spain is momentarily expected. Preparations of all kinds are being made to meet it.

Madrid, April 22.—The Carlists have again commenced their depredations against the government, and are active in the provinces of Toledo and Navarre, where bands, under the command of priests, have appeared. Demonstrations in other portions of the kingdom are imminent. The government authorities have arrested many persons in the cities of Madrid and Valladolid and elsewhere, whom they suspect of complicity in the Carlist movements.

Madrid, April 23.—Many members of the Carlist Juntas have been arrested in different parts of the country.

Carlist bands are increasing in number throughout the kingdom. Mendry: "Viva Charles the Seventh; death to the Liberals." A large number of peasants in the provinces of Navarre, Guipezoa, Ternel, Leon and Huesca, have joined the forces of the Pretender.

The government is active in its exertions to suppress the rising, and it is reported will adopt a more rigorous policy toward the disturbers than that now pursued.

FROM THE WORK.

Port Gibson, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I have sometimes thought that much interest might be added to your paper and our other Advocates by a rigid pruning or condensation of "news from the churches." But I see now what a pleasant thing it is to have several columns open to correspondents, and to be allowed such a wide range of topics. I have hesitated to use this privilege in time heretofore, because our church seemed to be rather out of the range of episcopal visitation and other incidents of general significance. But now we are really going to have a Bishop at our District Conference, and we intend to hold up our heads and handle our pens too, (vece signum,) like other people. Ours used to be, in many respects, the choicest station in the Conference bounds. The membership was wealthy and liberal, having a generous share of the intelligence and refinement that distinguished the town of Port Gibson and its vicinity.

The war dissipated much of the wealth, scattered the membership, and greatly depreciated the church spirit—so much so that spiritual deadness threatened all the interests of Methodism here. Last year, however, our prospects began to brighten. Under the pastorate of Bro. Galloway—whom you may not know, but of whom you will hear one of these days—our church gave good signs of returning life. During the year there were more than twenty additions to the church; our finances improved, as the reports will show; interest in the Sunday school revived, and, in spite of some untoward circumstances, we had evidence that much real and permanent good was done.

Judge of our disappointment when, notwithstanding our earnest petition for his return, Bro. Galloway was sent away to South Warren circuit. It is true we were cheered with the hope of having Bro. Evans in his stead; but the people of Monroe were more fortunate with their petition than we were, and he too failed to come. We had rented a parsonage in anticipation of his coming. The people contributed freely to furnish it, the ladies, as usual, taking the lead. We felt that we were badly treated, and some harsh comments were made.

But the Lord has been better to us than our fears. The Louisiana Conference has loaned us Bro. Trippitt, and we warn you at once that we intend to keep him if we can. We will return you twice his weight, avoirdupois, but him we intend to keep. Already we are gathering the first fruits of what we trust will be a glorious harvest, both spiritual and material, to our needy church. Our people are devising liberal things; they are beginning to believe that they can support a pastor, and obscure hints are sometimes heard of buying a parsonage. The stewards positively meet every two weeks, and can actually mention quarterage to people on the streets without speculating upon the true Christian attitude and limit of self-defense.

You know Bro. Trippett, however, and he needs no commendation from us. You will hear of our progress as we make it, perhaps. We believe the Lord has spoken good concerning us.

Don't you think, if we buy a parsonage, pay our church out of debt, and improve generally and steadily for several years, even to the point of "resounding" to Centenary, that Bishop Keener will come and preach for us—on the "Macedonian Grace?"

Pierre.

April 10, 1872.

The Bible Cause and the Southern University.

Mr. Editor: Our anniversary Bible meeting was held in Selma, at night, in the Presbyterian church, and was in all respects a fine success. That auxiliary has made arrangements to put a colporteur in the field for the present year. He will begin the work in Dallas county, and continue down the Alabama river, on the west side, below Suggsville. We hope he will meet with a kind reception and hearty co-operation by the entire Christian public. I preached in the morning, for Bro. Andrews, to the largest congregation I have seen in the church at that place since the war. Bro. Andrews is building up the church and congregation in all respects. It is now the largest and most influential Methodist church in the State. Bro. Briggs, the presiding elder on the Selma district, is rapidly building up the waste places, as well as the towns and cities, in that large field. Rain and mud seem to be no obstacles in his way. Success to his labors!

Our Bible meeting in Greensboro was interesting and profitable.—That society, through the untiring and constant efforts of the treasurer and depository agent, Bro. Garrett, has done a great and good work in the circulation of the Scriptures. More than a thousand copies have been sold and given away by this auxiliary since the war. The society is out of debt, and has a large and well-assorted stock of books on hand.

I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. A. S. Andrews, and the able and efficient corps of professors associated with him. They are in fine spirits. About one hundred students are in attendance at the University, and still more coming in. I preached in the Methodist church, morning and night. I was favorably impressed with the large attendance of the students. Their propriety in and about the church, and their high-toned morals, more than ever convinced me of the great worth of church schools and colleges. No man who loves his son should sacrifice such needful moral and religious restraints for any consideration. What is education worth when life and character are hopelessly bankrupt? There are about twelve young men in the institution already licensed to preach. The University has brighter prospects than ever since the war. Dr. Andrews and his co-laborers are doing a great work for God and the church. Let Methodists all over the land hold up the hands of these laborious servants of the church. They ought and must and will be sustained. The University now only needs the small sum of about $25,000 additional endowment to make it self-sustaining, and a permanent blessing to the church for ages to come.

There is now but one Methodist college in Alabama. It is certainly to the interest of the entire church to sustain their own college. And besides all this, there are some four or five large and influential Conferences now patronizing and supporting the Southern University. It is bound to be in all respects just such a college as the church needs. In fact the church now has it in her power, with the large and commodious buildings out of debt, to make the Southern University a model institution. Dr. Andrews will visit the important points in the several patronizing Conferences during the months of vacation, and raise the needed endowment.

The financial as well as the educational necessities of the times have been wisely considered by the managers of the University. They have attached a boarding department to the college, not to make money, but to afford the means of education suited to the financial and oppressed condition of the youth of the country. Board is furnished just at what it costs to keep a decent table; no room-rent. One hundred and fifty dollars will meet all expenses of board, tuition, washing, etc., for the entire term.

Such high and thorough educational advantages, at such reduced prices, are seldom found in this or any other country. We have long hoped that some college of high grade would make the sacrifice and adapt the financial department to the condition of the country. We are glad to find in the operations of the University all that could be desired in this respect. From all I see and hear, there may be at least two hundred boys, before two years, in the Southern University.

S. P. Richardson.

Summerfield, Ala., April 4, 1872.

Southwestern Louisiana—Its Religious Teachers, Etc.

Mr. Editor: Having been identified with this field for about fourteen years, I have become much interested in the welfare of its people. Now that its vast prairies are soon to wake the echoes and feel the tread of the "iron horse," and its fertile soil to be placed within easy reach of enterprising populations, and learn to smile with abundant harvests under their superior modes of culture, we take fresh courage, and hope yet and soon to see this fairest of lands teeming with a people unsurpassed in intelligence, enterprise and high religious culture. With this influx of enterprise will doubtless come the man called of God to preach the "unsearchable riches of his truth." This we especially need. To-day, within the bounds of my district—reaching from Berwick's Bay to Washington—we need five earnest preachers of the gospel for our own congregations. We, as a Protestant denomination, stand almost alone to battle with sin and the corrupting influences of the Romish priesthood. In this field the Baptists have but one preacher, with only two or three small congregations. The Episcopalians have only two preachers and four churches. These denominations, owing to their doctrines of succession—and in the latter, owing to its great latitude of moral discipline and low grade of Christian practice—are not meeting the wants of the country and the times.

To give an idea of what we need, I will give you what we have. At one place the religious teacher of the majority gambles at cards, often all night long; drinks to such an excess that he has been seen in deshabille running frantically all over his inclosure, and is very profane, having been heard to belch out oaths in a public store, in the presence of ladies, which would seem only fit for demons. To counteract this we have preaching only on Sabbath night. He is there constantly, to lead to infidelity by his example. At another town those who are the only constant religious teachers drink to such excess that they have been seen in deshabille on their "all-fours," butting like goats, barking like dogs, and playing "leap-frog." To counteract this we have a church with services only semi-monthly. At another point the man to whom the masses look for religious instruction is a regular drinker, having often been seen to invite his followers into the coffee-house, and with them drink ardent spirits. At that place our pulpit is served by the local ministry—very good, but necessarily somewhat inefficiently in that there is so little pastoral work done. And thus it is, more or less, through all this district. Our Episcopalian friends tell our people and their children: "Join us; we'll let you dance." Instead of fighting sin, and teaching holiness of heart and life, they are engaged in a crusade against other Christian denominations, especially against us; and in this are actually doing more harm than good.

We have in this district only ten men, local and itinerant, and there are at least one hundred thousand souls to be taught. As for the freedmen, under the teaching and example of priests and political preachers, we now have a conglomerate mass of moral and theological corruption, that is difficult to describe. I will give illustrations. At one place the leading colored preacher calls himself a Baptist, yet he is a stationed preacher, a presiding elder, a bishop, wears a silk gown when preaching, baptizes infants, hears confession, and is an ontright immersionist. I heard a colored man attempt to preach a funeral sermon in a Methodist church. They had black and white cambric stretched around the altar, and hung about the doors and windows; then two men—mourners—to sit in front of the altar, with their hats on; and in the twenty minutes' discourse that I heard there was not an intelligible sentence. Some of these ignorant men have been "gobbled" up by the Northern Church and ordained.

O fair land of flowers and sunshine, how dark the shadow of moral death that now enshrouds thee! Will not the church pray earnestly for us? Will our young, robust, pious, earnest and successful preachers turn their thoughts to this Macedon, and, hearing its cry, come over and help us? We are now inaugurating high schools, academies—not colleges—in connection with our various stations, and under the control of the Quarterly Conferences of the church. We must educate our own children, with all others that we can, or else the proselyting plans of others will take from us the "seed-corn" of the church. This instrumentality is being effectually used as a means to forestall the growth of vital holiness in the midst of this people. We need men and women competent to teach, as well as men to preach the science of holiness by "lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting."

Pecuniarily the country is poor; but now is the time to come, and build up with the country. A teacher or a preacher will find simply food and raiment—and possibly nothing more for a time—if he be prudent and economical. The time is not very distant, however, if the nation prosper, when this will be a land of fatness. It is eminently a healthy country. It is true our towns are subject, more or less, to epidemics of yellow fever; but people come and live here for the sake of worldly gain. Are we not willing to risk for the salvation of souls what they risk for the world? Thank God, there are indications of good in our work throughout the entire district. Quite a number of accessions at the different quarterly meetings, and a general improvement in church affairs.

B. F. White.

Franklin, La., April 14, 1872.

To the Preachers of the Mobile District.

Dear Brethren: Please inform me by letter, as soon as possible, of the number and names of those who will attend the District Conference. To get here in time, and secure passage to Milton by boat, you must be in Pensacola by Wednesday morning before the District Conference convenes.

We earnestly beg that all the preachers and delegates attend. Ample provision for entertainment will be made.

Wesley B. Dennis.

Washington as a Farmer.—The farm of General Washington, at Mount Vernon, contained ten thousand acres of land in one body—equal to about fifteen square miles. It was divided into farms of convenient size, at the distance of two, three and five miles from the mansion house. He visited these farms every day, in pleasant weather, and was constantly engaged in making experiments for the improvement of agriculture. Some idea of the extent of his farming operations may be formed from the following facts: In 1787 he had five hundred and eighty acres in grass; sowed six hundred bushels of oats; seven hundred acres with wheat, and as much more in corn, barley, potatoes, beans, peas, etc., and one hundred and fifty with turnips. His stock consisted of one hundred and forty horses; one hundred and twelve cows; two hundred and thirty-six working oxen, heifers and steers, and five hundred sheep. He constantly employed two hundred and fifty hands, and kept twenty-four plows going during the whole year, when the earth and the state of the weather would permit. In 1780 he slaughtered one hundred and fifty hogs for the use of his own family, and provisions for his negroes, for whose comfort he had great regard.

Probably the oldest rose-bush in the world is one twined upon a side of the Hildesheim cathedral in Germany. The root is buried under the crypt, below the choir. The stem is a foot thick, and half a dozen branches nearly cover the eastern side of the church, bearing countless flowers in summer. Its age is unknown, but documents exist which prove that a Bishop Hezilo, nearly a thousand years ago, protected it by a stone roof, which is still extant.

Philanthropy is not religion, but there is no religion without philanthropy. He that is indifferent to the poor is no Christian, no matter what his creed or his professed experience. How to care for the poor is another question. It is to be done not merely by feeding the hungry and clothing the naked, but yet more by laws and educational and religious influences which enable them to provide for themselves.

A wise man looks upon men as he does on horses: all their caparisons of title, wealth and place he considers but as harness.—Cecil.

RAISING MONEY.

"E'en [illegible]
Fate! O put [illegible]
Lest we, [illegible]
Horace.

Is there good reason why one should refrain
From speaking wholesome truths in spotless strain?
As teachers bland oft bribe reluctant boys,
With cakes and candies, gingerbread and toys,
To learn their A B Cs, and thus to gain
An entrance into science's fair domain,
So the good pastor and his pious charge
Entice the sinner and the saint at large,
When preachers famish and when churches pine,
To give their money, and their hearts incline
To do good deeds; and christian graces learn,
To practice charity, and with zeal to burn
To bring God glory, and cause to advance
Christ's kingdom on earth—by a lively dance,
Concerts, charades, tableaux and oyster soups,
Far-famed string bands and operatic troops,
Fairs, flummery, raffles, lotteries and hops,
Where fashion flaunts her finery and sweet-scented fops
Can ventilate their nothings, and display
Their faultless kids and sumptuous array,
While saintly brethren in their Sunday rig,
And godly sisters countenance the jig,
And give their sanction to voluptuous dance,
Because it serves God's glory to enhance.
"We must have money," christian people say:
"Are not our churches going to decay?
Our pastor hath not where his head to lay,
So we must build a parsonage right away.
His family, too, is large, his salary small,
(Though small it be, he cannot get it all.)
If Christians all would of their substance bring,
We ample means would have for everything;
But without money churches cannot go;
We must have money then, of course, you know;
And since the members lack the liberality,
We must go out among the generality,
And, by a sort of sugar-coating operation,
Contrive to get from them a big donation.
Lovers of pleasure thus can do the work
Which lovers of God have seemed disposed to shirk.
As wise as serpents we are told to be,
And here, I think, we show their subtlety."

My Christian friends, with your good leave,
I'll tell you that I don't believe
That churches ever should resort
To means like these for their support.
The church, Christ's bride on earth, should dress
In robes of spotless righteousness;
Not stand, like hostess at an inn,
With tidy apron under chin,
To serve her guests with tempting dish
Of savory flesh or fowl or fish,
And cater to the carnal senses
To get the means to pay expenses;
Nor should the church, we think, be meddling
With fairs or infairs, or be peddling
Pin-cushions, fancy things and knick-knacks,
To scrape together a few greenbacks.
But when she goes to being jolly
She's guilty of the greatest folly;
She sets the folks to guessing riddles,
And dancing jigs to sounding fiddles;
She advertises "grand tableaux,"
Inviting people to her shows.
"Come every one, come all and see—
Only one dollar admittance fee;
And when a dollar thus is given,
'Tis that much treasure stored in heaven."
It seems to me that fun and frolic
Was not the method apostolic
Of building and supporting churches.
He will not find, who Scripture searches,
Any prescription such as that
For making poor, lean churches fat.

When churches go to acting roles,
They leave the work of saving souls—
Surrendering their high vocation
For very small consideration.
True Charity gives to God straightout—
She doesn't do it "round-about."

LOUISIANA.

PROSPECTS—MORALS.

Mr. Editor: The history of no part of the United States is so replete with historic and romantic interest as that of the country embraced within the present limits of the State of Louisiana. Once this State, then a province, gave name to a wide sweep of country, extending from the Calcasieu and Pensacola bays on the south to the great lakes on the north, and westward stretched out beyond the vast plains of the West over the Rocky mountains, and down the Pacific slope to its very strands. No country in the world comprises such an extensive area of rich and varied soils as did the original Province of Louisiana. Rich in natural and mineral resources, covered with the finest growth of timber on the globe, traversed in every part by great water-courses, and possessing a salubrious climate, the valley of the Mississippi was a vast amphitheater, destined to be filled to its utmost extent with an industrious and enterprising population. Agriculture, manufacture and commerce were each to find the most ample room to fulfill their missions of conveying peace, comfort and happiness to the human family. In the distant future its first explorers beheld the wealth and greatness of this wonderful country. The eyes of the world were at one time upon the valley of the Mississippi. For a long series of years three of the most powerful nations of the earth—France, Spain and Great Britain—struggled to gain the ascendancy in this virgin land. It was the vital part of the New World, and was indeed the richest acquisition that any of these powers could ever make. Whatever either slope of the New World would become, whether dependent or independent, they could never equal in wealth or power the coming developments of this valley of the Mississippi. De Soto, a Spaniard of commanding talents and unbounded ambition, after three years of arduous toil and severe hardships, stood upon the banks of the vast Mississippi. But he accomplished nothing for his King. In A. D. 1677 the Mississippi river was discovered by Marquette and Joliette, two French missionaries. They were followed by La Salle, a Jesuit of extraordinary courage and perseverance, together with a boundless spirit of enterprise, who, in the spring of A. D. 1682 descended the Mississippi river nearly to the mouth. Reascending a short distance, he took formal possession of the country in the name of Louis the Fourteenth, Le Grand Monarque of France. After appropriate military honors the occasion was closed by the ceremonies of the Catholic Church, under the conduct of Father Zenobe, the Recollet missionary of the expedition. These ceremonies consisted in the performing of two solemn chants and the setting up of the cross, the whole being concluded by loud shouts of Vive le roi.

At this period the whole country from Fort Frontenac to the Natchez villages was inhabited by wild and ferocious savages. The names of Natchez, Chickasaw, Cherokee and Illinois were sufficient to inspire terror among the Europeans, and to incite them to caution. Their prowess on the field of battle in other days had been sufficient to excite the admiration of their enemies, and to extort from them a just meed of praise. In spite of all this, no sooner was it announced that Louisiana had passed under the dominion of France than emigrants began to arrive, in order to occupy the new country open to their enterprise. The prominent idea before the minds of the emigrants had no respect either to honor, social happiness or religious liberty; but fortune was the leading incentive. That golden delusion which, a century and a half before, had destroyed DeSoto and his gallant band, had not yet passed away.

In A. D. 1699 M. Iberville began a settlement on the lower Mississippi, which still bears his name, but which cost him his life. He was succeeded by M. Crozat, a man of wealth, who for a number of years enjoyed the exclusive trade of the country. At this time society in France was in a state of ferment over the celebrated scheme of John Law, known as "the Western Company," to which Crozat transferred his interests in Louisiana, and which finally involved in ruin half of the French nobility. This was an integral part of that system of schemes by which John Law obtained almost entire control of the commerce both of Canada and Louisiana.

During all this time every inducement had been offered to influence emigrants to settle in southern Louisiana; but every effort to procure a settlement of the proper sort had proved abortive. The character of these first settlers, unlike those of the English colonies along the Atlantic seaboard, was of that restless sort least of all calculated to conserve the interests of good morals. Instead of being men of families, and possessing the refining influences and social restraints of home, they constituted that class of society known as "floating population." These being the founders of society in Louisiana, no one acquainted with the moral and social history of nations could fail to discern the confusion certain to ensue upon such an order of things. Society in after ages partakes more or less of the character of the first settlers of a country, especially if they are the natural ancestry of its population. Customs, adages, superstitions and opinions descend almost as readily as property, until the social likeness transmitted by the fathers is reproduced in the children. By the tender of her walls as an asylum of liberty, ancient Rome was filled with all classes of these restless individuals, who did not possess any of those wholesome restraints so necessary to the formation of pure society. And notwithstanding the introduction of women by means of the Sabino rape, Roman society for centuries bore the impress of its first generation.

Early in February, A. D. 1720, five hundred and eighty emigrants arrived at Mobile for the settlements of Louisiana, especially for the lower Mississippi. Among these were a large number of females from the houses of correction in Paris. These were taken from among the most audacious and abandoned characters of that licentious metropolis. Such individuals were not likely to elevate the standard of character or to refine the moral and social sentiment of any community in which they might chance to reside. Another weighty element of the population consisted in African slaves. In the autumn of A. D. 1719 the first lot of five hundred arrived, and every spring and autumn witnessed fresh arrivals, until in A. D. 1723 there were two thousand and ninety slaves in the colonies of New Orleans and Mobile. These being brought from every part of Africa, constituted as complete a collection of ignorance, superstition and moral darkness as was ever known in any part of the United States. Added to these, the bays and inlets along the coast were infested with a multitude of freebooters, who sought every opportunity to pillage on the commerce of the colonies. Besides these, the various inducements offered by the Western Company had secured to the numerical strength of the colonies additional accessions of workmen, apprentices, officers and soldiers—all unmarried men. They were settled between Fort Saint Philip and the Natchez villages. These came to get rich, and not to advance the interests of either society or religion.

Since March, A. D. 1719, war had raged between France and Spain, which brought the Province of Louisiana, as it were, between the two opposite fires of the Spaniards, both in Mexico and the Floridas. Their continual encroachments, together with the hostilities of the savages, contributed to keep the province in a state of continual preparation for war and of military display. Amid such excitements and with such elements of population as these society must have been unsettled in the extreme, and morals greatly corrupted.

Yours, LOUISIANA.

LITTLE FANNIE.

"Oh, Fannie, do behave yourself!" petulantly exclaimed a mother. "Won't you put the broom down? You'll break the mirror and set the house on fire. There, you are now in my basket, tumbling everything on the floor." Now you would think Fannie a very bad girl; but she was not. She only wished to be employed, and at her mother's last exclamation she burst into tears and said: "Oh, mamma, I didn't mean to be bad. I only wanted a needle to sew dollie's dress where she tore it."

The mother felt rebuked at these words, but she was not in her usually happy mood, and only eased her conscience by giving the child a needle, and went on with her work.

A little while afterward she noticed Fannie standing at the window, looking very unhappy. She was talking all to herself; and, listening, her mother heard her say: "Oh, how I wish it was warm and sunny, so I could go out of doors and play. I worry mamma so much. I don't want to be bad, but I don't know how to be good. May be I'll go to heaven some time, and then I'll know how." The mother heard no more. She turned away, to keep from acknowledging to her own heart that she had been very wrong; and she was glad when baby became restless, and she had something else to occupy her thoughts.

That night Fannie was sick, and her mother watched her very tenderly. As her fever grew higher and higher she became much alarmed. A physician was summoned, and he didn't like her symptoms, and said she must be cared for very tenderly. He came day after day, but his face had not yet brightened as he looked at his little patient. He saw how devoted was the mother, and he pitied her very much as he so often noted the traces of tears on her pale face.

One bright morning, when Nature had dressed mother earth in her snowy robe, and sent out the bright sun to show how beautiful her face could be made, he came again and found the crisis of her disease passed. He told the mother that she would live. She could not control her feelings. She burst into tears, and, leaving the room, fell upon her knees, and thanked her kind Heavenly Father for sparing her little girl.

None but she knew why she refused to be comforted during little Fannie's illness. She never told to any one all she did and heard that morning before sickness folded its mantle over her pleasant home, but she made up her mind to be more patient, and she came out from the fire of affliction a changed woman.

When Fannie was well she wondered why her mamma so often laid aside her work, when she knew she was busy, to amuse her. She didn't know why her mamma would let her get out all her pretty things and play Christmas, or anything she wished. The room didn't look as tidy as it used to, but it was so much prettier to her, and she was happy all day long; and then when it was nearly time for papa to come she could help put everything in its place, and just be waiting with a kiss to meet him.

Alas! too many mothers, like Fannie's, are too busy clothing and feeding the body to remember that the little ones have hearts and minds to be fed. They have nothing to amuse them, and they get cross. That makes the mother cross, and sometimes—yes, sometimes she wishes she didn't have such a responsibility. Isn't it so, mothers?

We think them bad, when we are the very ones who are to blame. If we would only leave undone the outward adornings, and set ourselves to beautifying their hearts in their earliest childhood, how many sins would be avoided. The beautiful lessons of love and charity would be more deeply fixed in the heart, for it is the mother who must guard that treasure. S. W. H.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

WAXAHACHIE, TEXAS, April 4, 1872.

Mr. Editor: It has now been five years, three months and seven days since I left my home in Mississippi for this far-off sunset land. During this time I have traveled thousands of miles in Texas. I have been in most society common to Texas, as I have been all the time engaged in the pastorate.

During all my wanderings my mind has often reverted to the country of my youth and to the scenes of my childhood. I love Mississippi almost as a child loves its parent. But now I am on the broad, beautiful prairies of Texas, where every imagination of the thoughts of man for beautiful natural objects can be gratified.

This is a great State, and is evidently destined to be the greatest on this continent. To cross the State is no small undertaking. It is equal to crossing many of the empires or kingdoms of the Old World.

We have a variety of climate. I spent one winter in southern Texas, and in the month of January I saw plenty of cotton blooms and green leaves. It is a rich country, with more insects and the greatest variety I ever saw. I often caught myself stopping on the roadside and gazing in astonished wonder at the variety, shapes, forms, colors and sizes of this kind of God's creation.

Southwestern Texas, bordering on the Gulf, is a higher and dryer country, and is more of a stock country. I think it a far better country for consumptive persons than Florida is. The constant breezes from the Gulf and from the South Pass mountains, dry and pure, and charged, as they are, with a great deal of electricity, are calculated to infuse new vigor in the system.

Northwest Texas—in which I live—is mainly a prairie country, with as rich land as the world can produce. It is of a black, waxy nature. A little shower of rain makes it very disagreeable, and an hour of sun and wind dries it up. It grows corn, wheat, rye, barley, etc., as finely as any portion of the United States, and the Mississippi bottom can't excel it for cotton. Our stock-raising privileges are as good as any in the world.

Our streams are beautiful, clear and sparkling. In this region they usually run from the northwest to the southeast. Out of their white rock banks runs as fine spring-water as I ever saw anywhere. My well is within two feet of my dining-room door, is eighteen feet deep, with as good drinking water as can be found anywhere. Our entire town and county are supplied with just such water.

East of the Trinity is mainly a timbered country, with a diversity of soil and a great variety of timber. I think all the timbered country of Texas sickly, and all the prairie country healthy.

Our pine lumber comes from eastern Texas, Florida and Mississippi. There are three residences now going up on my street that are of lumber from southern Mississippi. It costs us here from $3 to $5 per one hundred feet. On most all of our creeks are portable saw-mills, cutting the hard timber into lumber. It is worth from $2 to $3 per hundred. There is a great deal of hedging now, which is a cheap and lasting fence.

The richness of the soil, the mild, desirable climate, and the cheapness of the land are the great inducements held out to emigrants, who are sweating out their very existence in the older, worn-out countries, and only making a bare support.

Again, we are not suffering from free negroes and Yankee thieves, as many of the older States are. In northern Texas we have but few negroes, and they are not troublesome. The carcasses are not here to induce the carpet-bag vultures, so common to localities where freedmen's votes are to be obtained.

Our people are out of debt and are making money; but money is very scarce just now—scarcer than I have ever known in Texas before.

Farmers went to work earlier than usual this year. The wheat crop is unusually promising.

Society is excellent here. There are academies and schools all over the land. Marvin College, situated in this town and of this Conference, is in a most prosperous condition. Being a trustee, I believe I am posted as to its condition. We have a few young men from Mississippi, and I doubt very much whether they could do better anywhere else. I will say, right here, that I am the corresponding secretary of the board of trustees, and will take great pleasure in corresponding with all teachers and persons who in any way feel an interest in our college. The present session closes on the twentieth of June, and the next begins on the first of September.

Emigrants from the older States say there is less disaffection here than in any other State. I have traveled from the eastern border of the State as far west as the white man dare go for fear of the savage Indians, and from north to south, and have never yet carried weapons of any kind.

The church in Texas is in a most prosperous condition. We have forty thousand Methodists and five Conferences in the State.

The spirit of education was never higher in any State than in ours now. Academies and colleges are springing up all over the country, as if by magic.

The State is being striped all over with railroads. I get letters and papers from Jackson, Mississippi, in four days from the time of mailing; from St. Louis in a very short time. At Waxahachie we are within twelve miles of the Central railroad.

Texas can live of her own resources. We have our salt, coal, copper, silver and a great variety of different kinds of mines.

I came to this region in advance of any of my acquaintances, but now they are scattered over five or six counties, and there are several in this town. I have located my family here—have property of my own—but I am as much of an itinerant to-day as when I first itinerated.

This article is not written to induce any one to move to Texas. I advise all who wish a change to come and see.

I am, with feelings of great kindness, yours in Christ,

T. W. HINES.

OUR MOTHER.

Our mother—our dear, sainted mother—what a halo pervades the very name! The self-sacrificing, unwearied devotion of a mother! Can we, do we fully appreciate it? Are we leading the lives her example, earnest prayers and admonitions would have us lead? Ah! we may be causing tears to flow from eyes that have ever beamed with loving, tender solicitude—agonizing struggles to tear hearts ever overflowing with unselfish acts of love—leading the patient feet into paths of trial too rough for their tender tread.

When the sweet face is placid in death, and the gentle hands lie folded over the quiet heart, will the remembrance of that mother be one of remorseful anguish or grateful sorrow? As we stand by the bier and rain tears over the calm face, will they be embittered with the knowledge that the hands lie over a heart wearied with the life we have made sorrowful, or will the chrism of a dying blessing soften the heart-grief?

We hold the answer in our own hands. We can render that life a happiness or a bane. And when we assume the fearful responsibility of parents we will appreciate all our mother has been to us.

Look at that mother when the jewel of maternity crowns a happy wifehood—when, with her soul thrilling with the sweet, sacred consciousness of motherhood, she bows with joyful awe to the All-Father, earnestly invoking strength and wisdom to guide the young life in paths of rectitude. Watch her through the anxieties and cares of childhood; the loving care with which she smooths the paths its little feet toddles through; the fond pleasure with which she watches and fosters the expanding mind and heart, strengthening and training each good impulse, prayerfully endeavoring to restrain the evil; in the hour of sickness and peril, when with unselfish devotion she anticipates every want, heroically suppressing all emotion to speak cheerfully to her child—the self-denial to be exerted, the victories over self to be accomplished, so that precept may be followed by example. And gay childhood ripens into maturity when the roseate future seems just ready to throw its vail of happiness over the glowing, eager soul, the bright dreams of ambition clamorous to be realized, when life seems fraught with happiness, and every friend worthy of confidence and ardent affection—oh! then the mother's trials are but commencing! On her devolves the task of pointing out the shoals and quicksands that lie thickly strewn over life's pathway; with mild, judicious counsel to help her child select those companions that will merit the confiding love bestowed on them.

Should those admonitions be willfully disregarded, and the heart receive into its inmost sanctuary one whom her clear intuition perceives to be utterly unworthy, what anguish she endures, knowing the bitter humiliation and lost faith in humanity that must follow. How her soul yearns over the one who returns her solicitude with bitter, cruel injustice.

O sons and daughters, beloved of a dear patient mother, are you, by word or action, rendering her life a grievous burden, heavy to be borne? Pause and reflect: Which loves you the best, which is your friend—the cause that is drifting you from her and your God, or the one who, by every word and act, has proved her disinterested affection? And when that kind glance and loving smile softens no more life's trials, which will be the chosen remembrance—the dying blessing, or the sad, tearful, reproachful farewell?

Let the last tremulous words from the feeble lips be the joyful hope of a reunion; let the fast-glazing eyes be uplifted to heaven in thankfulness, that her darlings will meet her again in that home where all is love and peace and joy. Then the memory of "our mother" will be darkened by no shadows, and "Peace, the white dove," will brood over the tranquil altar of the heart.

HOMES OF PIETY AND BEAUTY.

"The first sure symptom of a mind in health
Is rest of soul, and pleasures felt at home."

Mr. Editor: It appears to be a custom among the rich and fashionable of the present day to publish to the world everything which renders them conspicuous, especially in social life—their marriages, weddings and bridal trousseaus, their magnificent presents and beautiful homes, as if all the world were particularly interested in them as individuals standing out in bold relief from the multitude which surrounds them.

I have seen many so-called beautiful homes, where all that wealth could bestow and art monopolize to give a charm of elegance and taste to their splendid mansions—their grounds laid out in the most picturesque style; flower gardens, shadowy walks and trellised arbors, so enchanting for repose, where art was made to blend with nature in perfect harmony to form an earthly paradise of exquisite loveliness. But as Addison has truly remarked, their improvements were enjoyed more by the observer than by those who possessed them, for they lived more abroad than at home.

There are some exceptions, however, for I have still fresh in my memory one never to be forgotten—a most charming residence of a friend, situated on a romantic inlet of the sea, whose waves washed its pebbly shore, and as the sun rose upon its purpled flood and sent its warm flush over the small islands that dotted its surface, they looked like emeralds rising from the ocean's bed, crowned with the glory of the dawning day.

The coast was lined with palaces of the prince-merchants retired from the business of city life, where huge rocks were brought in requisition to form their structures, which gave them the appearance of castles on the Rhine.

There was one residence which might be classed among the truly beautiful:

"Type of the wise, who soar, but not to roam,
True to their kindred, friends of heaven and home."

For in this mansion God was worshiped in spirit and in truth. Their ancestors were devoted servants of the Methodist Church in early days, and when they departed their mantles fell upon their children, who have borne a noble testimony to the gospel of Jesus; and the owner of this lovely residence was an active lay member of the church, and connected with every benevolent enterprise for its good. The present generation are indebted to him for many a noble institution which he aided in establishing for the benefit of the poor. My sainted friend has gone up to receive his reward since I last saw him; and one told me that the descendants of his large family, with all their collateral branches, numbered forty, and were communicants of the Methodist Church, and bowed at the same altar; proving the falsity of that false maxim of the wicked world, that children of religious parents are the worst. There are many other beautiful homes independent of these outward advantages. I have seen such in a log cabin, where harmony prevailed, and the incense of prayer ascended from the family altar to the throne above. The house at Bethany must have been a home of beauty, where Martha, Mary and their brother Lazarus entertained Jesus as their guest! And oh! what manifestations of divine love were there exhibited, whose influence has lasted eighteen hundred years, and will while time shall last!

Many of the beautiful homes of our Southern land have been destroyed and laid in ashes by the desolations of war; but the altar of prayer cannot be touched by fire or the sword. Its incense can go up from devout hearts under all circumstances, if, like Jacob, with only a stone for a pillow, beneath the glorious canopy of heaven. It is from the sacred influence of the hearth and home that the world is to be changed. When that is free from pride and false ambition, the gospel of Jesus will enlighten all nations, and send its rich perfume around the globe.

It is the virtue of domestic worth
Which shall refine and purify the earth,
And round the world their hallowed power extend,
Till heaven and earth in moral beauty blend.

THE SINNER'S BURIAL.

Wrapt in a Christless shroud,
He sleeps the Christless sleep;
Above him the eternal cloud,
Beneath the fiery deep.

Laid in a Christless tomb,
There bound with felon chain,
He waits the terrors of his doom,
The judgment, and the pain.

O Christless shroud, how cold!
How dark, O Christless tomb!
O grief that never can grow old!
O endless, hopeless doom!

O Christless sleep, how sad!
What waking shall thou know?
For thee no star, no dawning glad,
Only the lasting woe!

The rocks and hills in vain
Shall be the sinner's call;
O day of wrath, and death and pain,
The lost soul's funeral!

O Christless soul, awake,
Ere thy last sleep begins!
O Christ, the sleeper's slumbers break,
Burst thou the bonds of sin.

Textual Helps from Bible Lands.

BY REV. C. S. ROBINSON, D. D.

THE OMNIBUS IN SYRIA.

Once, when we were close by the reputed tomb of Lazarus, our dragoman suddenly disclosed, by a peculiar way he had of managing his horse, that as soon as our troop was deployed in a line, so as to be able to listen attentively to him, he would communicate an important piece of information.

We were at the moment upon the verge of that profound declivity, just looking down on the precipitous path which led toward Jericho and the Jordan. From so commanding an eminence any one can easily imagine our eyes would reach more than half around the horizon.

We were soon in silent waiting, all along in a row. Then with a sweep of his hand, of indescribable grandeur, covering in one extensive swing the entire landscape from the Dead sea to Bethel, he exclaimed, thus fixing forever a disputed site for lost Bethphage: "Dere is the place where our Savior he get his donkey!"

DONKEYS IN THE BIBLE.

I confess we were all shocked somewhat painfully by the supreme ludicrousness of the thing. One is subject to these shocks in the journey through the Holy Land. But a moment's reflection was enough to bring back to our recollection that the Lord of all did once ride into Jerusalem upon an "ass colt." And the common English word for the animal's name is donkey. No one was certain where Bethphage was located, but it was not far from Bethany. The simple-hearted Egyptian was correct enough; only he had become in his enthusiasm slightly magniloquent.

The fact is, that in those days horses were not so much in use. Indeed, mules and asses were the aristocratic and royal animals.

When David, hearing of Adonijah's rebellion, wished to forestall his success by an abdication in favor of Solomon, he issued an immediate order to this effect: "Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon, my son, to ride upon mine own mule, and bring him down to Gihon." So we read in the Judges (x, 3, 4,) that Jair the Gileadite "had thirty sons that rode on thirty ass colts, and they had thirty cities, which are called Havoth-jair unto this day." And again, (xii, 13,) Abdon "had forty sons and thirty nephews that rode on threescore and ten ass colts; and he judged Israel eight years." We are not left in doubt as to the high honor this implied, for the expression became proverbial for proud rulers; (v, 10.) "Speak, ye that ride on white asses, ye that sit in judgment." Hence we see that for a royal triumph our Lord chose the common show. "And Jesus, when he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written, Fear not, daughter of Zion; behold thy King cometh, sitting on an ass' colt."

STREET LOCOMOTION.

I have called the donkey the Eastern "omnibus." It really answers to our street cars or stages. These animals are at every doorway and on every corner, their red morocco hunchback saddles shining in one's face the moment he goes out of the house. The Egyptian ass especially is a somewhat philosophic beast. They never indulge him with a traveler alone. The donkey-boys form a class by themselves. They run behind with a heavy cane in their hands for persuasive thwacks at the exact moment when the little canter is about to break into a walk.

Take the stick into your own hand, and the omnibus stops. He will drop into a dead plodding pace, from which there is no starting him. For why should he trot or run? He cannot get away from the whip which he helps to carry. It advances as fast as he does. But he leaps miraculously when he hears that Arabic voice behind him, and knows his goad is in the hands of the driver in the rear.

The first experience which a foreigner has of this method of conveyance is exceedingly novel, not to say funny. A little insignificant animal, less than three feet high, is brought up in answer to one's beckoning finger. He gets under your body in a curiously adroit way. I used to think the boys had a genius at inserting him in the exact spot under the center of motion. When one's feet, dangling six inches more or less from the ground, seem so close to the proper path, he instinctively raises the question whether it is not a contemptibly mean thing, and savoring of sheer imposition, for him to do, quite a grown up, able-bodied man as he is, to insist upon such a creature's doing the work of moving on for him. But while he reflects he is off, for the donkey-boy, that unrelenting swarthy lad of fifteen years, has no scruples; flipping the black silk tassels of his red cap over on the side of his head next the sun, jerking up his dirty-white linen trowsers a new notch, he deals the unfortunate animal a dexterous punch in the sore he conveniently exposes on his haunches, and away you go. Fore and aft, the driver lets loose screams in Arabic to keep people out of the way of you, coming dangerously. It remains no longer a question of magnanimity. So at last you put ahead, with only one frantic gleam of satisfaction in your perturbed mind, and shining on your hot face, that no one whom you care for is near enough to see what a figure you cut.

SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATIONS.

There is hardly any end to the passages which find exposition in the habits and behavior of these animals.

You may notice a patriarch any morning, going on a journey like Abraham, arising to "saddle his ass," and if he has occasion to advance on foot at all, he will bid some lad, "Abide here with the ass." You certainly will have a hundred chances to answer the question of Job, (vi, 5,) "Doth the wild ass bray when he hath grass?" And when one has been watching with visible feeling a young donkey in the field, so unspeakably awkward, and yet so exuberantly frisky, he will know what is meant by "a vain man" who "would be wise," though he be "born like a wild ass' colt." We used to note particularly how intelligent and yet how obstinate was the persistency of these creatures, as they came in with the cattle at nightfall, in making direct course each to his own place of fodder. Then we seemed to understand better than over the rebuke aimed at dull and ungrateful Israel. Even these brutes, the stupidest on record, knew their "master's crib." With their long ears down, their necks bent sullenly, their slow plod nowise increased, these asses wound their way sedately on among the confused crowds of animals, until before any one saw them they had arrived at the manger and had buried their noses in the meal they remembered. Only Israel it is, who "doth not know," only my people it is, who "doth not consider."—Christian Weekly.

DIVORCE.

A correspondent wants us to state what is the Christian doctrine of divorce. By divorce is meant not merely separation, a mensa et thoro, from bed and board, without the liberty of remarrying, but separation, a vinculo matrimonii, from the bond of matrimony, so as to allow the innocent party to remarry. From the teaching of Christ in the Sermon on the Mount, and elsewhere, it is clear that he considered the liberty granted to a man by the law of Moses, to put away his wife by giving her a bill of divorcement, for any cause that he considered justifiable, with the liberty of remarrying, as ceasing with the Jewish theocracy. The toleration was only temporary, and for the prevention of greater evils. Christ allowed of divorce for only one cause—that is, conjugal infidelity. When the Romish Church elevated marriage into a sacrament, it disallowed of divorce even for adultery. At the Reformation some of the Reformed Churches allowed of divorce for desertion. This addition to our Lord's legislation was based on a misinterpretation of First Corinthians vii, 15, and it has been unfortunately indorsed in the Westminster Confession of Faith. The phrase, "is not under bondage in such cases," means simply is not obliged to follow him up to live with him—it is an unwarrantable addition to say "or to remain single," as Calvin and others do say. She is bound to remain single if her husband deserts her, unless he cohabits with another woman; then she is free to remarry. That is the New Testament law in the premises.

But what about the civil law? We have nothing to do with the civil law, except to obey it when it does not conflict with the law of Christ. If it commands us to do anything contrary to the law of Christ, we must not do it, and abide the penalty. If it allows us to do anything contrary to the law of Christ, we must not do it, any more than if it granted no such permission. A Christian minister, of course, cannot consistently solemnize the rites of matrimony between parties to one or both of whom a divorce has been granted by the State on grounds not recognized by the law of Christ.

The facility with which divorces are granted in this country is appalling—it saps the foundation of society. In one of the smallest States five hundred and ninety-three divorces were granted in five years. In another State there was a divorce for every nineteen marriages during the year; in another, one for every eleven. In one city there was more than one divorce for every day in the year—three hundred and sixty-eight! In another, three hundred and twenty-eight during the year! In some States half a score of causes are assigned for a legal divorce! These are shocking facts. It is high time that the Christians of this country were looking into this matter. The church, in particular, must see that she is not particeps criminis in the premises.

It does not indeed follow from this loose and unchristian legislation that therefore Christians may not hold office in the States which sanction it. That would border on fanaticism. Rather let all who occupy influential positions in society use their influence to prevent the farther spread of the detestable "free-love" leaven, and to restore the sanctity of marriage, and to throw around this divine institution those guards by which it was environed at the beginning, and which have received the emphatic sanction of the great Author of our holy religion.

The question is asked: "Can Christian lawyers consistently prosecute suits for divorce based upon other causes than conjugal infidelity?" There may be cases in which a wife may find it impossible to live with a brutal husband, or a husband to live with a bad wife; in such cases the innocent party may find it necessary to seek the protection of the law in granting a divorce a mensa et thoro, without any intention to remarry. A Christian lawyer may consistently prosecute a suit of this character; but he must take care not to give any countenance to a divorce a vinculo, severing the bond of matrimony, so as to allow of remarrying, unless for the one scriptural cause.

Those who wish more information on the subject of divorce may find it in McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, volume 3; Dr. Wiley's Religion of the Family; Watson's Institutes; and (on the wrong side of the question, we are sorry to say) Milton's Tetrachordon.

Since writing the foregoing we have met with the following quotation by Dr. Deems, in his "Jesus," from what he calls "President Woolsey's very valuable essay on Divorce:" "The general principle, serving as the groundwork of all these declarations, is, that legal divorce does not, in the view of God, and according to the correct rule of morals, authorize either husband or wife they separated to marry again, with the single exception that when the divorce occurs on account of a sexual crime, the innocent party may, without guilt, contract a second marriage."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A GLASS OF "GOD'S WRATH."—In one of the quiet inland towns of this Commonwealth, many years ago, there lived an able and faithful minister of the gospel. There was in his parish at a certain time an unusual interest in religion, and a sermon was preached on the "Wrath of God." It was a very pungent discourse, and deeply affected the congregation. After the sermon an inquiry meeting was held, and many remained. Among the number were two wicked young men, who, from motives of curiosity or mischief, placed themselves among the inquirers. They tried to disturb the meeting and distract the attention of those who were really serious. After the meeting they went to the hotel, and walking up to the bar, called for something to drink. They were asked what they would have. One of them replied: "Give me a glass of the wrath of God." The bar-tender turned him out something in the usual way, and he drank it, and instantly fell dead upon the floor! A powerful impression was made upon the young men of that place, and to-day that event is remembered there with fear and dread. God took him at his word. "For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup; it is full of mixture, and he poureth of the same." This man had "drank at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury."

ANY ONE can drift; but it takes prayer, religious principle, earnestness of purpose, constant watching, to resist the evil of this world, to struggle against the tide.

What the Sacred Books of India Have Done for Woman.

Those who, in our day, seem filled with admiration for the Shaster of the Hindoo, as compared with the Bible of the Christian, would do well to select, as a single point of contrast, the treatment which they claim respectively for woman. The position which the New Testament gives to the female members of the early church is well known. They were honored with a share in the work of the gospel, as well as in all its blessings for this life and the life to come; and they were to be loved by their husbands with an affection so sacred that it was made to symbolize the relation of Christ to his church. But the Shaster tells us that a woman has no other god on earth but her husband. The most excellent of all good works that she can perform is to gratify him with the strictest obedience. This should be her only devotion. Though he be ogre, she must still regard him as her god. If he laughs, she must also laugh; if he weeps, she must also weep; if he sings, she must also be in an ecstasy.

Again, says the same reverend authority: "If a man goes on a journey his wife shall not divert herself by play, nor see any public show, nor shall laugh, nor shall dress herself in jewels or fine clothes, nor hear music, nor sit at the window, nor shall see anything choice and rare, nor shall view her face in a mirror; she shall never amuse herself in any such agreeable employment during the absence of her husband."

The Hindoo wife is married without her choice to a man whom she has never seen; she becomes at once a slave, passing her life, in most cases, within the inclosure surrounding her house. She is probably one of a plurality of wives shut in together to hopeless jealousy and strife. She prepares her husband's food, and fans him while he eats it; she also fans him or rubs his feet to induce sleep. She never eats with him, or even in his presence. She never walks by his side nor calls him by name; she receives no sympathy; no choice of hers is consulted; her comfort and welfare are never taken into account. If she give birth to a female child, her own disappointment and sorrowful foreboding for its future womanhood are aggravated frequently by the rage and abuse of her husband, and cases are not wanting where the unlucky mother has suffered violence and death.

"A widow in India," says the author of the Land of the Vedas, "is undoubtedly the most miserable of her sex anywhere." The suttee on which she was formerly expected to burn with the body of her deceased husband is abolished since the British rule was inaugurated, but to live is scarcely better than death. The idea is widely inculcated that the death of a husband may be an evidence that the gods are displeased on account of some defects in the abject devotion of the wife, and the poor woman is taught to feel the pangs of supposed guilt. From the day of the husband's death all her ornaments are laid off, and she dresses in a dismal robe, her fine black hair is cut off and her head is shorn. She must practice austerities, eating only once a day of the very coarsest food, sleeping no longer on a bed, but on the ground. "Let her emaciate her body by living voluntarily on flowers, roots and fruit," says the law of Menu; "but let her not, when her husband is deceased, ever pronounce the name of another man." Many of the cruel restrictions of widowhood also pertain to the young girl who has lost the husband to whom she had been espoused, but had never seen. What wonder that tens of thousands of these, fleeing from a respectability which is so cruel, find their way to the worse degradation of the brothel?—Atlantic.

A TURNING-POINT.—"The turning-point in my life," said a gentleman, "was, when I was a boy, not going to a low circus. Some kind of low show and circus came into town, and of course all the boys were dying to go. My mother did not want me to go. I might have stolen off. I had money enough in my pocket, the boys did all they could to persuade me, and, more than all, people were going in squads to see it. It is so easy to go with the multitude; it is so hard to make a stand, break away, and go the other way.

"That is exactly what I did. I 'mastered the situation.' I mastered myself and did not go.

"It was the resolution then called out, and called out perhaps for the first time, which has, under God, served me many a good turn since, and made me what I am."

OF ALL PASSIONS, jealousy is that which exacts the hardest service and pays the bitterest wages. Its service is—to watch the success of our enemy; it wages—to be sure of it.

A PROTESTANT PAPER, to be named Roma Evangelica, is soon to appear in Rome.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE estimated value of the property of the Established Church in England is more than $820,000,000.

CONVERTED ROMANISTS.—There are seven Baptist churches in Mexico, composed entirely of converted papists.

TEN THOUSAND inhabitants of the city of Richmond, Virginia, one-fifth of the population of the city, are members of the Baptist churches.

THE British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel Among the Jews has an annual income of £8,000, employs twenty-five missionaries, and has brought into the Christian faith between twenty and thirty thousand Jews, four hundred of whom are now ministers and missionaries, one hundred of them among their own brethren.

SIXTY Protestant churches, varying in number of members from ten to five hundred each, have been formed in Mexico. Dr. Riley, in one of his letters, gives an account of the administration of the Lord's Supper in an ex-papal church to four hundred communicants, converts from Romanism, the administrators being Dr. Riley and four ex-Roman priests!

NEW SECT IN ENGLAND.—Another kind of religionists has sprung up in England, from which country a large part of the recruits of the Mormons came. A sect calling itself (very properly) "Peculiar People" has taken possession of one of the arches of the London and Dover railway, near the Walworth road. In this dreary vault the Peculiars have fitted up a sort of chapel with benches and a platform. There is space left for dancing, which, it appears, is one of the ceremonies. The brothers and sisters, upon meeting, kiss each other. They then sing a hymn. Then somebody makes a long prayer. Then either a sister or a brother preaches from the Book of Revelations. Then some boy or girl has convulsions, apparently epileptic. Then the meeting breaks up with what appears to be a general "break-down," with much kicking and leaping, furious gesticulations and maniacal exercises.

JAPANESE YIELDING.—Mr. Ballagh, missionary to Japan, writes to the Christian Intelligencer that on signing their contract with Mr. Clark, son of Rev. Dr. Clark, of Albany, who had been invited to come to Japan as a teacher, the government inserted a clause that he was not to speak on religion. He indignantly protested, and the government at last yielded the point. The officers in charge congratulated him, saying: "You have conquered. You have battered down Japanese walls." Prof. Scott, of the Yeddo College, finding that his class uniformly parsed the word "God" as a common noun, thereby securing their own gods from disrespect, finally told them that "God" in English is a proper noun, and if they wished him to teach them English they must call it so. One intelligent lad said at once: "That is because there is but one God." "Exactly so," replied the teacher, and the point was gained.

GOD'S WORK IN BOHEMIA.—At a meeting recently held in Edinburg much interesting information in regard to the gospel work in the land of Huss was communicated by several gentlemen who have lately visited Bohemia. The reverence with which the traditions of John Huss were looked upon by the people, and the excellent edition of the Scriptures they possessed, and which had been translated in very early times by the learned men of Prague who understood the original Greek and Hebrew, were signs that the country only wanted something to stir the people to new life. A church had been opened in Randnitz. The opening service was attended by the burgomaster and the members of the town council. It was now attended by two hundred persons. Two colporteurs were now at work in the country, and the want of others was very much felt. The Bohemians had a very fine set of hymns, and the people, or a large number of them, knew these by heart. The country was very ready to receive the gospel, and all that was wanted was men.

SOUTHERN POLYNESIA, that portion of the Pacific Islands lying east of one hundred and eighty degrees east longitude and south of the equator, together with Melanesia, black lands, inhabited by a race of negroes called Papuans, the southwestern part of Malaysia, have been the scenes of missionary enterprise since the beginning of the present century, by the London, the Wesleyan, and the Church Missionary societies; while that section of Polynesia lying north of the equator, and Micronesia, exclusive of Japan, have been evangelized in part by our own American Board. According to Dr. Mullens, secretary of the London Missionary Society, "in more than three hundred islands of Eastern and Southern Polynesia the gospel has swept heathenism entirely away. The missionaries of the four great societies have gathered four hundred thousand people under Christian influences, of whom a quarter of a million are living still, and fifty thousand of these are communicants."

SOMEWHERE more than a year ago Menelek, King of Shoa, in Southern Abyssinia, applied to one of the released prisoners of King Theodore, requesting him to come to Shoa to superintend some industrial works the young king had projected. Mr. Walmeir replied that on being delivered from prison he had consecrated his life to the preaching of Christianity, by which alone heathen nations could be saved and brought into prosperity. He promised to come, however, and bring a company of artisans with him, provided the king would promise to give his support to the establishment of a Protestant mission in his country. To this the king has assented, promising never to hinder the preaching of the gospel, and sending Mr. Waldmeir a safe conduct and money for his journey. As Menelek rules over some six millions of subjects, the prospects of the mission are extremely favorable. The Christian world will see the hand of Providence in the almost simultaneous publication of a translation of the New Testament in the Galla language by Dr. Kraff, another of the Abyssinian prisoners. The Gallas, said to be subject to King Menelek, are physically and mentally the most vigorous of the African races.

ENCOURAGED by the success of the Old Catholic movement in Germany, and emboldened by the political state of Spain, a reformed Catholic party has been organized in Madrid, with a central committee, consisting of a president, a secretary and five priests. A manifesto has been issued (dated November 26;) a periodical, "La Iglesa Espanola," established, and an office opened for communication. The manifesto is reported to be a dignified and able production, affirming the inherent independence of the church as founded by the word of God and in conformity with the nature of things. It repudiates Protestantism, asserting that its object is not schism but union, according to the true social relation of Christianity. The party claims: 1. Purity of doctrine according to the New Testament, to the exclusion of all decrees of councils, papal bulls, decrees with encyclicals. 2. The separation and independence of Church and State. 3. Election to all ecclesiastical offices by universal suffrage. 4. Abolition of the use of the Latin tongue in all the services of the church, abolition of the forced celibacy of the clergy, the abolition of all payments for the sacraments and services of the church. 5. The self-government of the church by periodical assemblies and councils.

RELIGION IN PARIS.—The French correspondent of Evangelical Christendom says that Christianity is at an exceedingly low ebb in Paris. He says: "Congregations diminish, although eloquence may draw the crowd; and there is very little aggressive action. One asks right and left what are church members doing to bring souls to God? and the almost universal reply is, 'Nothing collectively.' Faith has been stunned, and has not yet revived." Yet there are some who boldly proclaim the simple gospel, and under their preaching inquirers begin to appear. Christians from England and other lands are laboring by the distribution of tracts and Bibles, and by schools, and not without hopeful results. Lectures are delivered also by the pastors every week in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, on various interesting subjects having a religious tendency, and they are well attended. Every party feels that a crisis is at hand, and that the efforts of infidelity to wield the masses for false social reform ought to be earnestly resisted. M. Thiers enters heartily into these views. His words spoken before a committee deserve recording: "Fear is felt," said he, "at the vast democratic element contained in the capital. Those who compose it have thrown themselves into the Internationale, through ignorance of the true laws of economy. Can it be imputed to them as a crime? Is it not better to instruct, to enlighten them, and seek to rally them around the cause of order." These words of Thiers are not only true, but profoundly significant. The only effectual way to meet infidel radical reform is to Christianize and enlighten the masses, and to teach them true Christian political economy. Of course, if Protestants do not take hold of the work in earnest Romanists will occupy the field. Indeed they are now at work. The same correspondent says: "The Roman Catholics are exerting all their powers of organization and priestly influence to keep their people, and regain those who are lost to them. They are now forming a League of God. The Roman liturgy is restored in the Paris churches, and the Gallican ejected. But the infidel power, bold and subtle, is increasing in influence daily."

THE LUST OF PRAISE.

Praise has its uses for good. Many a boy has been helped and stimulated by it while plodding his weary way up the hill of knowledge. To the young, when judiciously bestowed, it is healthful and inspiring, promoting self-respect, and encouraging effort in the direction of self-improvement. To the diffident it reveals the possession of powers and capacity not before suspected. To the disconraged and timorous it is often as an elixir of life, inciting them to fresh and successful enterprises. It is natural and right that men should desire the good opinions and commendations of others. Solomon declares of his model woman that "she shall be praised." Paul speaks of "the brother whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches," and he does not fail to commend by name many who were eminent for their piety and usefulness. The desire of praise, as it comes from God, is appealed to and sanctioned as one of the noblest principles, and in its due degree and place the love of human approbation is a most beneficent and elevating feeling.

Like almost every other good thing implanted in man, it is liable to perversion and abuse. Christ condemned the chief rulers who shrunk from his open discipleship, because "they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." He exposes this inordinate love of worldly honor as an insuperable barrier to salvation when he puts the question: "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" The praise of men may be opposed to the praise of God, and the love of earthly honor may lead to the forfeiture of the divine. No doubt the passionate fondness for personal admiration keeps many in the circles of gayety and fashion, who, but for it, would espouse the discipleship of Jesus. The thirst for applause and social distinction outweighs the convictions of truth and duty. A cowardly deference to the tone and maxims of the world overcome the motives which would otherwise lead to a profession of religion.

Even in the Christian character an inordinate love of praise may assume the proportions of a dormity. It becomes an evil disease, growing with what it feeds upon, until it assumes the nature of a monomania. It takes the form of a propensity to extort commendation and to fish for compliments. Friendships and associations are determined and prized only as they yield their tribute to this inexorable appetite. The only use which the slave of this passion has for society is to extract from it the honey of adulation and flattery. Notoriety and publicity are sought as the means not so much of doing good, or as incidental to posts of usefulness, but as affording the requisite occasions for self-glorification and display. When this plague-spot gets into the soul there is a morbid sensitiveness lest the man shall not get credit for all that he is and does, and lest what he claims should in any part be attributed to somebody else. There is no joy in the work unless the worker is made conspicuous. Wherever the stream flows, the fountain must be remembered. Wherever the light shines, the luminary must not be shorn of a single ray of its glory. It is not enough that the good is done and that God knows who has done it, and that eternity will make it manifest. Such an egotism could never have consented to perplex the world about the authorship of Junius, or to have toiled beneath the sea to build the foundations of the Indias. The meed of praise must be accorded, and without it there is unrest and dissatisfaction. To be beautiful and not to be admired, is not to be beautiful. To be good and useful and gifted without popular recognition, is to be nothing.

This lust of praise is self, made offensively prominent, and demanding the pre-eminence. Obscurity is worse than death; moderate commendation is resented as an insult. Weak stimulants might have satisfied at first, but, like the toper advanced in his cups, only the strongest in quality, abundantly supplied, will meet the cravings of a long-pampered appetite. The fulsome encomiums, which nauseate and disgust everybody else, are appropriated with gresdy complacency. Of course the sweet and gentle graces of meekness and humility perish in such a moral atmosphere as this. Mephitic gases do not extinguish life more surely than does this morbid love of praise destroy these most rare and perfect plants of holiness. It is like poisonous vines and noxious weeds in the garden of the soul, overrunning the soil and choking out the good seed of the gospel. Humility and meekness are likely to be lost from the graces of the Christian life, and to be substituted by egotism and pride. Modesty is so rare as almost to be ashamed of herself, and to need an apology where her moderation and self-abasement are supposed to exist.

This lust of praise is one of the most prominent and pernicious perversions of the times. It is an insidious and stealthy enemy to spirituality, and rests as a blight upon thousands who are probably unconscious of its presence. Preachers and hearers, writers and readers are liable to the infection. It has come to be the style and habit of the day—a disease which has well-nigh reached the epidemic point of virulency. Personal puffery was never, perhaps, carried to greater and more sickening extremes, and self-praise is so common as hardly to excite remark. From being merely tolerated as the weakness of eccentricity or of mental aberration, it has come to be a virtue and a merit. It is indeed a vicious habit of the times, pervading worldly literature and society, and seriously invading those precincts where "the mind that was in Christ" should be supreme. It is for the religious press to set an example in accordance with the spirit of the gospel, and for Christian men to cultivate a better taste and a more scriptural type of character. Among the most beautiful attributes of love are these: "Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own."

THE UNCLEAN THING.

How those two objectionable words in an advertising card escaped both publisher and editor we cannot tell. We would have vouched that they were not there, but after long and careful search they were found, and at once condemned and executed. Our friend and correspondent has shown the great value of advertissments in the Advocate. They are all carefully read and sifted by our subscribers, even to the crossing of a t and the dotting of an i. We thank our temperance readers for their concern in this matter, and we are glad to know that they are jealous lest our pages should be contaminated. Let our advertisers reflect upon this fact, that every card is subjected to the most careful analysis of our cold-water subscribers, and that they are the best of customers and buyers, except where "wines and liquors" are involved.

If a man were snake-bit, or in extremis mortis from any cause, he would search our columns in vain for any notice of the popular specific. Our reports of the markets and the price current are silent as to the rates of old Bourbon or Monongahela, and we are careful that there shall be no smell of whisky in any department of the paper. We are declining advertisements every week on moral grounds, and we believe that the Publishing Committee, agent and editor all belong to the straitest sect of uncompromising teetotalers. Meanwhile, eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and of almost everything else worth having. The whisky interest is one of the most powerful in the country. The capital embarked in it is formidable, and as an article of manufacture and commerce it is hardly second to any staple of the land. The appetite which demands this flood of distilled poison is one of the most relentless and unconquerable known to human nature. It is as a torrent of fire sweeping through the country, and devastating society. It sends its tongues of flame into every crevice of society, kindling all fierce and malignant passions, and is like an eruption from hell.

One thing is clear, that Christian people should keep themselves free from one of the greatest evils which curses the world. They should neither drink it nor deal in it. A habit which craves it should be crucified at once, and a business which touches it should be given up. Money should be no temptation to a conscientious man to induce him even to receive whisky on commission. Better to live in poverty, and to die with a hope of heaven, than to be enriched by traffic in this vilest of commodities. It is an "unclean thing," which we are not to touch in any manner, even the remotest. To touch it, or to countenance its use, involves us in the crimes and misery which it brings upon the world.

NOT OF FREQUENT OCCURRENCE.

At the late session of the West Virginia Conference, Methodist E. Church, Rev. J. C. Sidebottom, an elder in the Baptist Church, and Prof. F. W. Wood, Ph. D., of the Church of Rome, were received into the Conference. It makes a great change in men for them to be thoroughly converted to Christ.

I noticed an account of a revival in the Nashville Advocate, in which a number of members of a Baptist church were converted and joined the Methodist Church, and a number of others experienced the same change and remained in the Baptist Church, saying they knew they were "not deceived this time." LOUISIANA STATE FAIR.—The sixth grand State Fair opened at the Fair Grounds, near the city, on Wednesday, the twenty-fourth. Apart from the races and Sabbath desecration connected with this enterprise, it is to be commended, and is calculated to build up the material interests of the country. Is there no way to dispense with those objectionable features which are such a serious offense to the Christian public?

DEATH OF REV. ROBERT E. CARY. A note from Bro. Morris, of Montgomery, states that Rev. Robert E. Cary, of the Alabama Conference, died in Montgomery on the fourteenth of this month. His end was peaceful and triumphant. The laborers are passing on to their rest and reward, while God continues to carry on his work.

OUR NEW PUBLISHING HOUSE.

LAYING THE CORNER-STONE.

The old Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is fast disappearing, and in its place a new House will soon be erected.

The corner-stone will be laid on the eighth of May, with appropriate ceremonies, the programme of which will be published in our issue next week. The names of all persons and churches having contributed any amount toward the erection of the new building will be deposited in the corner-stone.

A full description of the new House will be published as soon as our plans are completed. In the meantime we beg leave to say that, in architectural taste and in adaptation to the uses for which it is designed, the new House will be all that the church can desire.

We most cordially invite all our friends to be present at the laying of the corner-stone.

At the time our paper of last week went to press we had received, from all sources, to aid in rebuilding, $39,446.72, which was contributed as follows:

Nashville	$32,837 67
Tennessee, outside of Nashville	1,828 45
Alabama	584 40
Arkansas	98 00
California	25 00
District of Columbia	10 00
Florida	115 00
Georgia	506 25
Kentucky	637 70
Mississippi	190 70
Missouri	220 00
North Carolina	1 00
South Carolina	61 00
Texas	150 55
Virginia	106 00
New York city	1,300 00
Cincinnati	400 00
Philadelphia	125 00
Indianapolis, Indiana	250 00
Total	$39,446 72

The city of Nashville has done nobly, and the church elsewhere has, in many places, responded liberally to our call for aid. Many of our congregations, as well as individuals, desire to contribute something to this noble enterprise. We request preachers who intend to take up collections to do so immediately; and individuals who desire to do something, however little or much, to remit the amount of their contributions at once.

Thousands may send from one to five dollars. Let every person help.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

AN EARNEST APPEAL.

To the Preachers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

REV. AND BELOVED BRETHREN—The Conference season is rapidly approaching. Within the space of three or four months the sessions will begin. You have much to engage your attention before your respective bodies shall convene. One of the most binding duties is the collection of money for our missions. This part of our calling must not be forgotten. That the poor have the gospel preached to them is one of the crowning glories of our holy Christianity. Methodists have been famous from the beginning for hunting up the destitute and the outcasts of poor sinners. They have gone into the lanes and streets, the hedges and highways, to bring in the poor and the maimed, the halt and the blind. They must never forfeit their good name, or suffer others to take their crown.

The fiscal year just closing has been one of success. To be sure, in monetary affairs there has been, throughout the South, unusual stringency; yet our people have displayed a large liberality. The old missionary debt has been provided for, and nearly extinguished. The collections for general missionary purposes have exceeded those of any year since 1865. Besides, large amounts have been contributed toward the building of churches and parsonages, and in rebuilding the Publishing House. These are encouraging facts. Now, then, with a fair field before us, let us address ourselves to the work of missionary collections for the coming year. The demands are upon us. More men are called for in China; the Indian work needs additional men and means; the great West, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, Montana, California and Columbia, are all calling for help; west Texas and Mexico present very inviting countries to Christian zeal and enterprise; Central America has an open door; indeed, all around the fields are white unto the harvest; besides, our own poor and sparse settlements are among the most interesting and fruitful portions of missionary toil. Now, brethren, will you begin in time? Do not postpone your collections till near the close of the year. Begin early, and persevere till every member of the church shall have enjoyed the opportunity of giving. Do not neglect any. Ask the rich to give as God has prospered them; ask the independent, good livers to give according to their ability; ask the poor to cast in their mites; ask the old who are rapidly going to their account; ask the young who are sowing seeds for a future harvest; ask the parents who are setting an example to their children; ask the children, that they may be trained to give for the Lord; ask all, that every man, woman and child may have the privilege of aiding in the evangelization of the world.

Come, brethren, let us go to work with a good will, and the treasury will be filled, and the gospel will be sent to thousands who are now starving for the bread of life.

J. B. MCFERRIN, Sec'y.

MISSION ROOMS, Nashville, April, 1872.

A MISFORTUNE.

We were distressed, says the Southern Christian Advocate, at reading the following item from the Atlanta Constitution of the seventh instant. It is to be hoped that the loss consequent upon the casualty is over-estimated; and especially that the church will not have to bear the burden of contractors who have failed to comply with their stipulated agreement. However this may be, we feel sure that Atlanta enterprise and liberality are a guarantee that the damage will be speedily repaired, and the work carried forward to completion. We congratulate Dr. Harrison and the church upon his providential escape from the injury to which he was exposed. So may he escape all perils, and be spared to rejoice in the consummation of his enterprise, and to publish the glad tidings of the gospel from the pulpit of the new First Church.

"TUMBLED DOWN.—About twelve M. yesterday, while workmen were engaged in tearing away a portion of the bell-tower of the First Methodist church, preparatory to strengthening the base, the tower came down with a crash, tearing out a portion of the roof, and damaging two small end turrets, and the walls adjacent. The tower fronts the intersection of Peachtree, Pryor and Houston streets. The bell was uninjured, we learn. The workmen escaped. Dr. Harrison, pastor, was inside the church at the time, and escaped injury. The debris fills up part of that end of the church, and the street in front. The cracked walls are to be taken down, and the whole rebuilt as early as practicable. The interior portion of the brick work is said to be very inferior. The loss, it is said, is not less than $15,000, and further, that the same will be likely to fall on the church, as it is said the contractors are not able to rebuild and make it good."

DEATH OF REV. R. E. CARY.

MR. EDITOR: It falls to my lot to announce the death of the Rev. R. E. Cary, of the Alabama Conference. This sad event occurred on Sunday, the fourteenth of April, in the city of Montgomery.

He was appointed by Bishop Pierce to Rocky Mount circuit. In arranging his appointments and beginning his labor in this new field he was exposed, during the late winter, more than his constitution could bear. The disease was pneumonia, which in its fatal progress assumed the typhoid type. Under this he sank steadily, until death came and claimed him as his victim. About eighteen days before he died he was brought to the city of Montgomery. He had all the kind attentions which relatives and physicians could render. He was visited by Rev. Dr. A. H. Mitchell, Rev. O. R. Blue and myself. His faith in Christ was strong, his comfort was great, and in patience and joy and triumph he passed from this state of probation into eternity. He leaves a widow to mourn his early death.

A CORRECTION.

MR. EDITOR: In my article on "Writing for the Press," published in the ADVOCATE of April 11, the following expression occurs: "First, some one so constituted, mentally and physically, that he is easily embarrassed," etc. Now, I intended to write, and thought I did write: "First, some are so constituted, mentally and physically, that they are easily embarrassed," etc. Perhaps I did not write it legibly enough. M.

NEWBERN, ALA., April 16, 1872.

WE ARE in receipt of a letter from Chappell Hill, says the Galveston Advocate, informing us that the Female College buildings were burned. The loss is total, as there was no insurance. It was evidently the work of an incendiary. Dr. Connor, we regret to say, is a heavy loser. He had just paid off an old debt on the building. He also lost five pianos. A proposition has been made from Brenham and Houston each to give him a piano. Cannot the members and friends of the church and education in Galveston send another? We are authorized to announce that there will be no suspension of the school exercises. The fire occurred on the seventh.

THE avaricious man is like the barren, sandy ground of the desert, which sucks in all the rains and dews with greediness, but yields no fruitful herbs or plants for the benefit of others.

TO BE AT ONCE in any great degree loved and praised is truly rare.

Interesting Letter from China.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Jan. 20, 1872.

WM. H. FOSTER, ESQ.—My Dear Brother: It is just one year ago to-day since I had the great pleasure of announcing to you that nine of the pupils in Felicity school, Shanghai, had of their own voluntary motion applied for admission into the church.

Now I write to inform you that six of the nine have, after a long and satisfactory probation, been baptized and admitted. Their names are as follows: Pay Yoong Tsung, Yaug Tuh Kwe, Kong Oz Liang, Hoong Kyung Yoong, Loh Siau San, Kong Tsing Yoong.

Of the other three, two—Tsang Ling Men and Pay Bau Woo—were withdrawn early in the year by their parents, and the other—Zia Yu Ne—was dismissed. I am sorry also to have to note the defection and expulsion of Lieu Tien Ming, adopted son of our late native helper, Lieu Tsoh Soeng. He was baptized in infancy, was a bright boy fifteen years old, and I had hoped to make of him a worthy successor of his lamented father; but unfortunately I found him altogether incorrigible—a hopeless case—and was compelled, in the interest of the school, to have him withdrawn.

From these statements you will readily discern that our joys are not without alloy, our hopes not without their serious discounts. Our work, even in the school department, is one of faith and patience, and when we are permitted to rejoice, it is always with trembling and anxiety that we do so. Here there is no perfect felicity: but we labor and long for the felicity above.

During the year I had personally superintended the religious instruction of the pupils, and was fully satisfied as to their character and their qualifications for membership. Having in every other respect complied with our rules, I required them to notify their parents, who are heathen, of their desire to become Christians. This they did, and obtained their consent. There being then no obstacle in the way, a day was appointed—Sabbath, January 21, 1872—for their baptism. At the appointed time all the church members, together with all the pupils of the three boarding schools and a great number of outsiders, assembled in our city chapel to witness the interesting service. The songs and the sermon were pertinent to the occasion, and seemed to be attended with unusual influence. Many outsiders (Nga Kyau) in the congregation seemed much impressed, and by frequent salams during the preaching signified their assent to the doctrines taught.—After the sermon the candidates were invited to present themselves before the altar, when each respectively was examined aloud before the whole congregation. Great silence and attention attended this inquisition, which was had as much for the benefit of the uninstructed as for the candidates themselves. Then followed the baptismal service. Into this a special clause for China has been inserted, requiring all candidates to renounce the worship of heaven and earth, idols and ancestors. The outsiders were awe-struck when this last—the worship of ancestors—was required to be renounced. It is the great stumbling-block. The heathen falter when they learn that Christianity demands it of them.

The services concluded with offering the right hand of fellowship, the administration of the Lord's Supper, singing and prayer.

There is no part of our work that offers more encouragement than schools, and it is exceedingly gratifying to us to know that this department of our mission labor is now finding favor among other churches than yours in the South. Your example has initiated this grateful movement, and in the hope of soon seeing our schools firmly sustained, we have during the year made arrangements for their permanent operation. We now have good school houses, with ample accommodations, and should the patronage of other churches, which have signified their intention of joining you, be realized, it will not be long before our educational department shall take rank with those of other missions in Shanghai.

The following amounts have been received during the year for Felicity school, Shanghai, from the Sunday school missionary societies of Felicity and Moreau:

	Mexican dollars.
March 6	71 75
June 3	55 85
September 3	51 25

November 6 I also received a remittance from the First church, Methodist Episcopal Church South, St. Louis, Dr. Leftwich, pastor, realizing $84.26, Mexican.

You will please communicate the facts contained in this to Brother Schroeder, of the Moreau Street Sunday School Missionary Society, and express my grateful acknowledgments to the two missionary societies for their generous and well-sustained interest in the prosperit of our efforts to enlighten and save the children of the heathen.

The baptized children all unite in a hearty Mong-mong to you and their liberal patrons—the children of the two Sunday school missionary societies. God bless the children!

Your brother in Christ,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

FEBRUARY 17, 1872.

P. S.—Since the above was written our mail has arrived with letters from yourself, Bro. Schroeder and Mr. Booth, all relative to funds sent on by you, and received by this mail.

Mr. Booth sends an order for $137, Mexican, half of which I shall place to the account of Felicity school, Shanghai.

Bro. Schroeder says that he is going to join the Louisiana Conference, and will therefore withdraw from his connection with the Morean Street Sunday school. If he be gone when this letter arrives, you will please notify his successor of the facts therein, and bespeak for us the continued patronage of Morean.

We are under ten thousand obligations to you for the interest and diffusive spirit you have manifested on our behalf, and shall always rejoice in your prosperity. The present year has opened well, and I hope I shall be able to realize the enlarged desires of my heart relative to the success of our school department.

I am receiving so many letters of inquiry now that I hardly find time to write to each satisfactorily. I shall hope soon to hear from you again.

Yours in haste, but truly,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE BIBLICAL MUSEUM. A collection of notes, explanatory, homiletic and illustrative, forming a complete commentary on the Holy Scriptures, especially designed for the use of ministers, Bible students, and Sunday school teachers. By James Comper Gray. Volume 1. Containing the Gospels according to Matthew and Mark.

This volume is a 12mo of 376 pages. The title is rather a singular one for a commentary, and the notes are in harmony with the title. Among other peculiarities we observe an abundance of incidents, anecdotes, and illustrative quotations from various sources. A great many good and pertinent things are collected to illustrate the inspired text, and some things which had been better left out. We have never seen just such a commentary, and we are not sure that we care to see another like it. The plan is not a bad one, but the filling up in many instances is objectionable.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW for April will, we think, prove to be the most acceptable and popular number which has been issued since it came under the patronage and auspices of the Southern Methodist Church. The topics treated of are unusually varied, and of living interest and importance. The Methodist Episcopal Churches, North and South, is everything that could be desired on the relation of the two churches. The article is strong, comprehensive, temperate, and is unanswerable in its handling of the question of union. A Survey of the Churches, in the present number, is limited to the Catholic Church, and is to be followed by an article on the history and character of Protestantism. The subject is one of great interest, and is thus far treated in a powerful and conclusive manner. Bishop Kip and John Wesley vindicates the truth of history and the character of Wesley, while it fastens a most serious and damaging charge upon his traducers. A Race of Flying Men has the flavor of quiet humor, and is refreshingly novel and original. Spectrum Analysis tells us briefly and clearly of the spectroscope and the wonderful discoveries which have been made by it. Notices of Books occupies about thirty pages, and is a most valuable feature of the Review. We are glad that the editor is giving prominence to this department, and we believe that he will make it one of the most useful and attractive of this noble periodical. Thus much of what we have found time to read. Of the Legislation of 1787, General John Pope's Campaign, and Fiction we are unable to judge at present. The Imitation Monk is an exquisite satire in verse, which we shall take occasion to transfer to the columns of the ADVOCATE shortly.

SANFORD'S PRIMARY ANALYTICAL ARITHMETIC is a good work for young children. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia.

Obituaries.

DIED, on the thirty-first ultimo, in San Jose, California, of pulmonary consumption, Mr. A. W. MURDOCK, aged forty-three years.

The deceased was for some months employed in this office, and was at the same time organist in the Felicity Street church in this city, but was compelled to give up his engagements on account of his failing health. He went to California in the hope of prolonging his days for the benefit of his family, but only survived a few months. He was an honorable and high-toned gentleman, and a pure-minded, gentle and intelligent Christian. We pray for the comforting presence of the Holy Spirit to remain with the bereaved widow and child. H.

DIED, March 22, at Elizabeth, New Jersey, WORTHINGTON N. SNETHEN, only son of Hon. Worthington G. Snethen, formerly of Baltimore, after a brief illness of acute bronchitis, in the twenty-sixth year of his age.

We take the following extract from the funeral discourse of the Rev. Dr. Roberts, published in the Elizabeth Journal:

"Worthington N. Snethen was in the twenty-sixth year of his age when he was called away from earth. He was born in Washington on the eighteenth of July, 1845. He was a child of the covenant, who made a profession of religion when he was only eleven years of age. He understood French, German and the Italian languages at the age of sixteen. He was educated entirely by his father. He was never in school. He was a good musician and a man of fine taste. He was a good citizen, loyal to all the interests of his country. He was a warm-hearted, true friend—unostentatious and retiring. He was a dutiful and respected son. He never caused any anxiety to his parents. He was a gentle and affectionate husband. He died, on March 22, 1872, as he had lived, trusting in his Savior, and clinging to the promises of God."

DIED, near Lower Peachtree, Wilcox county, Alabama, Sister JULIA ANN PORTIS, whose maiden name was Jones. She was born in Way county, North Carolina, on the twenty-third day of June, 1813. Her parents moved with her to Alabama, where she was married to S. W. Portis on the twenty-eighth day of June, 1828. She united herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church in the year 1834, in which she lived a consistent Christian life until called by her Master to the church triumphant, on the ninth day of February, 1872, in the sixty-first year of her age.

Sister Portis was early impressed with the importance of religion, and from the age of twelve years she lived the life of a Christian. Her sufferings, the last twelve months or more of her life, were most intense; but she bore her afflictions with that patience which is peculiar to a Christian mother. Her constant prayer in her afflictions was: "Lord, give me patience." Her religion was not of a boisterous nature; it was that pious walk and godly conversation that portrayed the depths of piety in her soul; it was only on occasions of extraordinary exhibitions of divine grace that she was heard to shout loud praises to God.

Just before her death, when she had seemingly set her house in order, she expressed a desire to see all her friends and relations, and, gathering those who were near at hand around her bedside, she gave to them her last motherly advice; after which that grace which is most needful in a dying hour seemed to be given, and she quietly breathed her last. She leaves behind a much-bereaved husband, one only surviving son, three daughters and several grandchildren, with many relatives, to whom no earthly name was ever more dear, to mourn her loss. May they ever remember her many virtuous acts and heed her many godly admonitions, that they may finally compose one unbroken family in heaven.

GEORGE WATSON.

DEATH has been in our midst, and robbed our church and community of one of their brightest jewels, and the family of Thomas J. and Elenor Hutchins of one of their dearest loved ones. ELLA HUTCHINS was born November 24, 1852, and died of typhoid pneumonia March 20, 1872. She was dedicated to God in baptism in early infancy by Bishop Early, and was brought up under religious influences. When she arrived at years of discretion she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and continued an acceptable member until she was taken to the church triumphant. Her death was remarkably triumphant. She was, during her entire illness, conscious of her situation, and a few hours before her death bid the family and all present good-by, exacting from every one a promise to meet her in heaven. She then requested the writer to preach her funeral. She selected one of the hymns to be sung, which was:

"Nearer, my God, to thee,"

one verse of which she sang. She then asked us to sing several hymns; and while the writer was praying at her bedside she shouted aloud, saying: "Glory to God, glory to God! Jesus is with me." The scene around that death-bed was unusual. Her doting mother shouted praise to God, an elder sister was happily converted, and all of us felt the power of God to save. Her fond parents both said: "We are now willing to give our darling up."

REAL ESTATE BROKER.—We call the attention of those having property to sell, or wishing to buy, to the advertisement of Mr. Charles H. Reed, in another column.

CISTERNS.—Those who value pure, good cistern water should read the advertisement of Peter McEnroe, the cistern builder, and drop a note in Box 143, Mechanics' and Traders' Exchange.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—We have noticed extensively before the enterprising boot and shoe store of Mr. George John Wagner, corner of Ursulines and Dauphine streets. See his advertisement, which appears in our columns to-day.

DRY GOODS.—For twenty years we have not found a more honorable, straightforward and reliable house, one more reasonable in prices, or better stocked with elegant assortments of goods, than that of D. H. Holmes, 155 Canal street, and we take pleasure in calling attention to his advertisement in another column.

UPHOLSTERERS AND FURNITURE REPAIRERS.—Homan, Frachtling & Andre, corner of Prytania and Terpsichore streets, are ready to attend to all orders to repair furniture during the summer, and to the removing of furniture, raising, laying and cleaning carpets, hanging curtains, etc. See advertisement on the fifth page.

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS.—Many inquiries have reached us from time to time in reference to marble manufactures, monumental work, etc., and we are glad to have an opportunity to refer to the advertisement, in another column, of the extensive marble works of Mr. George Stroud, on St. Charles street, corner of Girod.

BEAUTIFUL SUMMER RESORT.—There is no more delightful place we have ever found in summer than Ocean Springs, and it is a source of great pleasure to learn that our friend, William C. Chamberlin, has rented and thoroughly repaired the Morris House, which will be opened this summer for the reception of boarders. We know of no two persons better calculated to conduct such a house, to the perfect satisfaction of the most genteel guests, than our friend and his amiable wife.

BEES HUNTING FOR HIVES.—An unusual number of swarms of bees have been passing over and through the city during the past week. Some of them have sought shelter in very inhospitable places. We saw one swarm taking refuge under the iron veranda of a coffee-house; they may have been all drones. Another swarm settled under the eaves of the kitchen of our nearest neighbor, much to the annoyance of the cook; another found a resting-place on one handle of a plow, among roustabouts on the levee; and still another on the handle of a hand-wagon on Camp street, attracting a swarm of newsboys. So great has been the number in various parts of the city as to be a subject of remark and surprise. Very opportunely at this time appears in another column the advertisement of the Buckeye Bee-Hive, by J. K. Rugg, Esq. Few things remunerate more liberally the capital and care bestowed on them than bees. Read the advertisement of his moth-proof hive.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Correct the Stomach.—It is a well-ascertained physiological fact that the origin of most of the ills that afflict humanity is a deranged condition of the alimentary canal. The bowels become constipated and sluggish, and thence arises a train of painful and distressing maladies. As a preventive and cure, there is no remedy so safe and sure as DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

WEST POINT, GA., Sept. 3, 1871.

W. H. TUTT—Dear Sir: I have been an invalid for five years, and have with fortitude and patience tried nearly every patent medicine known to the people without any effectual relief. It was suggested by some of my friends to take your Vegetable Pills, for which I am under obligations for said suggestion. It being a favorable one, I propose to state the effects. I weigh more than I ever did, and my health is far better than it has been in five years. I certainly give all the credit to your Pills; and as soon as there is an increase in the family, you may bet if it is a male that his name shall be Tutt. Publish if you choose. Very respectfully, ap25 1t J. A. DONALDSON.

The Barbers Prefer Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye.

Caution!—Every genuine box of DR. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS bears the signature of Fleming Brothers, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and their private United States stamp. Take no other; the market is full of imitations.

It is the popular verdict that people who have been accustomed to the use of Bitters or Cordials are obliged eventually to resort to McLane's Liver Pills for permanent relief. ap25 6m

A Card.—Having opened a business at 157 Poydras street, for the purpose of supplying Families and Hotels with Fancy GROCERIES, and every variety of Domestic and Imported Fruits, and having such facilities as will enable us to compete successfully with any other establishment of the kind in the country, we respectfully solicit the patronage of our friends and the public generally, assuring them that we are determined to give perfect satisfaction.

WILSON & MANARD,
157 Poydras street,
ap18 2m New Orleans.

A Warning.—DR. ABERNETHY once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a graveyard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many graveyards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility, or similar functional derangements, to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

TINKLE! TINKLE!

BY FLORA L. BLY.

"Tinkle! tinkle!
List the sound of fairy hammers,
Waking sweet and silver clamors!
Tell me, elves, what ye are doing—
What bright tasks are ye pursuing
In your earth-homes, bleak and brown?

"Tinkle! tinkle!
Don't you know,
'Neath the snow,
How we build a secret stair,
That the flowers may reach the air:
How we strike the Frost-King down
Tear the jewels from his crown?"

"Tinkle! tinkle!"
Take me, elves, unto your palace:
Let me drink from out the chalice
Of the snow drop, white and airy:
Let me be, like ye, a fairy,
With a heart that laughs at care!

"Tinkle! tinkle!"
Small thy need
Thus to plead:
Were thou born a child of air—
Of the sun and dew a part,
Cradled in the rose's heart,
We could lead thee anywhere.

We are Nature's smallest creatures;
We've no power to change thy features;
We've no magic herb or potion
That can train thy cumbrous motion
Into airy, elfin rhyme.
Tinkle! tinkle!
Hark! dost hear?
Blithe and clear
Comes the chime of hidden bells,
Swinging in the fairy cells;
Singing softly—'tis time
That the flowers begin to climb."

"Tinkle! tinkle!"
I can hear them coming, coming:
Tiny feet, and voices humming;
Shyly creepeth Periwinkle,
Golden Dandelions twinkle,
Till the meadow-lands are bright.
"Tinkle! tinkle!"
May-flowers fair
Greet the air.
And the daisies, starry white,
Smile their welcome to the light.

"Tinkle! tinkle!"
Louder clang the fairy hammers;
Wilder wake their silver clamors:
Every band of ice is broken;
Every bursting bud hath spoken;
Telling to these souls of ours
How each spring
Doth but bring
Unto them a golden stair,
Reaching to the light and air—
Bids them quit their darkened bowers,
Climbing upward into flowers.

Little Corporal.

LOST AND FOUND.

It was twelve o'clock at night, and Johnny hadn't come home yet. At half-past six, exactly, I had wound up the clock and pulled the table out, sure that he would be home at seven, as he always was. Dear old Miss Lambert, who lives in the same house, had some honey sent her from her brother in the country, and she gave me as much as a pound.

Johnny's supper should be graced by this delicious syrup, so I put it in the whitest and prettiest dish I could find, and it did look beautiful. Then I dressed myself in my white apron, and roasted some thin slices of baker's bread, and put the tea on the table, just as the clock struck seven; but, ah me, no Johnny!

Presently it grew dark, and I lighted a candle. It had been threatening rain all day, and now the storm blew against the windows. Where was Johnny?

Oh, I remembered that it was pay-day, and he had probably stopped to buy something nice for me. I shivered at the sound of the wind, and hoped he would not stay long. I don't know now as it was exactly the sound of the wind that made me shiver; it was a queer, creeping tingle, that ran straight down from my head to my toes, never missing a vein or an inch of my body.

I had that same feeling the night father was brought home a corpse, but I tried not to remember it, because it recalled such painful thoughts, particularly as I sat there alone, waiting for Johnny.

But I haven't told you yet who Johnny was; perhaps you've suspected that he was my brother. No girl ever had a braver or a handsomer brother than John; at least none that ever I knew. He had been working in the mills for three years, now, and I was keeping house for him.

Why, when I first learned that I was to keep house for Johnny, I, such a mite of a girl, I don't think all the kings in the world could have been as happy as I. He came home late one night, when we were living at Mrs. Sawney's, the good Scotch woman who loved my mother, and his face beamed all over as he said that he had a first-rate place in the Howard Mills. Now I knew that the Howard Mills were far enough off, so, like a little goose, I sat down and cried—glad as I was for Johnny, but oh, so sad for myself!

"And now," said he to Mrs. Sawney, "our little mess of furniture will come in good play."

"Why, John?" I asked, looking up, my face all wet with tears.

"Because, deary, I'm going to hire two little rooms, and let you keep house for me. What do you think? Can you do it?"

"Oh, John!" and with a great cry I just flew into his arms, and seemed to have found heaven; for, sweet and good as Mrs. Sawney was, she was so painfully particular that it was very hard to work for her.

KATE AND PATTY.

It was Christmas day, but Kate stood by the window, looking out on the falling snow with a very sober face.

"What is the matter, Kate?" asked auntie. "Why don't you play with your new doll?"

"I don't care for her now, auntie," said Kate, slowly.

"Why not? I thought you liked her very much last night."

"So I did, but my doll has a china head and a crimson thibet dress; and I've seen Mary Grant's to-day, and it's ever so much prettier! She's a wax head, and she's dressed in blue silk. I don't like my dishes either; I wanted gilt and white instead of flowered ones. And see, it's snowing, and I sha'n't get a ride to-day."

Auntie thought a few minutes.

"Katie, dear, shall I tell you a little story I read last Christmas?"

Kate smiled. "Yes, auntie, please."

"A little girl named Patty lived with her mother in a basement room—one room, Katie—in a large city. They were very poor, and the mother had to go out to work, leaving Patty alone a great deal. Christmas eve the poor woman was going home from her work, looking in at the lighted store-windows, and wishing she could buy a gift for her little girl. She did not think of herself, though she shivered with cold. She was not going to have turkey or roast beef, pudding or pie, for dinner next day, but she said to herself they should not go hungry, and that was a great deal. They had bread and milk and potatoes. And she spent one bright penny—all she could spare—to get a stick of mint candy for Patty.

"But as she walked along she saw something white on the pavement. She stopped and picked up a piece of clay pipe—only a piece, Katie! You don't know how pleased she was. Home she went with a cheerful heart; and when the little girl was in bed and fast asleep, she slipped into her stocking the candy and the broken pipe. Very early Patty awoke, and fairly screamed for joy when she found them.

"For hours of that day she blew bubbles, happy as a bird. What would she have said, Katie, to your Christmas gifts?"

Kate looked ashamed. "I was not good, auntie," she said. "I don't deserve my pretty things."

Auntie kissed her, and she went to her play with a bright face and kept it.

Children's Hour.

SONG OF THE DECANTER.

There was an old decanter,
And its mouth was gaping wide; the rosy wine had ebbed away and left its crystal side; and the wind
went humming, humming—up and down the sides it flew, and through the reed-like, hollow neck
the wildest notes it blew. I placed it in the window, where the blast was blowing free, and fancied that its pale mouth sang the queerest strains to me. "They tell me—puny conquerors!—the Plague has slain his ten,
And War his hundred thousands of the very best of men; but I."—'twas thus the bottle spoke—"but I have conquered more than all your famous conquerors, so feared and fumed of yore.
Then come, ye youth and maidens, come drink, from out my cup, the beverage that dulls the brain and burns the spirit up; that puts to shame the conquerors that slay their scores below; for this has deluged millions with the lava-tide of woe.
Though in the path of battle darkest waves of blood may roll;
yet while I killed the body,
I have damned the very soul,
The cholera, the sword, such ruin never wrought as I,
in mirth or malice, on the innocent have brought.
And still I breathe upon them, and they shrink before my breath; and year by year my thousands tread the dismal road to Death."

SPEEDY ANSWER TO PRAYER.

A poor widow spake one morning to her five young children:

"My dear children, I can give you nothing to eat this morning. I have no bread, no meal, not even an egg in the house. Ask the dear God to help us. He is rich and mighty, and has said himself: 'Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee.'"

The little Hans, who was scarcely six years old, went very hungry and sad on his way to school. As he passed by the open door of the church he went in, and kneeled down before the altar. As he saw no person in the church, he prayed with a loud voice:

"Dear Father in heaven, we children have nothing to eat. Our mother has no bread, no meal, not even an egg. O help us. Give us and our dear mother something to eat. Thou art rich and mighty, and can easily help us."

So prayed little Hans in his childish simplicity, and afterward went to school. When he came home he saw upon the table a large loaf of bread, a dish of meal, and a basket of eggs.

"Now thanks to God," cried he, joyfully; "he has heard my prayer. Mother, has an angel brought all these things through the window?"

"No," said the mother; "but still God has heard your prayer. As you kneeled at the altar a good lady was kneeling also in her place in the church. You could not see her, but she saw you and heard your prayer. She has sent us these things. She is the angel through whom God has helped us. Now, then, thank God, and never forget through your whole lives to 'call upon God in the day of trouble.'"

A LESSON ON HUMILITY.—A farmer took his son into a wheat field in harvest-time. "See, father," exclaimed the boy, "how straight those stems hold up their heads! They must be the best ones. Those that hang down their heads, I am sure, cannot be good for much." The farmer plucked a stalk of each kind, and said: "See here, my child! This stalk, that stood so straight, is light-headed, and almost good for nothing; while that that hung its head so modestly is full of precious grain."

"DO YOU THINK," asked Mrs. Pepper, "that a little temper is a bad thing in a woman?" "Certainly not, madam," replied a gallant philosopher; "it is a good thing, and she ought never to lose it."

A BOOK has been exhibited in London whose contents are "thirty-three thousand five hundred and thirty-five ways of spelling 'scissors.'"

The Farm and Garden.

For the Advocate.

TO PRESERVE FRUIT TREES FROM MICE AND INSECTS.—Apply early in the fall, around the roots, a thick layer of lime and ashes mixed. It would be well to sink the earth around the tree about six inches, throw in a few shovelfuls of the lime and ashes, and then cover up with earth, trampling it well down.

GRAFTING-WAX.—Melt beeswax and tallow together, stirring in a little chalk; while hot dip in some strips of rags; then tear them into strips suitable to envelop the stock and scion. Let the stock and scion be so covered as to prevent the escape of the sap or the introduction of air or water, and the work is finished.

GRAFTING GRAPE-VINES.—Grape-vines may be grafted in the fall or early winter, or before the sap starts in the spring. In the fall, after the leaves have fallen, and any time before the ground is frozen, say in October, November or December, dig away the soil from around the stock, and cut it off at a depth of three inches from the surface. Split the stock in the ordinary manner for cleft-grafting. Make the graft about four inches long, with one or two buds, as may be convenient, and, cutting it to wedge shape, insert it in the stock, being careful to have the inner bark of both the stock and graft meet; then tie in the graft by winding the stock with strong twine, enough to hold it in place. Next throw in soil enough to fill up around the graft, filling to the upper bud; then put a small box over the graft for protection. The protection must not be moved until cold, freezing weather is over.

THE STRAWBERRY AND ITS CULTURE.—The strawberry is one of our earliest fruits. Long before any other fruit ripens, the strawberry is the dessert dish on many tables. Their culture is as follows: They may be planted either in the fall or early spring. I prefer the fall. They should be planted in small beds, as they succeed better and can be worked easier. The rows should be one foot apart, and the plants one foot apart in the row; they should have plenty of room. After having planted out the beds, the most important thing next is clean cultivation. If the weather is favorable and the soil pliable, give one light hoeing about six or eight weeks after setting out. Keep off all runners, by cutting with sharp hoes or other implements as often as they appear. The parent vine will not produce a good crop of good fruit if it be allowed to exhaust itself by making new vines. In dry, hot weather it is absolutely necessary to stir the ground frequently, so as to keep it moist; otherwise the plants will not thrive, as some of the less hardy sets will certainly die out. If convenient, cover the rows before Christmas with straw or some other light substance, free from noxious weeds, and take it off, or rather put it in, the spaces between the plants and under the plants when they begin to start off to grow in the latter part of the winter. Hoe lightly before plants bloom, so as to destroy all winter grass that may make its appearance. Never hoe while the plants are in bloom in the fruiting state. This is often the cause of some not having good crops of berries. J. Q. H.

CULTIVATION OF THE OLIVE.

We are glad to see that the cultivation of the olive is beginning to receive some attention on the Pacific coast. There are other parts of the country where it could be raised to advantage; but much of the Pacific slope has for it a genial climate and an appropriate soil. We learn from a California paper that at Santa Barbara a gallon of oil is made from eight gallons of olives, and one tree there, when ten years old, produced sixty gallons of olives. Mr. Mayhew, of that place, thinks it safe to count on a net annual yield of $240 per acre from an olive orchard ten years old. He thus communicates some of his experience to the Santa Barbara Press:

"I obtained five hundred cuttings from one inch to three inches in diameter, and about fifteen inches long. In February, 1868, I put them in the ground, so that their ends were little above the natural level of the ground, and covered them by making a little mound. About one-half of them started that spring, and are now from ten to thirteen feet high, and spread about seven feet, the trunk of the main stock being from two to four inches through. Some of the cuttings were dormant through one season, and started about one year from the time they were planted, and a few sprouted even two years from the time of planting, which are doing well."

The successful cultivation of the olive in this country would supply a great want, and would unquestionably be remunerative. The oil commands a high price, notwithstanding so much bearing the name is manufactured from animal and vegetable oils that never saw an olive. If it were produced in sufficient quantity it would come into much more extensive use, not merely for dressing salads, to which it is largely confined, but in all branches of cookery, to which it is so admirably adapted.

There is no more wholesome or palatable oil for cooking than genuine sweet olive oil. It might well supersede, in a great measure, the use of butter and lard. In Italy and other parts of Europe, and especially in the East, it is used in cooking to the exclusion of almost everything else of this nature. The fruit, too, is coming into more general use in the different modes of pickling. The taste for olives is not usually a natural one, but when formed it becomes very decided, and the fruit is perhaps the most wholesome pickle that can be used. The tree comes to perfection rapidly, and it is the longest-lived fruit tree known. In Palestine there are trees reputed to be more than a thousand years old, and they are still bearing. The trees in the Garden of Gethsemane are held by tradition to be the same that were standing in the time of the Savior, but this is improbable. — New York Observer.

PRUNING SHRUBS.

We recently met with a lady florist who had an oleander plant about three feet high, which had grown from a sprout on the side of the main stem, a few inches above the soil in the pot. The old stem had been hacked off, two or three years previous, about two inches above the point where the new and present stem had started; and this old stub had died down to the roots, except a narrow strip of bark and sapwood below the present stem. When the old top was removed, if it had been cut off smoothly, close to the branch that was to form the present top, and the cut had been covered with a plaster of grafting-wax, the wound would have healed, and no part of the stem would have lost its vitality. Her beautiful oleander was injured beyond recovery by bad pruning.

When shrubs or their branches are cut, the gash should be made not square across, but slanting upward at an angle of about forty-five degrees; after which, to prevent the wood from dying and losing its vitality, the wound should be covered with some sort of wax.

Such a shrub as we have alluded to may be saved by turning it, with its contents, into a larger and deeper pot, in the former part of the growing season; after which the large pot should be filled with sand, leaf-mold and ashes, to a point one inch above the injured bark and dry wood. Then, by scraping off the epidermis or dead bark just below the surface of the soil, a new system of roots will be sent out, and the old stub will soon decay, leaving a sound and healthy stem. Any young tree or bush may be managed in the same manner, if the stem near the root is at all defective.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

GREEN CORN FRITTERS.—Grate corn from six ears; add one tablespoonful of cream or butter, one of flour, pepper and salt. Fry in hot lard. Fritters of any kind are good, but only admissible when cooked in boiling lard.

TO PREPARE GUM TRAGACANTH for making moss baskets or sticking dried flowers, etc., to paper, get three cents' worth, put it into a tumbler, cover with water. A little acetic vinegar will keep it a long while. When thoroughly dissolved it is ready for use.—Maine Farmer.

AMBROSIA.—Spread in a glass dish a layer of grated cocoanut and sugar, then a layer of orange cut in thin, round slices, then of the cocoanut and sugar until the dish is full; let the cocoanut be at the top well mixed with loaf sugar; it should be made several hours before using.

PREPARED GLUE.—In a wide-mouthed bottle dissolve eight ounces of best glue in a half pint of water, by setting it in a vessel of water and heating it till dissolved. Then add slowly, constantly stirring, two and a half ounces of strong aquafortis (nitric acid.) Keep it corked, and it will be ready for use.

PLUM PUDDING WITHOUT EGGS.—One cup of molasses, one cup of milk, one pound of raisins, chopped, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of powdered cloves. Mix with flour about as stiff as pound cake. Melt half a cup of butter and stir it in. Steam in a dish over boiling water four hours, and eat with a hot sauce.

SURE DEATH TO BEDBUGS.—Take a teaspoonful of quicksilver, beat it up with the white of two eggs, as for frosting, till the two are thoroughly and finely united, then apply with a feather to every crack or crevice in the bedstead or wall, where a bedbug can hide. Repeat it three or four times, and your work is done for two years at least.

NOTE BY P. M. GOODWYN.—Lack of health has obliged me for a time to give up my regular calling—that of the ministry. In the meanwhile, in order to do what I can for a support, I have engaged as an assistant in my brother's establishment, as above advertised. And I take this method of soliciting from among the readers of the ADVOCATE—many of whom are my personal acquaintances and friends—a share of their patronage whenever they may have need of anything in the above line. Orders sent through their merchants, or to either of us direct, will receive prompt attention. mh7 6m

REV. GEO. M. EVERHART, D. D., Rector, formerly president of the Huntsville (Alabama) Female College.

RT. REV. WM. E. ARMITAGE, D. D., Visitor.

Kemper Hall, a first-class institution for Girls and Young Ladies, elegantly equipped and appointed, offers, in every department, superior advantages. The buildings and grounds are everything that could be desired. The location, overlooking Lake Michigan, affords a view unusually picturesque. The climate, summer and winter, is equally good. Girls from the South may here have their health permanently established.

THE CONDITIONS.—There are no extra charges. The rates published include the entire expense. Ten dollars entrance fee paid but once, to secure the place. For board, laundry, ordinary tuition, music, modern languages, Latin, drawing, and the use of piano, models, and text books, $450 per scholastic year—$300 payable September 11, the beginning of the scholastic year, and $150 April 1, the beginning of the spring term. For little girls under eleven years old, $300—$200 payable September 11, and $100 payable April 1.

Pupils from the South can be accommodated during the summer vacation at $7 a week. my21 6m

Scientific.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES speak of three enormous meteorites recently discovered in Greenland. They weigh 40,600, 20,000 and 10,000 pounds respectively.

THE famous pitch lake in the Island of Trinidad was visited by Canon Kingsley, on his recent West India trip. It covers an area of ninety-nine acres, and contains millions of tons of pitch. In a colder climate, the buried vegetable matter which the heat of the tropics has transformed into asphalt and oil would have been changed instead into peat and coal. So say the geological surveyors of the island.

NO DANGER.—The papers have circulated a report, said to be based on the calculations of Prof. Plantamour, of Switzerland, that a large comet would cross the orbit of the earth, August 12. Many credulous persons have feared that it would cause the destruction of our planet. Their fears, however, may be allayed, as the astronomer now asserts that he has not discovered such a comet, and that the whole story is without foundation.

THE phosphorescence of the water of the Red sea was much admired by the members of the eclipse expedition which went from Europe to India in December last. It was peculiarly brilliant when the hot water from the steamer's condenser was poured out into the sea, a phenomenon which Mr. H. N. Moseley, in a letter to Nature, attributes to the fact that the minute animals in the water were probably killed by the heat, and in the act of dying emitted flashes of superlative brilliancy.

WE PUBLISHED, not long ago, a notice of a peculiarity of the horned toad of California in the expulsion of a blood-like fluid from the eye, and a reader of the Weekly writes to give his own testimony to the fact. He states that he has caught numbers of them in Texas, and frequently noticed the ejection of a bloody fluid from the inner canthus of the eye, once receiving the discharge in his own eye while holding the animal at a distance of at least a foot. The sensation experienced was quite painful for a few minutes. Hyper's Weekly.

THE proposition to use the poison of various animals for medicinal purposes is being advocated by several physicians. Intermittent neuralgia is said to have been cured by the application of wasps' stings, in a case under the care of one M. Corbet; and if we may believe the report of another doctor, the bite of a viper completely removed symptoms of heart disease, and left the patient apparently well. The account of the death of a negro in Brazil who allowed himself to be bitten by a venomous serpent, under the belief that he could thereby cure elephantiasis, from which he was suffering, lends much emphasis to the suggestion of the Academy that great caution should be observed in these experiments.

THE GREAT PYRAMID OF EGYPT.—At a recent meeting of the King's College Engineering Society, a paper by Mr. Jacob, "On the Great Pyramid," was read. The author first gave a general description of the pyramid, as to its position, foundation, internal and external masonry, and the chambers and passages which it contains. He then propounded the theory originated by Mr. Taylor, of London, and which has been recently more fully developed by the Astronomer Royal for Scotland. This theory supposes the Great Pyramid to have been built for a standard of weights and measures, from the wonderful relations existing in the dimensions of this stupendous structure, almost inexplicable on any other hypothesis.

AMONG the most remarkable of discoveries in photography is that claimed by one Johnson, an Englishman, who is said to be a man of extraordinary mechanical genius. The invention is a panoramic camera which, by ingenious mechanism, sweeps the whole landscape and takes it on a plane surface, embracing on one negative one-third of the circle. The exactitude of its operations is as singular as the beauty of the results. The pantoscope begins at one end of the view desired, and goes round the horizon as one sweeps the telescope, the plate moving with a corresponding motion through the arc, which might be a circle if it were desirable. The scenery of this country, with its wide-extended views of lake, and prairie, and mountain, would be admirably represented by this instrument.

OVER a bridge in one of the country towns of England is the following accurate notice: "No one vehicle drawn by more than one animal is allowed to cross this bridge in opposite directions at the same time."

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.
PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND
ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the several Southern States, feeling that School Books which should be entirely unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern States, the facts of history and science—of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which should not be offensive to the people—which should present only are now issuing a complete series of the most eminent citizens of the necessity for a series of timely unsectional, unpartisan, the eminent Southern scholars are the

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,
By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. "A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach, Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,
By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy
FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as
G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,
and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.
H. H. SMITH & CO., Proprietors,
20 Baronne St., New Orleans.
Caution to the Public.—Be sure to get the right article.
Among the references are Hon. S. Belden, Attorney General; Hon. C. O. Pugne, Ex-Judge, District Court; General Thomas M. Scott, of J. Pinckney Smith & Co.; Rev. L. P. Hentz, Lutheran Church; Captain J. J. Rivera, foreman of the Bulletin office, and many others. no30 6m

TO THE AFFLICTED.
The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly
Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup.
Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.
It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.
For sale by all respectable druggists,
F. P. DUCONGE, Proprietor,

SWINTON'S CONDENSED
SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal:)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.
ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."
All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.
You save $5 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.
Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The general market has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation since our last issue. We hear some complaints of increasing dullness from several branches of the wholesale trade, but a moderate business has, nevertheless, been done in sales to country merchants and city dealers. The business of the past season has been of fair extent but at light profits, the prices asked by importers and others being so low as to make this the best purchasing market for country merchants.

The river is 4 feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the nineteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	3,378
Lake	4
Florida	66
Mobile	520
Texas	39
Total	4,007

On Saturday the demand was fair, and although it ran mostly on the better qualities, which were offered so sparingly and held at such full prices as to materially check the movement, yet the sales summed up 3,350 bales, at the previous improvement in the higher grades, but at more irregular and lower figures for low ordinary and ordinary. On Monday buyers came forward with less spirit, and, finding factors still more stringent in their pretensions, the business was confined to 900 bales, at prices showing a further improvement of ⅛c. in low middling and about 1-16c. in the higher grades, while low cottons were still more irregular and unsettled. On Tuesday the movement was more animated, but under discouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York prices were hardly as buoyant as the day previous, without, however, showing any quotable varintion. The sales embraced 2,900 bales. Low cottons, including inferior to ordinary inclusive, were in more request, but sold at irregular rates, ordinary selling at 20, 20¼ @20⅛c., and strict ruling proportionably higher.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 900,968 bales, against 1,268,098 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 976,664 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 110,911 to France, and a decrease of 664,475 to Great Britain, and of 250,178 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	19½ @ 21
Good ordinary	21¼ @ 21⅝
Low middling	22¼ @ 22⅝
Middling	— @ 23
Strict middling	23¼ @ 23⅜
Good middling	23½ @ —

SUGAR.—There is a good stock in the sheds, but we have to note little or no demand for that. On Tuesday the receipts were larger than usual, but they were mostly sold at 7¼c. for common, 8@8⅛c. for fair, and 8⅞@9c. for strictly good fair. Demerara is retailing in the sheds at 10¾@11¼c. ₱ lb. There is no demand for clarified sugar. City refinery is retailing in filling small orders at 9@10½c. for centrifugal, 11 @11½c. for yellow clarified, 12⅛@ 12½c. for white clarified, 13c. for crushed and powdered, and 14c. for cut loaf.

MOLASSES.—The season is over, and only small lots are coming in from plantation. On Tuesday some common fermenting sold at 30c., and prime fermenting at 43c. ₱ gallon. City refinery reboiled is jobbing at 35c. for inferior, 40c. for good common, 50c. for fair, 55c. for prime, and 60c. for choice.

CORN.—On Tuesday the market was firmer, without any advance, and 8,000 sacks sold at 67c. for mixed, 68c. for yellow, and 68@69c. for white.

OATS.—On Tuesday the market was firm, with a good demand and a scarcity of choice. 2,000 sacks sold at 53, 54@ 55c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Tuesday the demand was rather slack. 300 sacks sold at $1.40, $1.45@$1.50 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday prices were lower, and the sales were confined to 257 bbls. mess, in two lots, at $13.25 ₱ bbl. Mess is retailing at $13.75.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market was dull, and the sales were confined to 50 casks, in lots, at 5⅜c. for shoulders, and 7⅛@7¾c. for clear sides. Clear rib sides were quoted at 7⅛c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—Sugar-cured continue in light supply, and choice are in demand and firm. On Saturday 25 tierces sold, in two lots, at 11½@11¾c. ₱ lb., and since then small sales were made at these prices.

DRY SALT MEAT.—Shoulders are quoted at 4¾@5c., rib sides 5¾c., clear sides 5⅞@6c., and clear sides 6¼ @6½c. ₱ lb. The stock is nearly all in the hands of dealers. On Tuesday 30 boxes of shoulders sold, to arrive, at 5c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—Tierces are quoted at 8¾c. for packers', with no demand for that description, and 9¼@9¾c. for refined.

BREAKFAST BACON.—We quote 10@ 10½c. ₱ lb. for Western. Northern is quoted at 11c. ₱ lb.

BEEF.—Texas commands $11@$12, Western $16.50 ₱ bbl. Western is scarce. The market is bare of Northern. It would command $16.50@$17 ₱ bbl.

BUTTER.—Western commands 28@ 30c., Goshen 38@40c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 111⅜@111½, (against 111⅝ at New York,) and closed at 111⅝@111⅞, (against 111⅝ at New York.)

The sales of silver embraced $500 in American half dollars on Saturday at 108½, and $1,200 on Monday at 108¼, and $1,500 at 108¾.

Formerly WOOD & MANN.

These Engines are so well and favorably known that a description of them here is not deemed necessary.

They are EQUALED by FEW, SURPASSED by NONE, perfect in workmanship, complete in appointments, safe, simple and substantial. Every boiler is practically tested before leaving the factory. By the use of a CIRCULATING WATER BOTTOM around and underneath the furnace, which lessens the

RISK FROM FIRE,

they are particularly adapted for GINNING COTTON. Engines of all sizes, at prices which challenge comparison for equal size of steam cylinder and measurements of boiler. A full stock of these Engines will be kept constantly on hand by the undersigned, who has been appointed general agent.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, April 24.—There was a slight frost here this morning.

The army worms have appeared in the surrounding country in immense numbers, and are doing great damage to the fruit trees.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 25.—Hon. A. J. Walker, ex-chief justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama, died here to-day, aged fifty-three years.

BOSTON, April 27.—During a heavy gale last night gigantic trees were uprooted, and a portion of the walls and two towers of the Jubilee Coliseum fell with a crash that was heard for miles. One of the end towers had reached the height of one hundred and ten feet. No one hurt.

NEW ALBANY, IND., April 27.—The workingmen have issued an address calling a mass convention of the Labor Reformers, to meet here June 8. They also selected delegates to the Cincinnati Convention.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, April 24.—It is believed in this city that the struggle about to take place in Spain between the government and Carlists will be a severe one. The number of insurgents now in the field is estimated at ten thousand.

NAPLES, April 25.—The eruption of Mount Vesuvius, which has been increasing in violence since the first signs of commotion, has now reached unwonted pitch and grandeur. New craters have been formed, and streams of lava are pouring down the mountain side in different directions. Naples is already crowded with visitors, and tourists are arriving from all parts of Europe to witness the spectacle.

NAPLES, April 26.—A fresh crater opened in Vesuvius to-day. The ashes and lava threaten the villages on the mountain side, and the inhabitants are removing their household goods. Thousands are encamped in the fields. The ministers have been summoned to Rome, and are coming to make provisions for the houseless people. The bay is covered with boats filled with spectators. The scene is grand and terrible beyond description. The flames at times shoot up to a great height, and masses of rock are ejected with earthquake shocks, which are distinctly felt in this city.

NAPLES, April 27.—The eruption of Vesuvius continues with dreadful violence. The lava has already reached Sebastiano and threatens other towns. Explosions in the volcano are constantly heard in this city. The consternation of the inhabitants of the villages and towns which are threatened with danger increases.

It is reasserted that many tourists were surrounded by lava and perished.

His majesty King Victor Emanuel has sent aid to those persons who have been compelled to flee from their homes and encamp in the fields.

ROME, April 27.—The eruption of Vesuvius continues. Two hundred persons, it is reported, were burned. The flames burst from under the feet of the inhabitants. The people are terror-stricken and flying in every direction.

NAPLES, April 28.—The eruption of Vesuvius is decreasing. A new crater opened near Tersigno to-day, but with every fresh opening now the violence of the eruption seems to abate. This morning the heavens are darkened by clouds of smoke and ashes, and the strong wind carried showers of burning cinders as far as Scofate. Thousands of acres of cultivated land have been overwhelmed by ashes and lava. Vineyards and farms are buried out of sight.

LONDON, April 29.—Particulars of the late earthquake in Syria, which caused such terrible loss of life, are now coming to hand. It appears that fatalities were not greatest in the city of Antioch, as the first dispatch intimated, but were heavier in the country in the vicinity of that city. A letter from Antioch, under date of the fourth of April, says the American Protestant church was severely injured and four of the American community were killed. All members of families of missionaries are safe.

The number of persons killed in the city of Antioch is less than three hundred, but it is known that one thousand six hundred people living in surrounding towns and country, where shocks were as severe if not greater than here, were killed, and this number may be increased. The distress of the people will be only temporary. Crop prospects are good. Supply of provisions on hand is moderate. Correspondents of London papers praise Rev. Mr. Powers, an American missionary, for assisting in administering to afflicted people.

MADRID, April 29.—Everywhere throughout the country the Republicans and Progressionists are announcing their intention to support the government in the present troubles.

Senor Zorilla, a well-known Radical, is in command of a column of government troops in the province of Navarre. The appointment of Zorilla to this command has had a good effect upon a large number of persons who wavered in their support of the government.

It has been learned from prisoners captured that each band of Carlists has a priest at its head or among its officers.

MADRID, April 30, evening.—A battle was fought at Tudela, in Navarre, to-day, between the government troops and the insurgents. The latter were defeated with the loss of three hundred killed and wounded.

IT TAKES something to establish a newspaper. The literary itemizer of the Watchman and Reflector says:

"There are some charmingly innocent people who believe, or pretend to, that the publishing of newspapers is necessarily and always lucrative. A little experience might teach them better. The Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, states that although its affairs are conducted with the strictest economy, and its subscribers number twelve thousand, it has thus far cost $20,000 more than its income. It says also that the Advance, of Chicago, with a still larger subscription list, sunk about $75,000 in four years, and had not become self-sustaining when the late fire occurred; that the Interior, in less than two years, has used up a capital of nearly $50,000, and that the Standard, of Chicago, with fifteen thousand subscribers, was not self-sustaining. We hope these statements by the Standard are not true, but we fear that they are. It takes a long time, a long purse and a long brain to establish a paper upon a paying basis."

They are doubtless true. The Methodist has cost unacknowledged thousands, probably near a hundred of them, and is not yet out of the woods. The Herald did not get out of debt from the time of its establishment until 1850. The New York Christian Advocate says only two of the General Conference Advocates are paying now, and not one of them has probably paid all it cost to establish them. The Christian Advance has died for want of financial breath. Moral: "It takes a long time, a long purse and a long brain to establish a paper upon a paying basis."

A COMMITTEE of the New York and Brooklyn Association of Congregational Ministers, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. H. Powers, F. Russell and S. Bourne, made the following report on the raising of church revenue, at the recent meeting of that body:

1. Facts.—(a.) A small portion of our churches are strictly self-supporting, whatever the method adopted. (b.) A radical wrong is that the pulpit popularity of the preacher is so fully relied on to increase the revenue. (c.) Unchristian and spiritually unprofitable methods are often resorted to to eke out a revenue (fairs, etc.)

2. Principles.—(a.) Money should be raised before it is expended. (b.) The church is a morally responsible body to this end. (c.) Individual ability is the measure of duty.

3. Methods.—(a.) The principle of weekly offerings in some form is by far the best method of realizing these ideas. (b.) It has been historically the most successful. (c.) Among all the systems for this end which have obtained any considerable acceptance, the committee have examined fourteen of the most excellent, and consider the weekly revenue system, copyrighted by the Evangelical Press Association of New York, as the best, combining as it does the advantages of all, and being attended, when properly applied, with none of the usual disadvantages.

GOD SEES YOU.

Many children have read the fairy tales of the Danish writer, Hans Christian Andersen. A pleasing story of his childhood is told in a sketch of his life:

Little Hans was one day with his mother and some other poor neighbors gleaning in the field of a man who was said to be very harsh and cruel. They saw him coming, and all started to run away. But Hans' clumsy wooden shoes came off; the stubble, or short stumps of the grain stalks which had been left by the reapers, hurt his tender feet, so that he could not keep up with the others, and he found that he must be caught. The rough owner of the field was very near, and could now almost reach him with his heavy whip; when Hans, whose hopeless case now suddenly filled him with new courage, stopped and turned, and, looking into the man's face, said: "How dare you strike me, when God can see you?"

The anger of his pursuer was subdued at once. Instead of striking the boy, he gently stroked his cheeks, asked his name, and gave him some money. The truth of which little Hans had reminded him when about to do a mean and cruel act seemed to make him ashamed of it at once, and so caused him to speak and act kindly.

How many wicked words and acts children as well as grown people might be kept from saying and doing if they could at the right time be reminded, as that man was, of the presence of God! When you rise in the morning; through all the hours of the day; when you go to your rest at night; in the darkness, when you are fast asleep; when you are faithful in duty; when you are careless; when you are kind and loving, and when you are unkind and selfish and sinful—always, everywhere, God sees you. When you are tempted to speak harshly to your little brothers or sisters, or undutifully to your parents; when you are tempted to lie, to cheat, to steal, to speak a profane or naughty word, ask yourself: "How dare I do this wicked thing, when God can see me?"

PROF. JAMES B. DODD, one of the most prominent educators in the State, a well-known author of mathematical text books, and an earnest, zealous Christian, died in Greensburg, Kentucky, March 27. The Courier-Journal says: "Prof. Dodd devoted the main portion of his life to the cause of education. In Mississippi, Louisiana and Kentucky he had occupied in three different colleges the chair of mathematics and natural philosophy. He was associated with Dr. Bascom, of Transylvania University, at Lexington, when that institution was in the meridian of its success and usefulness, and for a number of years after the death of Dr. Bascom was president pro tem. of the college. As a teacher in his special department he was excelled by few men; always earnest, thorough and devoted to the advancement of his students, who will bear witness to the zeal with which he labored, and the success which crowned his efforts. As a scholar he was exact in all that he professed; there was nothing superficial in his attainments, whether in the special spheres of his duty or in the departments of theology and moral science, to which he devoted much of his leisure. As a member of society Prof. Dodd was genial, courteous and affable, possessing rare talents as a conversationalist; as a Christian he was throughout his life an earnest, liberal and consistent member of the Methodist Church. Prof. Dodd was born in Loudon county, Virginia, April 3, 1807, and was therefore nearly sixty-five years old at the time of his death."

A BOY'S EXPERIMENT.—Some one says: I know a boy who created a sensation by breaking in upon the gravity of his guests in this wise: Entering the room, he commenced: "The class in natural history are invited to witness a living curiosity. Even the learned Agassiz has never explained the reason why, if you take a guinea pig up by the tail, his eyes will drop out. Please walk out into the kitchen and look at Cavy." They all rush out, and behold the little fellow with black and orange spots in the kitchen, as announced. "Let us see his eyes drop out now," said Tommy. "Lift him up by his tail and see," says the young showman. But Tommy makes but indifferent progress, for lo, a guinea pig is found to have no tail!

IT WAS a fruitful saying of Thoreau: "Be not simply good; be good for something."

THE BIBLE REVISERS.

Prof. Day, of Yale College, has an article in the College Courant on the "Present State of Biblical Revision," in which he says that the British revisers "have been industriously at work, and have completed the revision of the gospel according to Matthew, and nearly the whole of Genesis and Exodus. As soon as printed copies of these are received they will be placed in the hands of the American revisers for consideration and criticism, and the proposal of any other changes which may be thought desirable. The whole work at the present rate of progress is not expected to be completed in less than seven years, and may not improbably occupy ten; but whether the time required be longer or shorter, there is every reason to believe that it will be steadily pressed forward to a conclusion, and that in the end we shall have a translation which, while agreeing substantially with our venerable English version, will present the best results of the learned study of the Scripture for the last two centuries and a half."

The English revisers are divided into two companies—one for the review of the Old Testament, the other for the New. The general principles for their guidance are these:

To introduce as few alterations as possible into the text of the authorized version consistently with faithfulness.

To limit, as far as possible, the expression of such alterations to the language of the authorized and earlier English versions. Each company to go twice over the portion to be revised, once provisionally, the second time finally, and on principles of voting as hereinafter is provided.

That the text to be adopted be that for which the evidence is decidedly preponderating; and that when the text so adopted differs from that from which the authorized version was made, the alteration be indicated in the margin.

To make or retain no change in the text on the final revision by each company, except two-thirds of those present approve of the same.

To revise the headings of chapters, pages, paragraphs, italics and punctuation.

To refer, on the part of each company, when considered desirable, to divines, scholars and literary men, whether at home or abroad, for their opinions.

The American scholars and divines invited to co-operate in this work will be governed by the same principles.

GREAT BIBLE MEETING AT ROME.

The London Daily News correspondent at Rome, under date of March 5, sends a report of the inauguration meeting of the Italian Bible Society, of which we have had a brief telegram. It took place in the Argentine Theater, which was crowded to excess. The company consisted of a large number of Roman ladies, many members of Parliament, the president of the Italian Senate, Count Mamiani, the Grand Duke of Nassau and his suite, etc. The chair was occupied by Admiral Fishbourne. On the platform was Father Hyacintho. Before the proceedings commenced several ladies fainted, owing to the overcrowded state of the room.

Admiral Fishbourne then read his opening speech, in which he demonstrated the great benefits arising to humanity from the free propagation of the word of God. His remarks were emphatically cheered, and, to the surprise of all, not only by those who were present, but by hundreds who had gathered on the square facing the theater, and who never abandoned their place during the whole time the meeting lasted.

M. Ribetti spoke next, congratulating the society in the name of the Waldensian Church, which was the first in Italy to propagate the Bible.

After a few words from other speakers, Mr. Bruce spoke at length on the history of the English Bible Society, and publicly thanked the Italian government and authorities for having on repeated occasions protected the missionaries and Bible readers against fanatical clericals.

Of course, Father Hyacinthe aroused the greatest enthusiasm. His speech was repeatedly interrupted by the loud cheering of the assembly. He said that in the Bible lies the real greatness of nations, and that England owed her power to it far more than to the great charter.

Father Gavazzi spoke next, and declared that the Italian Bible Society had no object in view but that of enlightening the Italian people. The society did not aim at converting the Italians to the Protestant faith. It desired, through the propagation of the Bible, to convert the people to the old faith, to the old Church of Rome and of St. Paul, to the church which was founded on the word of God—the Bible.—New York Observer.

DEATH OF AN ENTIRE FAMILY.

MR. EDITOR: We were requested to furnish for the ADVOCATE an account of the sad and singular providence which occurred in the family of Bro. Benjamin Pittard. Six of his family, including himself, died within the short space of ten days of each other.

Bro. B. Pittard died December 20, 1871, aged fifty-six years. His wife, the daughter of J. Butterworth, Sister M. M. Pittard, died January 2, 1872, aged forty-four years. James S. Pittard, eldest son, died December 24, 1871, aged nineteen years. William R. Pittard, second son, died December 31, 1871, aged seventeen years. Bettie Pittard died December 23, 1871, aged eleven years. Benjamin Pittard, Jr., died December 29, 1871, aged six years. The disease with which they all died was a malignant type of typhoid pneumonia. They all died in Madison county, Mississippi.

Bro. and Sister Pittard had long been members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. They were professors of the religion of Jesus, and in life and death gave exemplifications of its purifying and elevating power. God, in his good providence, saw fit to take nearly all the family to heaven at the same time.

J. P.

MANSFIELD, LA., April 18, 1872.

GOD'S regard to the power of man, on whom he has "set his heart," is not confined to deliverance from outward calamities, and the supply of worldly blessings. Let penitent man approach him, laden as he may be with the guilt of his offenses, conscious of his entire unworthiness, and the unworthiness of all his services, acknowledging his desert of punishment, but yet pleading the atonement of his Savior, smiting upon his breast, and saying: "God be merciful to me a sinner!" "Will he plead against him with his great power? No; but he will put strength in him." "He will remember his covenant;" he will pass by and proclaim his name, "The Lord merciful and gracious;" and the broken-hearted, humble and believing man, healed and cheered and comforted in his God, "shall go down to his house justified." And, with respect to the covenanted right of prayer, how large is the grant to believers: "All are yours, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's!" "Be careful for nothing; but in everything let your requests be made known unto God." "Whatsoever you ask in my name, the Father will do it for you." Such is another of those wondrous means by which the redeeming purpose is carried into effect; God "sets his heart" on man to "magnify him;" and in order to do this he opens to him his throne of grace, he listens to the expression of all his wants, he gives him access to his own fullness of grace and glory, and "fulfills all his petitions."—Richard Watson.

DEATH OF A MILLIONAIRE ARCHBISHOP.—The telegraph has mentioned the death of the Archbishop of Lima on the nineteenth of February. The Panama Star and Herald says:

"Dying at the age of eighty-eight, he was the oldest bishop and oldest archbishop in the Catholic Church—the first by reason of seniority; the second by reason of age. Another more agreeable circumstance to those directly interested is the fact that the late prelate was probably the richest man in South America, his property at the lowest estimation amounting to twenty millions. His life was spotless and his virtues many; his fault was a remarkable desire to increase his wealth."

THE depreciators of Christianity have been accustomed to picture the Turk as a model of honesty and probity, and then to point to the creature of their imagination as an evidence that Mohammedanism is as good for Turks as Christianity for Christians. The new Grand Vizier has destroyed their picture by bringing to light the real Turk. His recent investigations have disclosed rascality as sublime and rings as unscrupulous as those which have given New York city a disagreeable notoriety. The annual deficit in Turkey has heretofore been $35,000,000. The new Grand Vizier has already reduced it to $25,000,000, and his work is not yet done.

FROM THE WORK.

Union Springs District, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The first round on the district has been completed, and I am engaged in the work of the second quarter. So far I have reached all my meetings except on two charges; failed to attend these owing to personal and family affliction. The Rev. Robert E. Carey, in charge of the Rocky Mount circuit, was taken sick in the latter part of January, and after a long and severe illness he died on the fourteenth of April, in great peace and triumph. He had made a most favorable impression on his charge, and could he have lived would have been very useful and successful, as he ever has been since his entrance into the ministry. I have employed the Rev. John D. Loftin to supply his place. Several of the preachers on the district have been hindered in their work by sickness, as well as by much unfavorable weather; but at present the prospect for a year of prosperity to the church is, in many respects, encouraging.

A Way to Hibernate.

MR. EDITOR: It is well known that our country Sabbath schools scarcely ever claim an active existence through the winter months; and there having been so many unsuccessful efforts made to keep the schools up through the winter, the school at Asbury chapel (Sepulga circuit) determined on the fourth Sunday in November last, which was our last appointment there the past year, to hibernate for three months. I requested the school, at the same time, to read through the New Testament during the three months. So we met at the time agreed upon, and fifteen answered to their names as having read through the New Testament. This school begins the work of a new year with renewed zeal and energy. The Lord bless the children of the church.

GEORGIANA, ALA., April 3, 1872.

REV. JAMES APPLEWHITE.

At the second Quarterly Conference of Winona circuit, held at Bethlehem church, on the thirtieth of March last, the following tribute of respect in memory of an old and esteemed friend and brother, Rev. James Applewhite, was passed. Similar action was taken by the official board of Vaiden circuit a few weeks since, which was all right and proper, as our departed brother had labored much and long in his ministerial capacity in that field.

We not only have the right, but feel it a duty incumbent upon us, as he was a highly esteemed and valuable member of our official board, to take this action; hence the request to publish our proceedings.

Very respectfully yours, etc.,

O. J. MOORE.

WHEREAS, It hath pleased the great Head of the Church, in his wisdom, to remove from our midst, since the last meeting of this conference, our father in Israel, Rev. James Applewhite, who, as an itinerant and local minister, has labored with and for us for the last thirty-five or forty years, and as a member of this body has gone in and out before us for the last quarter of a century or more;

AND WHEREAS, His great zeal for good, and his ardent desire for the salvation of men, his liberality in supporting the institutions of the church, his kindness to the poor, merit our warmest love and claim our highest respect; therefore,

Resolved, That we bow with humble submission to the will of him who is too wise to err, and too good to do wrong.

Resolved, That we will fondly cherish the memory of our departed father; that we will imitate his virtues, and strive to follow him as he followed Christ.

Resolved, That we tender the family of our deceased father, and especially his aged companion, our warmest sympathy, and pray that the Everlasting arms may support her in this affliction, and that God's blessing may attend her declining steps.

Resolved, That this preamble and these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this conference, and that a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, and also to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Winona Democrat for publication.

THE IMITATION MONK.

As roaming Pat walked down the street,
On one bright summer's day,
A somber, dreamland-looking man
Passed by him on the way;
With shovel hat upon his head—
Or cocked, as some declare—
And cassock sweeping to his heels,
He had a monkish air.

A heathern girdle round his waist
Confined his cassock fast,
And, with his holy loins well girt,
He walked with wondrous haste;
A cross was dangling from his side,
Of solemn ebony;
Twas fastened to his cassock belt
By string of rosary.

Quoth Pat: "I vow by all the saints
In holy ordinal,
I cannot tell if yon good man
Be monk or cardinal;
But though his curls be rather long,
And though he wants a cowl,
I'll beg his blessing, by my faith,
Upon my guilty sowl."

He fell upon his knees forthwith,
His sins and fears confessing;
And in his honest, hasty brogue
He begged the father's blessing:
"My holy father! I have been
A rogue and baste and liar,
But bless me now, whate'er you be,
A monk or praste or friar."

The father stood as if his foot
Did meditate a kick:
"I am a vicar of the church
Called Anglo-Catholic;
Your Pope is but a vicar small
Upon the Tiber's side,
But I am Pope from ocean-shore
E'en unto mountain-side."

Poor Pat was wroth that he had bent
To heretic divine;
And by St. Patrick I did doubt
If you was genuine;
I tell you now, upon my sowl—
Now ye have raised my spunk—
Next to the divil I do hate
An Imitation Monk."

THE HIGHER LIFE.

As a general thing, it is to be feared, our religion is too superficial. This is the case both with ministers and members. Whether it be true or not that there are remains of the carnal mind after conversion, all admit that it is both our privilege and our duty to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" from the time of conversion until death; that when first converted we are but "babes in Christ," and it remains for us to grow until we become full-grown men in experience and practice. But alas! too many of us continue mere "babes" even down to old age and death, instead of expanding and developing into "perfect men," into "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

As ministers we need to get into this higher life. We need it for our own safety and comfort, and that we may be able to lead our flocks out into the "green pastures" and "beside the still waters"—that we may "rightly divide the word of truth, giving to each his portion in due season"—that we may "feed them with food convenient for them." "Like people, like priest." We cannot expect our people to be holier than we ourselves are. We need a fuller baptism of the Holy Ghost, a fuller consecration, a more entire devotedness, a greater singleness of aim. We need a fuller realization of our responsibility and the importance of our work. We do not sufficiently feel the burden of souls. We do not look at our work and its results enough in the light of eternity. We allow our mental and spiritual vision to be too much obscured by the mists and fogs of earth and time. There is danger of thinking too much about how we shall live—of walking by sight and not by faith; danger, too, great danger, of yielding to the temptation to seek for worldly emoluments and self-aggrandizement, instead of seeking only the glory of God and the salvation of souls. Our only chance to avoid the evils deprecated and accomplish the work committed to us is to drink more deeply into the Spirit of Christ—to have so much of "the mind that was also in Christ Jesus," that that which is the great end of God in reference to man, and which brought Christ into the world, shall become the one end of life with us. What though we have to suffer in the flesh, live on little, and sometimes be accounted fools for Christ's sake? Heaven will make it all up. Brethren in the ministry, let us seek to have our hearts so filled with "the fullness of God" that earth may lose its charms for us, that the glory of God and the salvation of souls may become the all-absorbing desire of our hearts, and the constant efforts of our lives.

But while we thus urge our brethren in the ministry to seek this higher life, we would with equal earnestness urge it upon Christians in the private walks of life. Think not that this deeper work of grace is the exclusive privilege of the ministry, or that you are required to be less holy than they. You need it as well as they, and it is as much your privilege as theirs. You need it to enable you to keep yourselves "unspotted from the world," while engaged in its business and mingling with the men of the world. The cares of life, your toils, the management of your business and of your employes, and the influences brought to bear upon you in your necessary associations with men, all have a tendency to lead you away from God, to cause you to neglect your duties, and to keep you from "letting your light shine before men." Remember, "you are the light of the world, the salt of the earth," the expounents of the religion of the Bible. God will save the world through the church. He intends that his image, as stamped upon your hearts, shall be so clearly defined, and stand out in such bold relief, that it cannot be mistaken by men of the world; and that the fire of his love shall burn with such fervor and glow, with such brightness, upon the altar of your heart, as that all who come in contact with you shall see its light and feel its warmth. And thus your whole life shall be one continual sermon to those around you, showing that there is a soul-saving power in the gospel. Now the fire can send out light and heat only in proportion to its own intensity; if there is but little fire, of course there will be but little light or heat. But what is actually the case with many, very many, of those who "have named the name of Christ?" We see but little difference between them and the world. And why? Evidently because they have so little religion that it cannot shine. Where there is religion it will show itself; it is just as natural for it to do so as for the sun to shine, fire to burn or flowers to be fragrant. Brethren, if you would be happy and useful, and if you would obtain a rich reward in heaven, seek to have your hearts so entirely filled with religion that there will be no room for love of the world; that you may get above the region of doubts and fears, of mists and fogs and storms, into the clear atmosphere, where the rays from the "Sun of Righteousness" shall shine in beauty and glory upon your souls continually; and that the world around may be able to tell from your very countenances—from the image of God as beaming therefrom—that you are Christians, genuine Bible Christians. May the Spirit of holiness and of entire consecration fall upon us, burn up the dross of sin, and fit us for life and for death.

For the Advocate.

Life and Death of Mrs. Mary E. Lindsay.

Occasionally we meet with Christians whose life has been so marked with excellencies that it is profitable to the church in general to lift them up for example, that others may be incited to follow them as they followed Jesus—"followers of them who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises." And again, occasionally we meet with death-bed scenes of Christians which furnish such fine illustration of the power of faith in Christ to overcome the natural aversion to death, that to narrate them to the church is helpful to all believers. Every shout of triumph that resounds from the valley of death rings hope into our hearts; we take courage, and press onward. Of such was the life and of such was the death of Mrs. Mary E. Lindsay, of Shreveport, Louisiana, and hence the following sketch of our departed sister.

HER LIFE.

Mary E. Crowder (maiden name of Mrs. Lindsay) was born in Oglethorpe county, Georgia, April 17, 1833, and was the oldest daughter of William B. and Eliza H. Crowder. From infancy she was brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and in her thirteenth year she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South; but not until the fall of 1853, at a camp meeting in the neighborhood of her home, did she experience a satisfactory manifestation of the Spirit of adoption, whereby, with comfortable assurance, she could look God in the face and say: "Abba, Father!" In the year 1855 her mother, now widowed, moved with the fatherless children to Caddo parish, Louisiana, where for several years Mary devoted herself to the education of the younger members of the family. In 1860 she was married to Colonel R. H. Lindsay, of Shreveport, Louisiana, and at once took up her residence and became a member of the Methodist church at said place; and here she lived happily as a wife and usefully as a Christian until her death. Sister Lindsay was a woman to be respected for the culture of her mind, as well as to be loved for the charities of her heart. There was not a fiber of frivolity or worldliness in the texture of her character—in warp and woof thereof grace had wrought a perfect work. As a member of the church she was excellent in counsel; she was eminently prudent, she was systematically beneficent, she was abundant in labors; a very Dorcas was she among the poor; for piety and knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, she was like unto the elect lady to whom St. John addresses one of his epistles; and for hospitality to our itinerant preachers she ranked in the church at Shreveport as did Lydia in the church at Philippi. Than Sister Lindsay none more regularly attended all the stated services of the sanctuary, and none had more at heart every interest of our beloved Zion. Of her walk and conversation we can truly testify she was "blameless and harmless, without rebuke, either from church or world." Like the holy women of old, her adorning was not "that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold or of putting on of apparel," but it was the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of God, of great price." One of the beauties of holiness for which she was particularly distinguished was patience—it wrought in her to the degree of sweetness. For the last few months of her life she was confined to a bed of sickness, suffering yet not murmuring—hindered in her zeal for the Lord's house, yet not repining. About two weeks ago she felt persuaded that her work on earth was done; she heard the Master calling for her, and she made ready to depart.

HER DEATH.

At first, as her feet touched the cold waters of the river that runneth through the valley of death, she manifested a momentary shrinking—an obscuring shadow seemed to trouble her spirit; the thick darkness of the valley appalled her, and there was a faint trembling of her faith; she looked back at her past Christian experience, then she looked to Christ. She waited on the Lord, was of good courage, and soon he strengthened her heart. Her feet, that had been shod with "the preparation of the gospel," began to feel the "firm foundation for the saints of the Lord;" one by one the precious promises gave to her firm footing; she became calm and strong and hopeful. As she advanced into the waters the shadow lifted from her spirit; her eyes were opened to see light shining in the valley for her, and her ears recognized the voice of Jesus calling to her from the other side: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." She now felt sweet and comfortable assurance that for her "to die was gain." When she was well into the midst of the valley she seemed to stand still; her bodily sufferings subsided, there was a calm in all her senses, her utterance was no longer impeded by coughing, as it had been throughout her sickness; her face brightened—she was evidently contemplating "the fair fields of Eden," for says she: "I shall not enjoy spring in Shreveport this year; I shall enjoy it in heaven." She then talked freely with her friends about her approaching end. With remarkable judgment she gave directions respecting the disposition of all her personal effects, and dictated most appropriate messages of love and exhortation to each of her absent brothers and sisters. Up to this time her Christian friends in waiting upon her had been comforting and counseling her; now she turned comforter and counselor to them; her words to each, for wisdom and grace, were like "apples of gold in pictures of silver." She told us of the sweet gratification she felt at having made preparation for death while in health and strength; that now faith in Jesus was yielding her grace to conquer all fear of death; that she could testify, while passing away, that for the Christian there was no sting in death; that verily "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" can make "free from the law of sin and death." She addressed touching and comfortable words to her husband and mother, and sister and pastor, and to various friends that were in the room—one after another. "I thank God," she said, "for having had a praying husband; often when one of us was spiritually weak the other was strong to help, and whenever any trouble of any sort came into the household each could say to the other, Let us pray." Turning to her pastor, she said (and it was the sweetest reward he ever received,) "I have been blessed, abundantly blessed, through your ministrations," and then she proceeded to give him messages to the members of the church, and to those who are putting off their preparation for eternity. As she counseled and exhorted, her husband remarked to her: "Darling, you are doing much good in your last hours." She replied: "It has always been my desire to spend and be spent in the service of my Master." While we prayed with her she was seen to clap her hands rejoicingly; and after we had sung some of the happy songs of Zion for her, she exclaimed exultingly: "What a glorious meeting will we have in the New Jerusalem!" It was on Tuesday night she thus talked with us. While she spake we that listened experienced a feeling of transfixing awe—we felt somewhat of the shadow of the place, but we felt somewhat of the glory too. It was good to be there. Her voice fell on our ears like one from within the vail. She seemed to be in sight of the horses and chariots in waiting for her on the other side of the river; her faith was evidently transfusing into sight, her hope was manifestly unfolding into fruition, for her desire to depart grew apace; she had reached the blessed "strait" of St. Paul. Like a traveler nearing home, the last hours of the journey seemed to her the longest. During the night she fell into a gentle slumber, from which she waked soon after daylight on Wednesday morning. As she opened her eyes she asked the hour; she was told it was five o'clock; she called her husband, and said to him: "Darling, last night I thought I would be in heaven this morning, but I am with you yet." More than once through that day she would say, with an expression of sweet surprise in her face and tone: "Is this death!" And she would call the attention of those around her to notice how easy a matter it was to die when one was at peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. "Nelson," she said to her negro boy, "stand at the foot of my bed and see how easy it is for a Christian to die." She sank rapidly during the day, and only talked at long intervals; but the same clearness and soundness of mind marked her every utterance to the last. Like a child holding to a parent's hand in some subterranean tunnel, she would call out occasionally, "My Father! my Father!" as if to get an assuring pressure from the hand of him who was leading her through the valley of the shadow of death. At last—it was just seven o'clock on Wednesday evening, April 10—she felt a loosing of the last ligament that united her spirit to its fleshly body; she felt the suffocating strain, and called to her mother: "Ma, lift me up!" Mother and husband instantly raised her up, but only her tenantless "earthly house" remained to them—its doors all ajar. They listened eagerly, but in all its rooms and corridors not a sound of life could be heard; she who had been speaking to them but a moment since was gone—the waiting angels had lifted her up in a chariot of fire—had "caught up" her disembodied spirit to the third heaven, to be with Jesus in paradise. Yes, yes—"absent from the body, and present with the Lord."

Faithfully our sister lived, and triumphantly she died.

Missionary Appropriations—Hard Cases.

MR. EDITOR: When it was announced that the old missionary debt had been paid, many hearts rejoiced, for the honor of the church was sustained and a burden lifted. But there is said to be a claim of $9,000 still remaining of the old debt. Does this embrace all the appropriations for domestic missions made by the several Annual Conferences for several years, and have they been able to pay only in part? If so, it will greatly relieve those who have done missionary work and are embarrassed by not receiving what they had a right to expect. Or is it intended to pay only some favored claim, to the neglect of the majority of such claims? We think all those claims would amount to far more than $9,000. But if there be discriminations made among those claimants, it should be in favor of those most necessitons—of those men of God who are embarrassed.

The writer knows a minister of several years' standing who has been eminently useful in the conversion and accession of many to the church, but whose turn came to take this kind of work last year, who, on the faith of getting a missionary appropriation, bought necessaries for his family on credit, with the promise to pay on the adjournment of Conference, but had the mortification to return and tell the kind merchant that he could not pay. All the year the people had been after him to teach a school, for which he was fully qualified; but his burning desire was to fill up the mission of saving souls, to which he felt God had called him. He is on a circuit, this year, which is not able to pay for his support. The old debt of last year is unpaid. He is compelled, during all his spare time, to hurry home and plow and hoe. Oh! I should like to see him allowed to visit his people; for he is a fine, useful pastor. I have seen his patient, self-denying wife laboring at the wash-tub. (Somebody might at least give her a washing machine.) It is strange that this meek woman is so willing to endure these hardships only to help on the work of God, for she was raised differently. I could tell you their names, but perhaps they would rather suffer than complain.

I know another who received about $75 for himself, wife and child on the mission, and had subscribed $25 to aid in the liquidation of the old debt. Of course he could not pay his subscription. I know still another who sold his horse and mortgaged his home to procure necessaries for his family; and because he failed to get his missionary appropriation the mortgage is still unpaid, and he is liable to be sold out at any time. He is an old preacher on a poor work; still he trusts in God that all will come right, for he has in view the recompense of reward. There are still others in the Mississippi Conference and in other Conferences.

I see in our papers that one of our bishops and the secretary of the Missionary Society decided at one of the Conferences that after the year had ended, if the appropriation could not be paid, that the claim was null and void. If this doctrine be true, and I have no doubt it is, let our people see that a part of their money, at least, be applied to home work; while I would urge to liberality to the foreign missions. We have hundreds of poor, and for them we must sacrifice our property and ourselves, lest we lose our former glory of preaching to the poor. I do hope that at the next Conferences those self-sacrificing families who have given themselves to this kind of work will not be compelled to locate for want of bread, and these poor sheep left without a shepherd.

May the Lord move the hearts of the wealthy to bring forward their offerings to keep these men of God in the holy work—in which they glory—of preaching to the Lord's poor!

I could tell you of a man who this year had to pledge his watch to get means to go to an appointment on the ears, because of high water, for he could not reach it on horseback. I ask, shall not these heroes and heroines be sustained? We shall see. I can tell more of this, if necessary, and give names. How little of these men and their privations is known! They will not complain; but when they can go no further they very modestly ask for a location. That is the end; and the church has lost a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

Yours in Christ Jesus,

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

MR. EDITOR: I noticed the article in the ADVOCATE of March 28 last, by Bro. Angus Dowling, on what is sometimes called "the great commission," in Matt. xxviii, 19, 20: "Go ye into all the world," etc. I give it a different interpretation from what he does; and if incorrect, I will most gladly see my error corrected. I write for the sole purpose of finding and elucidating truth for our general benefit.

I agree with Bro. Dowling that, regarding these two verses a "commission" in the sense he does, and taking the words literally, the thing commanded has not yet been done, for no nation has yet been brought into the church.

But is this a commission at all, in any proper sense? Is it a charge or warrant, giving authority for the performance of the duty in question, to wit: to preach and teach the gospel offer of salvation? A commission is understood to imply that the person or persons to whom it is given did not previously possess the right or authority, nor were they under the obligation it imposes.

If this was a commission then given by Jesus, it must have been either to the men then before him individually and personally, or through them, as church representatives, both to themselves and to all future coming ministers of the gospel. If the former, it ended with them as the individual commission to preach ends with each man now who receives it.

This could not be because they were preachers before. For all that we know, they may have been preachers long before they became acquainted with Jesus. It is very certain that at this time they were already authorized and commissioned preachers.

And if we suppose this commission to be given to the apostles in a representative capacity—that is, to mankind through them—the question arises: How can that be? Men possessed this very authority and commission long before. At that very time, and years and centuries before, thousands upon thousands of divinely-commissioned ministers preached to "all the world," or all who would come and hear, all the doctrines and conditions of salvation we now preach.

In my preaching and teaching on this text my custom has been to explain it as a lesson of instruction on the subject of preaching generally and in detail, given by the Savior to the apostles, and through them, like other religious lessons, to mankind, but in no proper sense a commission. What we read are the words of Matthew—what he says about those teachings there ten or fifteen years before. The lesson itself was no doubt far more voluminous than Matthew's brief synopsis of it. He gives the gist, the point, the thing, and no doubt, to some extent, the very words of the lesson.

If I am in error I will, I hope in good faith and temper, regard it a kindness in Bro. Dowling or any one who will point it out.

SUPPORTING THE MINISTERS.

MR. EDITOR: There is very much written now on ministerial support. Perhaps in these dark days of trial few classes suffer more than ministers. But what is it that causes them to feel the pinchings of poverty? Are they the only class that suffer? Where are those who once gave liberally? Are they still in the walks of prosperity? Ah! no. There comes a voice from the sunny days of yore, that is almost too faint to tell of pleasures that were buried long ago, of riches that took unto themselves wings and flew away, of humble servants of our Heavenly Father who once welcomed the pastor to their bounteous board, who now are scarcely able to provide necessaries for the little ones intrusted to their care.

It is sad, indeed, to think we do not keep want from our ministers' door. It argues badly for our living-grace. In order for him to do effectual work he ought to have no care for worldly things, and we are somewhat to blame if we allow him to feel them. But a great many, tho very best members of the church are poor, and we must be honest enough to say that, although we have always tried to pay our preacher, we have sometimes looked again and again at the bills, and, turning them over, thought of the comfort they would procure. "That was a cheerful giver," you say. True enough; but we felt, when we did part with it, that God accepted the self-denial. Now don't you see that we need a minister with a strong abiding faith, to teach us that the Lord will provide for us too? Do you think we would have to do ourselves to pay our minister if we had this faith? Why, no; we would feel that we were making the very best investment of our money.

If a minister will keep his faith bright, and leave the rest to the Savior, it will all be well in the end. When we review the lives of the founders of Methodism we feel that though neither shepherd nor flock should complain. We are so prone to grumble, though. The fact is, I greatly fear that many of us who profess to love the Savior don't have the right kind of love for him.

Martin Ruter, when far out in the wilds of Texas, away from all his loved ones, says: "Though I find it necessary to dispense with most of the comforts and luxuries of life, yet how glorious the privilege of doing good among the destitute!"

Rev. Valentino Cook was once preaching, and had occasion to refer to the great apostolic promise: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end." He said he was once traveling. It was Saturday evening, and he began to wonder how he would spend the night and coming Sabbath, as he had been repulsed several times. After riding some time he saw a house, and, going up to it, asked in a subdued voice if he could stay all night. "Yes," said the lady who came to the door, "and to-morrow too. You are the very man I saw in my dreams last night."

Bishop McKendree was once traveling. He had been on a long tour, and was within one day's journey of his headquarters, where he had some money. His tavern-bill took exactly the amount of money he had. On leaving the tavern he found his horse had lost a shoe, and would not be able to make the journey unless it was replaced. He was beginning to be troubled, as he hadn't a cent, when the snow began falling, and soon formed a nice soft carpet, which was much better than a shoe would have been.

The Rev. B. M. Drake, in giving an account of the trials, etc., of John Lane, gives this little account: He was on his way to his field of labor, but his means became exhausted. He stopped with a lady, but could scarcely sleep any, because he had not acknowledged his poverty before partaking of her hospitality. The next morning, before he had time to ask for his bill, she slipped $20 in his hand. He adds: "Were all similar cases related, that have happened to members of the Mississippi Conference, they would fill a volume. That minister who cannot trust the Savior is surely very unbelieving."

With all these examples before us we have nothing to do but believe and practice the Bible, if we would see Christianity making more rapid strides. Oh! if pastor and people would exercise more faith, how much better and happier we would be.

A good, finished scandal, fully armed and equipped, such as circulate in the world, is rarely the production of a single individual, even of a single coterie. It sees the light in one; is rocked and nurtured by another; is petted, developed, and attains its growth in a third, and receives its finishing touch only after passing through a multitude of hands.

BROKEN WINGS.

...ing our wings in our blindness
...ainst the hard bars of the world!
...e love, in its infinite kindness,
Away from us recklessly hurled!

...ing our wings—who will save them
...ing broken and soiled and torn?
...e broken and soiled—who will have them?
...all we wish we had never been born?

...for our wings! Is it sleeping,
The love once so dear and so sweet?
...return shall we have for our weeping?
Will the balm be laid at our feet?

...ar, the love is there—'tis not fleeting—
'Tis a balm for all earthly things,
...t not for the weary bealing
...hearts, nor for broken wings.

...e Hand alone can heal them,
...His whom the gospel slugs;
...word from Him can anneal them,
...in Him are no broken wings.

FATHER HYACINTHE

AND THE ITALIAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

TRANSLATED FROM LA CAPITALE, ROME.

Never before have we witnessed such excitement. We made our way half an hour before the time to the hall of the Argentina, and it was only by a miracle that we were able to effect an entrance. The immense hall was already filled to overflowing, and a crowd of people, including ladies of the first distinction and the very elite of society, thronged the entrance, the corridors, the staircases, even to suffocation. We got in with Father Hyacinthe bimself, also unable either to advance or retreat. It was killing work, yet nobody, not even the ladies, uttered a complaint. The spectacle was truly imposing, and the more remarkable as being truly natural, spontaneous, and without a shade of artifice. Never have we seen any people manifest so great an interest in religious questions. The Romans feel that here lies the weakness of their enemies—that it is necessary to strike them at this point. Nor are they mistaken, when they make the gospel and the doctrines of Christ their rallying point. It is with these that we shall overthrow the papacy.

* * * After the speech of Mr. Bruce, (the Bible Society's agent for Italy,) the president gave the word to Father Hyacinthe, at which announcement the assembly broke out into a burst of loud and rapturous applause. Father Hyacinthe, dressed almost en bourgeois, presented himself to the assembly. He is a man of middle height, of open and sympathetic countenance, and resembling the portrait published a few days ago in the Illustrated Gazette of Rome. He was obliged to wait for the applause to cease, but it only increased. When at length silence was obtained, Father Hyacinthe spoke in French, in sonorous, easy, eloquent, passionate accents:

"It is but a very few days since Pio Nono made himself the initiator of a true religious progress, in permitting a public religious disputation here in Rome, where hitherto beliefs have been imposed, but not discussed. He blessed a discussion between Catholics and Evangelicals, who separated grasping each other mutually by the hand. This fact will remain—it will bear fruit in the future. This fact is for me an encouragement to accept the invitation of the Bible Society. I could not take part in it, nor subscribe to its programme, but I was touched by these brothers in Christ and the gospel. (Vehement applause.) They invited me as a Catholic priest, and I came as a Catholic.

"Before entering on argument, I wish to tell you my intimate thought, addressing myself to my co-religionists, and recognizing the beauty of the Italian translation of the Bible made by Bishop Diodati, without lessening my esteem for that made by Martini, Bishop of Florence. It was Pope Pius the Ninth who invited him to make it. That pontiff lamented the ignorance of Holy Scripture which reigned at that time among Catholics. I recommend the translation made by Martini, but at the same time I desire that there should be published a translation in Latin, a better translation, which shall meet the requirements of language and of science.

"Here we are now all united together in Rome, in this city which in other times would have divided us. The Bible, that holy book, reunites us. It condemns us all. We are not here this evening to discuss but to hear the lessons of the Bible; it says to all, You are my sons, but fallen, impotent sons; the Bible will liberate us, will bring us out of division. We shall return powerful when we are raised up again. (Vehement applause.) We are all of us more or less fallen. When we bring ourselves to consider with impartiality the sins of each church, we recognize as the dominant sign that all the churches have fallen from the charity of the gospel. We have not attained sufficiently to this fountain-head. We have need of two things—the light of the word of God, and the holiness of the body of Christ.

"In the church of the first ages, around the altar to which came the virgins and martyrs, there were two compartments, one of which was dedicated to the Bible. In this city of Rome there were seen the patrician ladies, the descendants of the Fabii, sitting at the feet of the Jeromes to hear the word of God, and repairing to the deserts of Palestine that they might listen to it with more advantage. The Bible was not the book of the priest alone; it was the book of the woman, of the family. (Vehement applause.) Let us return to the Bible; there we shall find the reform of our souls. In it alone is found the living word; in it alone is found the gold passed a hundred times through the furnace. Let it be read in our families, let it be brought into contact with the conscience. On this contact depends the regeneration of religious society, and of civil and political society. Political questions are intimately connected with religion. I applauded when it was said that whole nations owed their prosperity to the Bible. Yes, in England there is something greater than the great charter; it is the Bible. (Applause.)

"I am a friend of Italy. (Applause.) I am not her courtier, but I love Italy; I have learnt to love her from the works of Balbo, of Resmini, of Gioberti, who all say that it is needful to come to Rome with a religious mind. If we bring with us only skepticism and political expedients, in it we shall find a tomb; it would be like raising on a gigantic pedestal an edifice of dwarfs. Jesus Christ had brought into the world unity, because he brought into it charity; he desired that man should be united, even as he said, I and my Father are one. Christians, instead of that, are divided. Leibnitz said that there are not in the world so much as two drops of water which are perfectly equal, and that it is impossible that two men should have the same manner of viewing those two drops of water. Truth is found through all. Let us therefore preserve our liberty of appreciation. (Query, right of private judgment?) Let us preserve the same breadth, but do not let us be divided in faith, in love, in charity. The pagan world was less divided; Catholics and Protestants have shed their blood on battle-fields—on scaffolds. Let us seek to be united in liberty, in charity. Who desires to be the first, let him be the servant. Bossuet has said that the greatest heresy is that of domination. (Applause.) While we are disunited, Islamism makes great progress in Africa. It is Mohammed who gains proselytes. Let us be united to resist barbarism.

"At this point Father Hyacinthe passed in review the criticisms made on the Bible. It was said to be a local book, of a small Semitic people inhabiting a country of twenty leagues, and that this book does not say the least word respecting morality. God himself makes choice of the vessels in which to place his treasures, and in the Bible he has placed three: himself, the promise of redemption, and Christ. There was an abyss between God and man, and the Christ has filled it up with his blood; he surmounted the distance which separated them. (Applause.)

"We have all the same origin; the Bible invites us to union; the day will come in which there will no more be Protestants; there will only be true Catholics, true Christians.

"I believe in it, because it is impossible that the word of God should fail. I swear it by that word; the abysses shall be filled up, the mountains shall be destroyed and reduced to dust, and we shall go up together to that Jerusalem, whatever be that mystical city of promise, and with the Bible in our hand, proclaiming the word of God, we shall enter into the city of truth." (Loud, continuous and enthusiastic applause.")—New York Observer.

THE TAJ.

A Monument of Oriental Splendor—The Most Costly and Exquisite Mausoleum in the World.

But all that we had seen in the forts of Akbar and the palace of Shah Jehan was eclipsed by another structure, the most sublime and beautiful that now stands upon the face of the earth. This, I believe, is the unqualified testimony of every one who has seen the Taj.

About a mile to the south of the fort at Agra, upon the right bank of the River Jumna, lies a beautiful park, about a quarter of a mile square, planted with the choicest trees and shrubs and flowers of the East. More than eighty fountains, scattered along the avenues of this park, throw their jets into the air, which sparkles with the falling drops as with a shower of diamonds.

It is surrounded by a high wall, and guarded by a magnificent gateway, a building fifty or sixty feet in height, which, with any other surroundings, would be studied and admired for its architectural grandeur, and the beauty of its carving and mosaic ornamentation. No one would imagine it to be simply the portal to greater beauty and grandeur, but such it is.

We enter beneath this majestic arch and find ourselves within the park. A broad avenue, skirted with lofty cypresses, acacias and other Oriental trees, and tanks of aquatic plants and jets d'eau reveal, at its extremity, an object which at once rivets the eye, and steals over the heart like a delicious strain of music, or like the melody of sublime poetry. It is the Taj, the peerless Taj, the mausoleum erected by the Emperor Shah Jehan as the tomb of his favorite begum, Noor Mahal, in which they now sleep side by side. She died before him, and, as she felt her life ebbing away, she sent for the Emperor, and told him she had only two requests to make: First, that he would not take another wife; and second, that he would build for her the tomb he had promised, to perpetuate her memory.

Shah Jehan, who was devotedly attached to her, at once set about complying with her last request. The tomb was commenced immediately, and, according to Tavernier, who saw its first and last stones laid, it was twenty-two years in building, with twenty thousand men constantly occupied upon it. It cost, in actual expense, in addition to the forced labor of the men, more than three hundred lacs of rupees, or about fifteen millions of dollars. Such a building, including the cost of materials, could scarcely be erected by paid labor at the present time, even in India, for fifty million dollars.

As this building is acknowledged by every traveler to be unrivaled, and the sight of it declared by many to be worth a journey around the world, I will give you a more minute description of its situation and its prominent features.

At the extremity of the beautiful park or Oriental garden of which I have spoken, on the river side rises a terrace of sandstone twenty feet in height and a thousand feet broad. The walls of the terrace on all sides are of hewn stone, and its surface is paved with the same material.

On the lofty terrace of sandstone rises another terrace of pure white marble, its walls of cut stone laid as regularly as the courses of a marble building. This terrace is three hundred feet square.

In the center of this marble terrace, equidistant from the four lofty and graceful minarets, stands the building which for more than two centuries has been the admiration of every eye that in all that period has rested on it. It is an octagon, or it might perhaps be more correctly described as a square, with each of the four corners slightly cut off, and is crowned with a high, swelling dome, having the gracefulness of outline which seems to have been an inspiration in the Mohammedan and Oriental styles of architecture. The building is one hundred and fifty feet in diameter; the crescent upon the summit of the dome nearly two hundred feet above the pavement. The structure is built from foundation to top of stone of the purest marble, so perfect in its preservation, and so unspotted in its whiteness, that it looks as if it might have been erected only yesterday. Standing upon its marble pedestal, it vies in purity with the clouds that are floating by. A cupola of the same material rests upon the roof on each side of the dome. The exterior of the building is carved in graceful designs, the front elaborately wrought, but in such perfect taste as to fill the eye as a picture in colors. No description will convey to the mind any idea of the engraving on the arched doorway. It is elaborate, but not florid, giving to the solid marble almost the lightness of a cloud. Indeed, the whole building, as you look upon it, seems to float in the air like an autumn cloud.

Let us enter—but breathe softly and tread gently as you step within. It is the sleeping chamber of Noor Mahal, the cherished wife of the Mogul Emperor, Shah Jehan; and here, beneath this magnificent dome, they lie side by side, each in a couch of almost transparent marble, set with rich precious stones, and wrought exquisitely in tracery of vine and flowers. Nowhere else has human dust been laid away to slumber in such superb repose, so beautiful, so silent, so sacred, so sublime. In such perfect, exquisite taste is everything within, as well as without, that it is more like a creation than the work of man. The whole interior, which is lighted only from the lofty doorway, is open from wall to wall, and from the pavement to the summit of the dome; with the exception of a high marble screen standing about twenty or thirty feet from the outer wall, and extending entirely around the building. This is cut in open tracery, so as to resemble a curtain of lace rather than a screen of solid marble. One who has seen the veiled statue of a master artist can appreciate the deception, if deception it can be called where none was intended.

The sarcophagi containing the remains of the Empress and of her faithful lover, the Mogul Emperor, lie in the crypt below, which is reached by a marble stairway. That of the former has inscribed upon it, in the graceful Arabic characters, "Ranoo Begum, the Ornament of the Palace," with the date of her death, 1631. The other has inwrought the name of the Emperor, with the date of his death, 1666. To this day they are covered with fresh flowers, strewed by faithful hands, in recognition of the fidelity which reared the structure.

Upon the main floor, directly over these marble slabs, and under the canopy of the open dome, stand the cenotaphs, designed simply as the representatives of those below, but carved in tracery and set with gems in no ostentatious or gaudy style, but so beautifully and tastefully that one lingers around them as he stands before some masterpiece of art, never satisfied with looking. Upon the cenotaph of the Queen, amid wreaths of flowers worked in gemmed mosaic, are passages from the Koran, in Arabic, one of which reads: "Defend us from the tribe of unbelievers."

In the same devotion to his wife, Shah Jehan caused the Koran to be inscribed upon the interior of the Taj, in mosaic of precious stones, jasper, lapis, lazuli, heliotrope, chalcedony, cornelian, etc. The whole of the Koran is said to be thus inwrought, and yet it has the appearance of a light and graceful vine running over the walls. With the sentences of the Koran, thus traced upon the marble in such costly material, are interspersed fruits and flowers and running vines, all of precious stones inlaid, designed to represent one of the bowers of paradise, in which the Emperor had laid the light of his life, to sleep her last sleep.

While we were standing beneath that lofty dome, the silence of the tomb reigning even over its exquisite beauty and grandeur, voices at my side commenced singing.

The singing ceased; but far up in that snow-white vault, as if among the fleecy clouds of heaven, an angel band caught up the strain, not as an ordinary echo of reflected sound, but as if prolonging the notes. It continued as long as the original song, and at length gradually died away, only as the song of angels would cease to be heard when they enter the portals.—Dr. Prime's Sketches of Travel.

WHAT MAKES A PREACHER?

"It takes three things to make a preacher," said a veteran minister of the gospel: "arrangement, natural delivery and a preaching spirit." He had never been through a college nor a theological seminary. But he was well learned in the ways of men, and a most successful pastor for thirty years in one town. Let this definition of preaching be considered, in its parts.

Arrangement.—A great part of the power of a sermon depends on the arrangement. Some men so dispose of their arguments, illustrations and reflections as to leave the hearer in confusion of ideas. It is all point or no point, as the sailors say, with the subject matter of discourse. Or it is like an army, throwing rockets, exploding bombs and firing shots, every man fighting on his own hook, instead of a well-marshaled host making every gun tell on the enemy. It is not necessary to announce the plan of discourse, but an underlying plan must be obvious, or else it will all pass off as a mere show of "glittering generalities."

Natural Delivery.—It is surprising how unnatural most preachers become in their delivery. Garrick was once asked what was the proper manner of delivery for the pulpit. His reply was: "That of earnest conversation." Bunyan describes the preacher: "He stood as if pleading with men." Yet too many preachers contract a habit of declamation, or imitation of the defects of others. To be perfectly natural in delivery, after going through all the schools, is no easy matter. Booth, the actor, said he had been trying thirty years to repeat properly the Lord's prayer. And when repeating it, on one occasion, by request, he made it most impressive. To have every tone natural and unaffected, to have every gesture easy and graceful, is not a small matter.

A Preaching Spirit.—This is the life of discourse and of delivery. It is what the French divines call unction—the unction of the Spirit. The animal spirits, the moral feelings, the intellectual powers, the imagination, all the mental and physical forces of the preacher are swayed and controlled by this preaching spirit.

Many books have I read, many professors and preachers have I heard, but none nor all have given me so clear an idea of the grand elements of preaching as this simple definition: arrangement, natural delivery and a preaching spirit.—S. S. H., in Interior.

There are many things which claim a portion of our time, thrusting themselves upon us. Should we not watch with jealous care these inroads, and allow nothing to come between us and our God?—Congregationalist.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Two Anglican churches are projected in Rome—one for the English congregation, one for the American.

A native Christian near Allahabad, India, made over his farm to his son, loaded a camel with Christian books, and at his own charge started on a mission in the desert Rajpotan, among a people who had never heard the name of Christ.

The Old Hatred Revived.—There seems to be a new and deliberate outbreak of malicious cruelty against the Jews of Bessarabian Roumania. Nearly every village has been the scene of frightful abuse, the poor men and women being insulted, beaten and plundered by ruffians, and their synagogues devastated and defiled.

Bishop Gobat, of Jerusalem, opened the first Christian school in that city with nine children. This has since grown to five schools, with more than four hundred children. "Altogether we have," he says, "twenty-five Protestant schools in Palestine, attended by between nine hundred and one thousand children," of which eleven schools, including an orphanage with sixty beneficiaries, are at his charge.

The committee of the Irish Episcopal Church, who have in hand the revision of the liturgy, have cut out of the Ordinal the solemn words, "Receive the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a priest," etc., and this against the unanimous opposition of the Bishops. The Church Times says that if this action "should be finally adopted, the Church of England will, of course, regard her erring sister as having made shipwreck of the faith, and it will become necessary to organize missions for the conversion of the backsliders."

English Methodism mourns the death of John Robinson Kay, Esq., one of its most intelligent, generous and earnest supporters. He was the leading promoter of education among the Wesleyans, and held official connection with it as lay treasurer, during many years and to the end of his life. He was a principal promoter, at the beginning, of the London Quarterly Review, was an early proprietor of the Methodist Recorder, and was ever ready with his means and influence to contribute toward the spread of knowledge among the people.

Free Preaching in London.—A committee, of which Earl Shaftesbury is president, for promoting special services in theaters and public halls, report that during the past winter 231 services were held, attended by about 158,000 persons; and that from the commencement of the effort they have held 1,885 services, attended by 2,386,000 persons. Their object is to attempt to check the great increase of infidelity among the people by free, popular meetings, in light, comfortable rooms, with good singing, and plain, sensible, earnest gospel preaching. They are encouraged at the beneficial results.

The American Board have appointed a third man to Spain, the Rev. M. Alexy. He has already resided in Spain, and has studied at the Union Seminary. The Rev. W. C. Pond, of San Francisco, has been commissioned to explore in the northwest of Mexico for the best place to establish a mission in that quarter. It is hoped to begin labor in northeastern Mexico in a few months. Rev. Drs. Riggs and Wood have been appointed a committee on Greek evangelization, with a view to improving any opportunities of labor within the bounds of the Greek Church. A commissioner has been appointed to visit France, northern and western Austria, and Italy, and to report on the best points to establish missions in those countries, and upon the best methods of labor.

The American Home Missionary Society closed its financial year March 31. Its receipts have been $294,563, or $48,000 more than those of the preceding year, and $11,000 more than those of any previous year. The executive committee are planning for the present year a more rapid advance along the whole line. Their scouts were in the railroad train that broke the recent snow-blockade between the Mississippi and the Red river of the North. They are about to station a large re-enforcement at the advance posts in western Iowa and Nebraska. They are now organizing a raid into the mountains of Colorado. They have ordered a thorough reconnoissance of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, and hope soon to strengthen those distant outposts. They will be ready to spend that $500,000 about which the National Council resolved as soon as they get it. The danger is that they will spend it before they get it.

A Ship's Crew Converted.—A letter from Captain F. C. Duncan, of the ship Kate Davenport, dated at Bombay, February 11, gives an account of a remarkable revival on his ship, in which the mate, the carpenter, the cook and ten of the sailors were converted. It commenced with the conversion of the carpenter, through the instrumentality of the second mate, who is a member of the Mariners' Church, in Catherine street, New York. The captain says: "Nearly all our crew have signed the pledge, and at that prayer meeting to which I alluded, every person in the cabin expressed the purpose to serve God and lead Christian lives. I never saw a more impressive sight. There was I leading a meeting, where strong men, hardened sailors and mates were crying like children. The mate and second mate offered up prayers, while I talked and read the Bible. The discipline of the ship remained intact. The officers are as exacting as ever, and the men now work cheerfully and willingly. It is splendid to see how smoothly everything goes on. Thank the American Seamen's Friend Society for me for their libraries and tracts, which have done more good than I can tell."

Abbe Michaud has just published two books, the first showing up the self-stultification of French bishops, who a few years since opposed infallibility and ultramontanism, but have now surrendered; the second appealing to the Alt Catholics of France to organize. For this purpose he proposes the formation of "committees of Alt Catholics and members of the Orthodox Church;" of "Alt Catholics and Anglicans;" of "Alt Catholics and Protestants of all other communions;" and, finally, when possible, and "when Romanists will consent to accept as a basis of union the Catholicism of the eight first centuries," the formation of a fourth committee, composed of these latter and of Alt Catholics. The object of these associations in common is to be to "demonstrate scientifically, by authentic historical documents, what were the doctrine, discipline and forms of worship admitted in the Catholic Church during the eight first centuries of its existence." The Abbe Guettee, who belongs to the Greek Church, encourages Michaud. The Abbe Guettee further suggests the formation of a "general committee," for the study and publication of "all authentic doctrinal works of the five first centuries of the church," out of which to form a general and authoritative "Doctrinal Exposition." "It would be very desirable," the Abbe Guettee adds, "that in such a work, to such men as Dr. Dollinger and his learned coadjutors, should be joined Anglican divines."

Disciples of Christ.—A correspondent, a member of this body, known to many as Campbellites, sends us the following communication: This body of people now claim an aggregate membership of 700,000 communicants. They make the plea of a complete restoration of primitive Christianity. They make the Bible their exclusive rule of faith and practice, excluding all other ecclesiastical platforms which are made tests of union and communion, and claiming pure apostolic teaching as the only scriptural test. In this sense they regard themselves as evangelical, and propose co-operation with all men who will strictly pursue apostolic precept and example. Their distinctive plea for nearly fifty years has been the union of the Lord's people upon the basis of the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible. Their standing motto is: "Where the Bible speaks, we speak; where the Bible is silent, we are silent." The Disciples of Christ are most numerous in the Middle States, numbering in Ohio 300,000, in Indiana 80,000, in Illinois 60,000, and in Kentucky 90,000, and in other States in less proportion. They have churches in Canada, Jamaica, California, Oregon, England and Australia. They have 1,000 regularly ordained ministers of the gospel. Their leading periodicals are the American Christian Review, the Christian Standard, and the Christian Quarterly, Cincinnati; the Apostolic Times, Lexington, Kentucky; the Christian, Kansas City, Missouri; the Gospel Echo, Macomb, Illinois. In all about twenty-five weeklies and monthlies devoted to the interests of the church, the Sunday school, and domestic government. Besides which they patronize many religious journals outside of their own denominational ranks. They claim at least twenty educational institutions, the principal ones of which are: Bethany College, West Virginia; Kentucky University, and Hocker Female College, Lexington, Kentucky; Ghent College, and Eminence College, Kentucky; Hiram College, Ohio; Northwest Christian University, Indiana; Eureka College and Abingdon College, Illinois; Canton University, and Christian College, Missouri; Oskaloosa College, Iowa. Their papers show an aggregate increase of 1,200 converts every month.—New York Observer.

Mistrust the man who finds everything good, the man who finds everything evil, and still more the man who is indifferent to everything.

The work that has been done by dull and plodding people in this world can never be estimated.

OUR CHILDREN.

"A Mother" writes to us as follows:

I would ask your opinion on the subject of prayer.

A child is trained by earnest Christian parents—taught that God hears its prayers, and that it must seek pardon for any sin committed. The child grows up with the belief that God hears his prayers, feels relief from the stings of conscience after appealing to him for forgiveness. When he comes to maturer years he desires to become a child of God. He begins to seek the Lord. Now, of what avail are the prayers offered during all these years? Has God indeed heard his prayers all the time, and has he to repent merely for the sins just committed, for which he has not sought forgiveness, or for all his past misdeeds? If for all, then what of this doctrine we are teaching our children, making them believe that the Lord hears, when he does not? And if only for the last committed, then wherein does he differ from a Christian? I have two "bright buds of divinity" to train up in the right way, and am really anxious to have light on the subject.

In answering the inquiries of our correspondent, it is perhaps needful to refer to the condition of children before they are capable of prayer. Speaking of the period of infancy, Christ declares that: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." They are the subjects of the spiritual kingdom on earth, and until by actual sin they bring personal condemnation upon themselves, they remain heirs of the kingdom of eternal glory. So says Richard Watson on the passage. Dr. Wilbur Fisk, on Romans v, 18, says: "Guilt is not imputed until, by a voluntary rejection of the gospel, man makes the depravity of his nature the object of his own choice. Hence, although abstractly considered, this depravity is destructive to the possessors, yet through the grace of the gospel all are born free from condemnation." Infants, doubtless, stand in a spiritual relation to Christ; they are in a state of justification as not being condemned, and we think must be the subjects also of such spiritual operations as fit them for the kingdom of heaven.

Mr. Watson draws a distinction between those who live and those who die in infancy, as to the extent of the sanctifying process. In speaking of the connection of children with the institutions of the church, he says:

Farther, if those who are to live come under the grace of the covenant, to prepare them to receive the grace of the covenant, that so these truths may have—what otherwise they would not have—a saving tendency, then is there a principle of grace, a moral preparatory change, given independently of their seeking it; as to those who die, this principle of grace doubtless ripens into that entire fitness for a better world which, removing the original stain, qualifies them for heaven. I do not think that children who live are properly regenerated in infancy. I have said that they have a principle of grace, designed to lead to a full scriptural regeneration in riper years. But as to those who die, doubtless God cuts short his work, as he does in those adults whom he calls away almost immediately on their conversion to himself.

We do not believe that the gracious operations of the Holy Spirit in the infant are affected in any way by baptism, nor does it seem probable that the circumstance of living or dying should make any difference. All alike are free from condemnation, and all are subject to the same degree of spiritual influences. Whatever the moral preparatory change is, it is wrought upon all, fitting them for life or death, for the heavenly glory or the trials of earthly probation.

The child's earliest consciousness is awakened in this condition free from condemnation, and under the operations of "a principle of grace." The Holy Spirit is there to meet and shape the first unfoldings of intelligence and moral sensibility. Here the child enters upon accountability in a degree accordant with his strength and intelligence, and at this point he begins to pray. A subject of the kingdom of grace when he reaches the possibility of prayer, we see no reason why he may not continue therein. As soon as the child is capable of apprehending Christ by faith, and of personally recognizing his covenant relation to God, he enters upon a higher, because a conscious religious life, and realizes the comfort and power of regenerating grace. In most instances children go astray, but their sin is a departure from God, and a voluntary rejection of the grace which operates upon their hearts, and which meets them at the first dawn of conscious responsibility. Their conversion later in life differs from that of the backslider in this: that they may never have consciously accepted of Christ, nor knowingly nor so fully realized the transforming power of the Holy Spirit.

The religion of childhood may be continued into adult age, and the only conversion required may be such as grows out of a clearer conception of inward depravity and sin, and the distinct and personal acceptance of Christ. A justified child forfeits the favor of God by actual sin, and, as in the case of any believer who sins, justification may be reversed. Child or adult, if he falls and continues in sin, we suppose that all the sins of his life will meet him in the judgment. The child's prayers did avail, God pardoned his sins, and blessed him with a comfortable sense of forgiveness; and if, after wandering long and far, he returns to the Savior, his conversion is in fact a restoration to the love and favor he once enjoyed. The child may be a Christian, and if so the question, "Wherein does he differ from a Christian?" amounts to only this: Wherein does a child Christian differ from an adult believer? We do not say that the child is a Christian. If, upon the threshold of conscious accountability, he yields to the operations of the Holy Spirit, receives Christ by faith, and enters into solemn covenant with God, he is a Christian. Before this period, as an infant, he was of the kingdom—an heir of heaven. This state is forfeited or confirmed, as he shall choose to accept or reject the provided redemption.

The difficulty of our correspondent seems to be this: If the religion of early childhood is not all a sham, with its sincere repentance, prayers and felt forgiveness, what is it but a regenerated state? And if a regenerated state, what does the soul in mature years do in seeking the Lord, and in striving to become a child of God, but that which any backslider does when he is reclaimed? The child may have been under strong religious impressions and convictions, without ever having yielded himself to Christ and the Holy Spirit. The principles of grace were there, but they did not lead to full and scriptural regeneration. In maturer years that child seeks the Lord as he had never known him, and desires to become a child of God as he has never been during the period of accountability. On the other hand, here is a youth who in childhood did embrace the Savior, did feel the forgiveness of sins, and exhibited many of the fruits of the Spirit. He has subsequently lapsed into sin and indifference, and his conversion is in reality a restoration to a state of grace which he once enjoyed.

The thing to be sought and insisted upon is conversion—a change of heart—a change that may be known and felt by the child or youth. Our views of the moral and spiritual state of infancy may be helpful in training and instructing the young, and in developing spiritual experience and duty to their unfolding consciousness; but there must be a voluntary acceptance of Christ, a solemn recognition of the Christian covenant, and the clear and powerful experience of the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit. The degree of Christianhood cannot be conferred in course by church machinery, as colleges confer degrees upon their students. Neither can the most careful parental training effect the result. At every step the Holy Spirit must be invoked, and he must change and renew the heart. Prayer, wisdom, watchfulness, and reliance upon God are all demanded, that the mother may bring her "bright buds of divinity" to the full-blown flowers of grace, and to the immortal fruitage of the skies.

MAY.

Our press is striking off this number of the Advocate on May-day. How the month got its name is uncertain. Perhaps from Maia, the mother of Mercury. With the Romans it was a festival month, and especially sacred to Apollo. The ancient festival, in honor of Flora, terminated on the second day of this month. From the times of Chaucer, English poetry has woven its finest garlands for this season. In the good old times of "Merrie England" the people and lords and ladies went a Maying, and there was no end of May poles, warlike shows and rural recreations. However it is farther north, we are here in the midst of bloom and fragrance. The wealth of flowers surpasses description, and the birds are in full song, making the mornings vocal with their melody.

The affluence of the pleasing and beautiful is such as to inspire all hearts with cheerfulness and gratitude. The sweet south, with perfumed breath, tempers the air with its gentle breezes, and the solar rays are ripening the luscious berries, and alluring the latest buds of trees and shrubs into full leaf. The husbandman's hopes are springing forth in the tender plants which already begin to check the fields and to crown the furrows with lines of green. With us the blossoms of the orchard have fulfilled their mission of the beautiful, and have given place to the young fruit. The earliest blooms are gone, and the harbingers of summer are pushing forward to their juicy maturity.

May is the heart of spring, and spring is the youth of the year. It is the season which, of all others, has most of heaven in it, and is the favorite type of "the land that is very far off." The ideal of a perpetual spring, however approached by tropical climes, is only to be realized in heaven. Of such Mays as we have here Milton sings:

Now the bright morning star, day's harbinger,
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flowery May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose.
Hail, bounteous May! that dost inspire
Mirth and youth and warm desire;
Woods and groves are of thy dressing;
Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing!
Thus we salute thee with our earthly song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long.

The Protracted Meeting which has been in progress at the Carondelet Street church, of this city, for several weeks is still kept up. The noonday prayer meeting and the night services are well attended. Besides a considerable number of adult conversions, the work among the children has been very encouraging. Numbers are still seeking salvation. At the Quarterly Conference, on Monday, Bro. Tudor reported forty additions to the church this year.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY.

LETTER FROM BISHOP PIERCE.

Mr. Editor: On reaching home I found Bishop McTyeire's "remarks" on my second letter. I have not time to reply in order to his points, and would not if I had. The good Bishop is commonly terse—incisive in his style—but in dealing with me he has become very diffuse. This change, I suppose, is strategic—a diversion, a "divide-and-conquer" policy. I shall not conform to his tactics. This is not a personal controversy. I am not contending with my good brother for victory, but opposing what I think a mischievous, hurtful policy. If I were alone, I should stand firmly to the position I have taken, but I am thankful to say that I have received letters from leading men in well-nigh all the Conferences sustaining my views, and assuring me of the hearty sympathy and support of preachers and people. A few scholarly men, and some others, who aspire to be considered patrons of learning, and of what is called a higher civilization, (a wretched misnomer,) by bewailing the low grade of education among the Methodists—the ignorance and inefficiency of our ministry, are themselves making concessions to our enemies of an inferiority which I never admitted. I do not believe that we are a whit behind the best, except in pompous pretensions. The Episcopalians, I know, claim to have all the gentility of the land, and bribe silly people with the complacent fancy that in joining the church they are brought into society. All sensible people understand that.

The Presbyterians claim an educated ministry, and they have always been the friends of learning. But they have not all the learning. Take any State you please, and, man for man, the Methodist ministry will compare favorably in scholarship and usefulness. I know the Methodists and the Baptists are regarded by "certain" as a plebeian set, but to these common people the whole country is largely indebted for the gospel. The Episcopal sect is too delicate for country fare. It must dwell in town. The Presbyterian training is too slow and stiff to meet the urgent and diversified calls of a promiscuous population. The Methodists and the Baptists have a ministry right out from the people—understanding their thoughts, feelings and language; and however despised and berated, they are the instruments which God has honored for the evangelization of the people. Saying no more of our Baptist brethren—they can defend themselves—the secret of our strength and progress, of popular approval and almost universal acceptance under God, has been our mode of inducting men into the ministry. Let God call, the church indorse, the Conference receive, and the Bishop send forth—urging them to read, study, pray, preach, work; and let these men be faithful, and they will be an honor to their race and a blessing to the world. Through more than a century they have been, they now are, and they will yet be, if not spoiled by artificial, arbitrary, stereotyped "training." Training! by "tutors, lectures and library," the professor himself, perhaps, never led a class, or traveled a circuit, or conducted a revival, and knows as little of the details of an itinerant's life and duty as those book men who, in counsel with their own peculiar tastes and habitudes, advise my colleague of the wants of the church! Such training will mar, but never make, a preacher. The simple agitation of this question—the fact that some have regarded this fossil institution as possible among us, and a few as even desirable—and the coincident stress laid upon ministerial education, have already wrought harm among us, by restraining young men from applying for admission into the Conferences. Go on with this theological training idea, and without any express statute to bar their entrance into the ministry, all, well-nigh, who cannot avail themselves of this kind of preparation will smother their convictions, and thus imperil their souls and bereave the church. The fancy of a few—thank God, they are a very few—brethren for the effete, dilatory, stagnating schemes of other churches, in preference to our own—fresh, prompt, always available mode—is amazing. Is the Episcopal ministry equal to ours in talent, in force, in results? Is the Presbyterian ministry, conceding all their excellencies, (and I have the highest respect for them,) doing more good than we? Do we need any better preachers than McTyeire, and Haygood, and Myers, and Reid, and Andrews, and Winfield, and Rivers? "And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of" Tudor, and Mathews, and Linn, and Munsey, and Key, and Potter, and Harrison, and Duncan, and Grandberry, and a host of others who are serving their generation, by the will of God, honorably and usefully. Better preachers than these are scarce in any communion. The best preachers I ever heard had never been to college at all—hardly to school. What do brethren want? Metaphysics, logic, rhetoric, eloquence, evangelical power? O, no; we have all these. What then? Hear it, ye Methodists, and stand amazed! We want "critics" for Bible revision! I thank God the Methodist Episcopal Church South is not represented in a work—in my judgment little short of sacrilege—a tampering with the text of our good old Saxon Bible.

Methodism does not occupy "an inferior place." She never did. If she will stick to her own ways, and quit aping and imitation, she never will. I, too, "claim for Methodism a mission to all classes." But I do not mean to cut her off from sympathy with the mass and multitude of mankind by a scholastic isolation of her ministry. I believe in gifts as well as grace, and would have every preacher to speak "justly, readily, clearly," but to declare the same simple gospel to the rich and the poor, the wise and the unwise. The preaching that is fixed up for the "cultivated and the refined" is very poor preaching. I have heard it ad nauseam. Solomon says, "Great men are not always wise," and my observation is that very scholarly men, deeply devoted to abstruse studies, are the poorest judges of fitness, and the least capable of adaptation. This training of a man for a special class—"a select few"—is a positive disqualification for the general work of the ministry. "I think," "it is my opinion," (excuse me, Bishop; I know this is not an "argument," and that you "cannot answer" it,) I do believe a soul is a soul, and as "all souls are mine, saith the Lord"—that, in the most important sense, is the best preaching which saves the most of them. Give me the evangelist and the revival, rather than the erudite brother who goes into the pulpit to reconcile Moses with modern science, instead of preaching repentance and faith, or goes so deep into geology as to show that Adam was not the first man—that the deluge was a little local affair—"not much of a shower"—and that the unity of the race is not a cardinal fact in Christian theology. "I do think" breaking hearts with the hammer of the word is better employment than splitting hairs with metaphysical acumen. "I do think" evangelical sermons better than critical lectures.

I say nothing about the University now, for Bishop McTyeire confesses that the "theological school is the head and front of the scheme." So I thought and intimated in my first letter. I am reproached for thrusting an "unseemly controversy" upon the church. Indeed! Why, brother, it was the convention, not I. The advocates of the great scheme for months had full swing of all the church papers. All went merrily—prosperously—till I, naughty fellow, threw myself "right across the track." Ah! Bishop, if the old, lumbering, rickety, worn-out train that you were guiding up to a station—not yet located—had run over and hushed me into silence, instead of being delayed on its journey, the event would not have been so "unseemly." Unseemly! There are some things in this history which do not look well. It does not look well for a self-called convention to legislate for the church—to assume the prerogatives of Annual Conferences, appoint "corporators," call for charters, and all to do—what the General Conference refused to have done. It does not look well for brethren to be so sensitive when an humble brother, said to be of "unimpeachable candor and consistency," plainly but kindly objects to their plans as not for the best.

"It is my opinion" that every dollar invested in a theological school will be a damage to Methodism. Had I a million I would not give a dime for such an object. That is plain. So I advise.

"I think" the Methodist ministry, just as it is, taken as a whole, is the best in the world; and the best, because it has not been manipulated and denaturalized by procrustean canons, and because it achieves on a larger scale than any other the great ends of gospel preaching.

"I think" the social status of Methodism is very fine; and although we do go into "rude settlements," and among "common people," we can and do keep company, without embarrassment, with the "cultivated and refined." God's house is a house of prayer for all people, and Christ's gospel is for every creature, and as Methodists we accept "this condition," and work according to this line of things. We have no castes, like the Hindoos, among our preachers or people, except here and there in some of our city congregations, and the little of it which has crept in, like the devil in paradise, is a curse and a snare.

1. Now let me say—I hope for the last time—I am not "unkind or thoughtless enough" to appeal to "prejudice or party feeling." Not I. I am writing right out of my heart.

2. I cannot "conscientiously help forward the work" of providing a theological school, and therefore I "feel obliged to hinder it," if I can fairly. I am against it—head and heart, tongue and pen—"now and forever, one and indivisible."

3. I pray most sincerely that the theological scheme may go down to the shades of oblivion, to keep company with the "resolution" which Dr. Garland looked for, but could not find.

G. F. Pierce.

Dr. J. Fennimore.—We were called on Saturday last to attend the funeral of our old and much-esteemed friend, Dr. Joshua Fennimore, who died in Jefferson, Texas, on the twentieth of April. Dr. Fennimore was a native of New Jersey, but had resided in Louisiana for many years, and in this city for fourteen years past. During his residence in New Orleans he was a member of the Felicity Street church, and took a deep interest in its welfare. He was an upright and good man, and a most exemplary, spiritual and intelligent Christian. We have rarely known a man of kindlier spirit, of more cheerful piety, or of more generous benevolence. His remains were laid by the side of those of a sainted wife, who died of yellow fever in 1867. His estimable daughters and other relatives have our deepest sympathies in their bereavement.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, president of Whitworth Female College, at Brookhaven, Mississippi, spent several days of the past week in the city. He reports his school as in a very flourishing condition, crowded with students, all in fine health, and the classes making satisfactory progress. President Johnson, besides being a host in himself, has a full corps of teachers of the accomplished and efficient kind. Whitworth is most eligibly located, and most completely furnished with all the requisites of a first-class school for young ladies.

On our second page will be found a well-written sketch of the life and death of Mrs. Mary E. Lindsay. We have known Sister Lindsay for many years, and fully indorse all that is said of her great excellence as a Christian lady. We tender our sympathies to the bereaved husband and other kindred.

PERIODICALS.

The Sunday Magazine for April has: The Vicar's Daughter; The Resurrection of the Dead; Naming and Leading the Sheep; John Bunyan; Premiums Paid to Experience, and other articles of merit. Published by J. B. Lippincott & Co.

The Sunday School Magazine and Visitors for May have been received. A grand supply of matter for teachers and scholars, and for all who can appreciate the very best things in the line of religious and Sunday school literature.

The April number of Good Words, among other excellent articles, contains: Spiritual Songs; The Man with Three Friends; On Pauperism, as Produced by Wealth; The Idiot Colony at Caterham, and Wanderings in Spain.

We are indebted to Thomas W. Conway, superintendent of public education of Louisiana, for a copy of his annual report to the General Assembly, for 1871. The volume is handsomely bound, and the name of our paper is in gold letters on the cover.

Arthur's Lady's Home Magazine and the Children's Hour for May are filled with delightful illustrations and pleasant reading matter. We can always recommend these publications of T. S. Arthur & Sons as the purest and best.

The Practical Planter for March and April has but just reached us. An excellent agricultural journal, published by Gift & Anderson, Memphis, Tennessee.

Among the agricultural periodicals for April we have received the American Agriculturist, Philips' Southern Farmer, and the Southern Field and Factory.

Appletons' Journal of April 20 is profusely illustrated, and a capital number every way.

Littell's Living Age of April 13 has a rich and varied table of contents.

Obituaries.

Died, at his home in Lauderdale county, Mississippi, April 4, 1872, Hon. JOHN GILES, aged seventy-five years.

Bro. Giles embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church some forty years ago. He was a man of stern and solid piety. He loved his church, his friends and his God. Bro. Giles had arrived at the ripe age of seventy-five years, and this long life, so far as we know, was unsullied by any action in any way derogatory to a man or a Christian. He was not in any sense a man of pretensions—simple, straightforward and firm where principle was concerned, yet kind and conciliatory. He was emphatically a man to be trusted. In the evil times he was beset on all sides, and, though sufferiag severely, still stood immovable. Bro. Giles leaves an aged wife and one daughter, for whose welfare was his greatest care. He also leaves some four or five sons, all grown. May his posterity in generations yet to come follow the ascended sire to the paradise of God. T. Y. ARMSTRONG.

SISTER LAVINA SUMMERS died at the residence of her brother, Thomas B. Cannon, in Sumpter county, Alabama, February 21, 1872, aged seventy-seven years. She was born in Abbeville district, South Carolina; left her native State early in life, and settled in Tuscaloosa county, Alabama; thence to Sumpter county at twenty-seven; was converted and joined the Methodist Church, of which she was an exemplary member to the hour of death, "rejoicing ever more" in the consciousness of the truth that her sins were pardoned, and her name written in the Lamb's Book of Life. Until weakened by age she was a constant attendant upon the preached word, and a lover of the prayer and class meetings, frequently walking five and six miles to be present on these occasions. The Master's call came suddenly, but found her watching. She died a few hours after her attack. She gave assurances to her family that all was well. Her last words were to her son: "Meet me in heaven." How inspiring the death of the righteous! May God give comfort to the bereaved family.

C. B. DUBOSE.

DIED, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Chase, in the parish of St. Mary, Louisiana, on the twenty-seventh of February, 1872, ISABEL NIXON BRUCE, relict of the late Col. S. Sanders, aged seventy-four years, one month and eleven days.

Mrs. Sanders was a native of Middlesex county, New Jersey, and came to Louisiana in 1809. Since then she has been a resident of St. Mary parish. She was married at Natchez, and united with the Methodist Church in 1830, and continued a consistent member until her death.

She leaves a large family of children and grandchildren, and numerous relatives and friends to mourn her loss. But she had more than filled her measure of "threescore years and ten," and but few have passed a life so replete with earnest usefulness and true devotion to the duties that devolve upon the wife and mother, and long will her precious memory be revered by those who knew and loved her best. When the feeble body, worn with the weight and care of many years, could no longer stay, the gentle spirit fled its weary "tenement of clay," to join her beloved companion in that "home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

A FRIEND.

MISS SALLIE ANN STAPLES was born in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, July 20, 1845, and was born to Jesus March 14, 1872. The subject of this notice was from her childhood possessed of her portion of the virtues and amiable qualities which adorn and beautify the character and life of her sex, rendering her lovely and beloved by all. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1861, under the ministry of Bro. W. B. Lewis, and lived a consistent member of the same until called by the great Head of the Church unto and triumphant to take her position in the heavenly company. Her last sickness was of several months' duration, constant and severe pain keeping her confined to her room; all of which she bore with a degree of patience which is unusual. She knew her end was approaching, and although she desired to live, yet she was willing to die. Her feelings, doubtless, were: "To live is Christ, to die is gain." When conversed with about her condition, she seemed altogether satisfied about her acceptance with God, assuring all that she was going to pass from earth to heaven, or, to apply her own term, "going home." She seemed to view the dissolution of the spirit and body only as a journey to be accomplished; called relatives and friends around and bid them meet her in heaven. Addressing herself to her only brother, she said: "Don't weep for me when I am gone." When asked by her uncle, the morning she died, if she still saw her way clear, she replied: "O yes." Finally she exhorted those about her by saying: "Put your trust in God; he will help you." At last she called her relatives to her bedside, took them by the hand, and bid them good-by. She exclaimed, "I am going home, Buddy," with a tone of sweetness which expressed volumes. Soon after she passed away, without a struggle or a groan, while soft and serene as the sweet-sounding notes of incense upon the dying breeze.

D. A. G., Her Pastor.

MRS. ELIZABETH G. TAYLOR was born in ——— county, Georgia, March 6, 1801, and was married to Elias Taylor, in the same city and State, June 23, 1825. She moved to Butler county, Alabama, in 1821, and settled in Holmes county, Mississippi, in 1835, where she died in the residence of her son, Dr. W. Taylor, in Goodman, Mississippi, February 4, 1872.

Sister Taylor was the mother of a large family, to whom she was most devotedly attached, whose care she always felt, and to whom her memory is very precious. Her husband had preceded her to the rest on high about eleven years, dying in Goodman in 1861; for in her dying moments she was surrounded by nearly all her children, a wish she had often expressed.

She lived in Holmes county, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Richland for more than thirty-five years. Here she enjoyed the confidence and esteem of a large circle of friends; here her influence and example were extensively felt for good, and here her loss is deeply deplored.

She was a woman of very decided religious character. Converted early in life, she was a Christian and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for more than half a century. Her conviction for sin was deep, thorough and agonizing. Her conversion was marked and decided, the evidence was clear and powerful, and its impressions vivid and lasting. Her religious life was characterized by an earnest desire to be saved from sin, to enjoy the full rest of faith, and consecrate herself to God. She was strongly attached to the church, loved the communion and fellowship of saints, and rejoiced in the prosperity of Christ's kingdom. Her religion was to her a source of happiness and enjoyment, often causing her to rejoice under its divine influence.

Sister Taylor had nearly completed her seventy-first year, and went down to the grave gradually sinking under the weight of years and the wear of life, rather than the effects of disease. During her declining days, during which her course was well-nigh finished, and that she was descending to the valley of death, she examined her state of preparation for that event. While she realized no sense of condemnation, there were not those feelings of joy and triumph she looked for on her near approach to death. To one who had during life received such a large measure of the witness of the Spirit, and had so often rejoiced under the divine influence, this became a matter of trial and discouragement. She feared there was darkness ahead, enshrouding the entrance to the tomb. But she was not long left in this state of doubt. As she neared the grave, faith increased, the light shone forth, and all doubts and fears subsided. She felt peace and joy, and triumphed over all her fears. Having accomplished her threescore and ten, and life's duty done, its course fulfilled, she died quietly, peacefully and triumphantly. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

R. J. JONES.

REV. THOMAS GREEN died at his residence on Skelly Island, February 4, 1872, after a brief illness. He was born in South Carolina, June 14, 1794. But little is known of him until found in the army, in the war of 1812. He was in several naval engagements with the enemy, and was in the battle of New Orleans, January, 1815; was one of the six that were wounded, a musket ball having passed through his thigh, running a very narrow risk of his life; but Providence favored him, and he soon recovered. The war being over, as soon as he recovered he went back to South Carolina to visit his parents, from whom he had rather stolen away, as he was not old enough for military duty. He afterward emigrated to Tennessee, and from thence to East Feliciana parish, in this State, where, on the fourth of April, 1818, he was married to Miss Tabitha R., daughter of Rev. Zedekiah Ledbetter.

The precise time of his conversion is not known, but it is supposed to be before his connection with the army, as his wife says "he was religious before she ever saw him." He was licensed as an exhorter in the Methodist Episcopal Church, April 28, 1827, and to preach soon after. He was ordained a deacon by Bishop Emory on the seventeenth of November, 1833, and an elder by Bishop Andrew, December 13, 1837, in Natchez, Mississippi. In the spring of 1842 he moved to Tensas parish, having started for Texas; but Providence ordered otherwise, as the "Macedonian cry" came to him from Skelly Island: "Come over and help us." He regarded this as an opening of Providence for their salvation, and the trip to Texas was abandoned, and in 1844 he moved to Skelly Island, where he remained until death relieved him from toil and suffering. Although he did not belong to the Annual Conference, yet his labors were by its direction; for many years filling large circuits, traversing overflowed districts, which, at certain seasons of the year, are almost impassable; yet through and over them he went, never failing to meet the people, sometimes riding for hours in wet clothing, after swimming bayous. Thus amid toil and suffering he went forth sowing the good seed of the kingdom, and organizing churches in these lands.

For several years, toward the close of his life, his labors were mostly confined to the colored people of Skelly Island. Here his labors were abundant, taking a great interest in the proper instruction of this people since their freedom, as he and others felt that he was specially capacitated for that work. It now numbers about three hundred, with three local preachers, one of whom is now pastor in charge of the circuit. He was one of "nature's natural orators." He had one of the finest voices I ever listened to. He had it under the best control; even when his strength would fail from the abundance of labors, yet his voice was as clear and shrill as ever. His style was rather argumentative, smooth, natural, and he generally carried you along with him so easily and pleasantly that it appeared to be natural for you to see as he saw, and believe as he believed. The Holy Ghost inspiring and directing every word. Behold the hosts of Israel to victory in many a spiritual contest; was ever found in the thickest of the fight, and was crowned with the greater glory when he fell. May we emulate his heroic faith and virtue; for "His closing scene was virtue's grand display;

Death op'd the portals of eternal day.
And broke at once the kindred sordid ties,
While shouting angels hailed him to the skies."

CISTERN MAKER.—Richard Broderick, 132 Julia street, is prepared to fill all orders for cisterns in city or country. See advertisement in another column, or call at his shop.

STEAM SAW MILLS.—There is no more worthy, honest and prompt man in any branch of business than William Otis, of Mobile. We call special attention to his advertisement elsewhere.

HIDES, WOOL, PELTRIES, FURS, ETC. B. L. Mann & Co., 103 Peters street, call attention to their branch of business in an advertisement in our columns to-day, to which we invite special attention. There is no reason why New Orleans may not have a vast and remunerative trade in their line.

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.—The attention of the afflicted is called to the advertisement, in this issue, of Duconge's Sirup, for colds, catarrh, laryngitis, etc.

UNDERTAKER.—In all our acquaintance we have not known a more prompt and obliging undertaker than T. W. Bothick, 271 Camp street, whose advertisement appears in another column. His manner of conducting funerals and transacting business in his line has about it that quietness, urbanity and gentility especially appropriate on such occasions.

THE ST. CHARLES NURSERY.—Messrs. James Waldo & Co., by their enterprise and industry, are contributing largely to conserve a most important interest of the community. While fruits add to the wealth as well as the luxury of a country, the effect of flowers, shrubs and ornamental trees upon the taste and tempers of the people is refining and harmonizing. Give them a call at 122 Camp street.

EYESIGHT.—The proper and scientific choice of spectacles is of the greatest importance to persons requiring them. The hap-hazard manner in which many spectacle dealers make their selections is very often attended by the worst consequences, often ruining eyes which might, by scientific and skillful treatment, have been preserved for years. Mr. William Bohne, 108 Carondelet street, is a practical and scientific optician, having studied in Europe. We advise our readers who need such advice to call on Mr. Bohne. His stock of all articles in his line at the recent Louisiana State Fair was by far the best there, if not the best ever made at any fair in the South.

WE ARE pleased to notice in the list of awards at our recent State Fair the liberal manner in which our enterprising neighbors were noticed. We allude, of course, to Messrs. Kursheedt & Bienvenu, whose advertisement appears in another column. Gold, silver and bronze medals, with diplomas and blue ribbons, for best display and finest assortment of mantles made of marble, slate, iron, wood, etc., are evidences of the superiority of their extensive and varied stock in that department; while we can assure our readers that none are better qualified to fill all orders for anything in the line of builders' hardware and material at reasonable prices, and of first-class goods. Send your orders or give them a call, and you will be convinced.

VALUABLE IMPLEMENT.—The sixth grand State Fair terminated on Tuesday, and among the many premiums awarded we have seen nothing more worthy than an unpretending implement entered by Messrs. Marshall & Hoard, of Ohio, for hand culture, which is applicable particularly to gardeners, nurserymen and rice planters. This implement does the work, readily and easily, of five men with hoes, and in a much better manner; enabling the cultivator of vegetables to effectually stir the soil at the proper time, preventing the growth of weeds and grass, and keeping the earth loose and in order. We suggest to the readers of the ADVOCATE, who cultivate their own gardens, the great advantage in using this labor-saving machine, which is simple of construction, ever ready for use, and will save its value each season by its economy. It is on exhibition at No. 7 Carondelet street, and Bawn & Thorpe, of Corsicana, are agents for the State of Texas.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Avoid Consumption.—No enemy to the human race is more to be dreaded and is more insidious in its approaches than the 100 fatal destroyer of health and happiness of myriads—"Consumption in its ghastly form." The duty of all is to guard against its first advances. This may be done by the timely use of DR. TUTT'S EXPECTORANT.

BOSTON, February 2, 1870.

DR. TUTT—Dear Sir: Will you please inform me at what druggist, in New York, I can get your Expectorant, as I can use some of it to advantage, having seen the effect of it on a friend of mine? I am fully satisfied that it has but to be tried to establish its merits. It works like magic. What is your wholesale price, delivered in New York? Let me know where it can be had for the present in New York, and I will communicate further with you at another time. Very truly yours, W. H. BARRON, my2 1t 96 Summer street.

Dr. Tutt's Hair Dye is Harmless.

Caution!—Every genuine box of Dr. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bears the signature of Fleming Brothers, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and their private United States stamp. ☞ Take no other; the market is full of imitations.

It is the popular verdict that people who have been accustomed to the use of Bitters or Cordials are obliged eventually to resort to McLane's Liver Pills for permanent relief. ap25 6m

A Warning.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a graveyard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many graveyards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility, or similar functional derangements, to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

TO THE AFFLICTED.
The most salutary and efficient remedy against all affections of the breast, lungs and throat is decidedly

Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup.

Many medicines of doubtful virtue have been pressed upon the public, and kept up for a while by persistent advertising and humbuggery; but Duconge's Pectoral Balsamic Sirup is an old friend to the invalid. It has now been in use for the last forty years, and its popularity is still increasing.

It is sovereign in colds, coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, inflammation of the throat, laryngitis, spitting of blood, whooping cough, etc.; rheumatism, diarrhea or dysentery.

SHALL THE BABY STAY?

In a little brown house,
With scarce room for a mouse,
Came, with morning's first ray
One remarkable day.
(Though who told her the way
I am sure I can't say)
A young lady so wee
That you scarcely could see
Her small speck of a nose;
And, to speak of her toes,
Though it seems hardly fair,
Since they surely were there,
Keep them covered we must;
You must take them on trust.

Now this little brown house,
With scarce room for a mouse,
Was full of small boys,
With their books and their toys,
Their wild bustle and noise.

"My dear lads," quoth papa,
"We've too many by far;
Tell us what can we do
With this damsel so blue?
We've no room for her here,
So to me 'tis quite clear,
Though it gives me great pain,
I must leave her again
With her white blanket round her,
Just as Nurse Russell found her."

Said stout little Ned:
"I'll stay all day in bed,
Squeezed up nice and small,
Very close to the wall."
Then spoke Tommie: "I'll go
To the cellar below:
I'll just travel about,
But not try to get out
Till you're all fast asleep,
Then up stairs I will creep:
And so quiet I'll be You'll not dream it is me."

Then flaxen-haired Will:
"I'll be dreffully still:
On the back stairs I'll stay,
Way off, out of way."

Master Johany, the fair,
Shook his bright, curly hair:
"Here's a nice place for me,
Dear papa, do you see?
I just fit in so tight
I could stand here all night."
And a niche in the wall
Held his figure so small.

Quoth the father: "Well done,
My brave darlings, come on!
Here's a shoulder for Will,
Pray sit still, sir, sit still!
Valiant Thomas, for thee
A good seat on my knee.
And Edward, thy brother,
Can perch on the other.
Baby John, take my back;
Now, who says we can't pack?

"So Love gives us room,
And our birdie shall stay;
We'll keep her, my boys,
Till God takes her away."

ST. SEBALD.

BY MARGARET BOURNE.

It was a sharp, frosty day in January. The newly-fallen snow glistened so brightly in the sunshine as almost to put one's eyes out. Warmly-clad people looked exhilarated, and horses tossed their heads and champed their bits in the best of spirits. The shops were gay; dress goods, fancy goods, toys, candies, books—everything that was to be sold crowded forward and looked out of the windows to tempt passers-by. Everybody seemed in a hurry, for the cold made loitering anything but pleasant.

Did I say everybody? That was a mistake. One little boy, whose ragged clothes scarcely covered his poor, shivering body, walked along very slowly, often stopping to look up at the awning frames and gas posts. None of the pretty things in the windows attracted his attention. Frequently some one in the throng of people stumbled against him and apologized or grumbled, according to his disposition.

"What are you looking at, my little man?" inquired a voice.

The boy turned and saw a gentleman with kind eyes and pleasant face, but he did not answer till the question was repeated. Then he said: "I was looking for icicles, sir."

"Icicles! I should think those the last things you would want on such a day as this."

"I want some to carry home. It wouldn't be stealing to take icicles, would it, sir?"

"Stealing? No. But why do you want them?"

"To make a fire; we are so cold, sir."

"A fire! My poor child, are you crazy? Icicles do not burn."

"O sir, you know they burned for St. Sebald, and my mother is just as good, I know."

"What do you mean?" said Mr. Graham, more and more puzzled. "Won't you tell me?"

Richie looked up into the kind face that was regarding him with so much interest, and said: "Yes, sir, I will tell you, and perhaps you will help me find some that I can reach."

"I promise to help you all I can," said Mr. Graham, who was much impressed by the sad, earnest face of the child.

"Well, sir, father has been sick ever since he came to America last summer, and things have gone badly with us. Jamie died; he was my older brother, sir, so there's only me and baby left. Mother sews for the shops, but she can't always get work, and then we are hungry and cold. She can warm baby in her arms or put him by father in the bed, but I am too big for that."

"Poor boy! perhaps you are hungry now."

"O yes, sir; but most I am cold."

Mr. Graham took the frost-bitten little fingers in his hand and led the child to a restaurant, when he ordered some oyster soup. The waiters stared in surprise when they saw ragged Richie brought to one of the neat tables, but they obeyed Mr. Graham's order.

Richie ate the oysters with keener appetite than any of you little boys and girls have ever known. The color came back faintly to his white cheeks, and he looked much less miserable. Then Mr. Graham said: "Now, Richie, tell me what you wanted icicles for."

"Oh! I forgot everything, the oysters were so good. Well, sir, this morning father said he had better die, for he was only making it worse for us. Mother cried at first and said it broke her heart to have him talk so. Then she wiped away the tears and said it was wrong to be discouraged—that God would take care of us. Then she took off her petticoat and spread it over father to keep him warm; for he is very cold now the fever has left him," said Richie with the maturity that comes to children who are schooled in suffering.

"That is a sad story, Richie; but did your father want icicles to warm him?"

"Yes, sir; or at least I did."

"Well, go on with your story."

"Mother often tells us stories to make the time pass when we are cold and hungry. Miss Elinor used to tell them to the children in the nursery when mother was nurse before she was married. Mother remembers a great many, and we like to hear them over and over."

"And is one of the stories about icicles warming people?"

"Yes, sir. Mother told us that one this morning. Shall I tell it to you, sir? It is a beautiful story."

"Do, my boy."

"Well, sir, there was once a good man; oh, very, very good he was. He lived in a miserable little hut in the woods, and ate berries or anything he could find. All his time he spent in praying, and if he could ever do a kindness to anybody he thought it a special blessing from God. Often all night he would pray without stopping, unless he was very sleepy, and then he would torture himself to wake himself up. Miss Elinor said he was mistaken in doing so, but he thought it would please God, so it showed he was good when he did it. Do you not think he must have been very good not to mind hunger and cold?"

"Indeed I do, Richie. It must be very hard to suffer so much."

"Yes, indeed it is, sir," said Richie, with an earnestness that told of his own experience.

"One day in winter it was bitterly cold. His fingers were so numb he could hardly turn the leaves of his prayer book. So he thought he must have a fire. He went out and looked all around, but the snow had covered the leaves and twigs, so there was nothing to gather. He thought it would be stealing to break off branches from the trees, although he knew the lord who owned the woods would have given him some if he had asked him. At last he gathered a number of bright, glistening icicles that hung from the trees, saying: 'The good God can make these burn.' He took them into his hut and put them in his fireplace. That was faith, sir, mother says. Suddenly the flames burst from them, and they crackled like wood, and the warmth made the hut as comfortable as possible. He died after awhile, and was buried in Nuremburg, an old, old city in Germany, sir. There is a beautiful carved shrine there to his memory, and he is called Saint Sebald."

"You thought God would make icicles burn for you too?"

"Oh, no, sir, not for me. I am not good. But father says mother is a saint, so I thought they would burn for her. Do you think they would, sir?"

"No, Richie, that old story is not true. But we will see if we can find something that we know will burn; and send it to her."

We may be very sure that Mr. Graham took good care of this family, whose story came to him on that cold January day. And Richie learned to trust in God, even though his faith was not rewarded by seeing icicles burn.—Christian Weekly.

DOTTIE'S TEMPERANCE SERMON.

Well, well! what did ail Dottie? She had positively refused to kiss her father for a whole week. He went to his work very early in the morning, long before her blue eyes were open, and did not come home till dark. Dottie always watched for him and ran to meet him, and when he came in would sit on his knee; but when he tried to kiss her she would shake her head so emphatically as to set the sunny curls dancing about her eyes, and then tuck her rosy face down on his shoulder.

At last he grew almost angry, and one evening he put her down, saying sternly: "I won't have any little girl that does not love me."

Dottie went to her mother with a grieved look, and tears stealing into her eyes.

"I do love my papa ever so much—five bushels!" And by her childish mode of measuring affection this seemed immense.

"Then why did you treat him so?" asked her mother. "He does not see his little daughter all day; and when he comes home so tired she refuses to kiss him. Why is it?"

"Because, because—" and here Dottie stopped.

"Speak out, darling, don't be afraid; or suppose you whisper it to me; now—" And she bent down her head.

Dottie put both chubby arms around her mother's neck, and putting a rosebud of a mouth close to her mother's ear, and in what she supposed was a whisper, said:

"He drink some medicine or somethin' in the even' time before he gets home; and it must be dreadful stuff, for it makes me feel sickish to smell it when he puts his face close to mine—and that's all; and I do love papa." And she sobbed as if her loving little heart would break.

As the wife's glance met that of her husband, his face crimsoned with a flush of shame. The secret was out. For the week past he had been in the habit of stopping a few moments at the house of a friend, who had just returned from a voyage to Europe, and had a great many interesting things to relate. He always took a glass of something strong at night, and insisted that Dottie's father should drink with him; and that was how it happened. But he never touched a drop afterward; the pure caresses of his innocent child were of more value to him than even the good will of his friend, and the little Dot never had cause to refuse him his evening kiss.

"Papa must be cured, I think," said she one day; "for he never drinks any more of that horrible medicine."

And he was truly cured.—Good Words.

FAITH cannot live settled; she must hold her life in her hand; must point to Jesus, and lead the way; be in the attitude of patient waiting; must be a bird of passage, refusing to build the nest in so cold a clime.

The Farm and Garden.

BEE-KEEPING IN THE SOUTH.

We had the pleasure of attending the American Bee-Keepers' Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, in December last, and met over two hundred extensive cultivators of the honey-bee from the United States and Canada, and only three or four from the South. We met one man there from Minnesota who cleared over $3,000 last year from the sale of honey alone. The president of the convention, Mr. M. Quinby, sold about $2,500 worth of honey, the crop from two hundred and fifty hives, last year. We were especially pleased with J. E. Heatherington, of New York—a young man in whom we were told that we could put entire confidence. He is, perhaps, the largest honey-raiser in the United States. He owns about nine hundred colonies of bees, and he told us that he sold last season, in New York city, twenty-five thousand pounds of box honey, which netted him within a fraction of twenty-five cents per pound, and three thousand pounds of extracted honey, at fifteen cents per pound—making the neat little sum of $6,700.

These are not extraordinary instances, by any means, for the yield per colony of Heatherington's bees was not up to the standard of a well-conducted apiary in a good locality, but it is enough, we think, to show that bee-keeping will pay, and pay well in the North, and we firmly believe that much greater results could be attained in the South.

It is a matter of great astonishment to Northern bee-keepers why it is that our Southern people take so little interest in this pleasant and profitable pursuit.

The South, with its mild, moist climate, of early spring and late fall, is the real Eldorado of the bee. A good colony of Italian bees here, in a good movable comb hive, will give two hundred pounds of extracted honey, or one hundred pounds of box honey, on an average, every season. Smart Yankee bee-keepers are beginning to find out the great advantages of the South as a bee country, and they will soon be down upon us in droves, with movable comb hives, Italian bees, mel-extractors, etc., to help save some of the tons of honey that is wasted every year, solely for the want of bees to gather it. Must we reject everything that is new, without a fair trial, simply because we cannot see how it can be done, and for the fear of being humbugged.

Bee-keeping at this time is as certain as any other business—no luck at all about it, any more than raising good corn or cotton; and the best of it all is that it takes little or no capital to commence it, thus putting it within the reach of the poor. It is a business peculiarly fitted for women, and when they have taken hold of it in earnest they have always been successful.—Correspondent of the Field and Factory.

NOTES ABOUT BEES.

QUEEN BEES.—It is well known to breeders of poultry that the fertility of a hen decreases with age, until at length she may become entirely barren. By the same law the fecundity of the queen bee ordinarily diminishes after she has entered her third year.—Longstroth.

TIGHT HIVES.—A suitable abode for the honey-bee is a hive perfectly air-tight, except at one place, and that should be so that the bee-keeper can enlarge or diminish it at will. Bees do not thrive in a hive where there is a current of air passing through it. They stop all holes at the top if they can.

FERTILE WORKERS.—It is now thought by some of the most observant scientific apiarians in Germany that fertile workers occur only in hives containing bees that were still in the larvæ state while queen-raising was in progress in the colony. It is not supposed that all workers bred in such conditions became capable of laying eggs; but that all that do become so qualified must have been reared in such circumstances.

CAREFUL EXPERIMENTS show that pure air is necessary not only for the respiration of the mature bees, but for the hatching of the eggs and developing the larvæ—a fine netting of air vessels enveloping the eggs, and the cells of the larvæ being closed with a covering filled with air-holes.

NEVER blow your breath on your bees. They will sting you directly if you do.

BURNT SOIL AS MANURE.

Doubtless our readers have observed the notices which have appeared in the Rural Carolinian, and elsewhere, of a patented process for making a manure called by the patentees Kapnophite. The process consists substantially in burning pine straw, leaves, trash or other vegetable matter under a layer of soil; in other words, in burning soil by means of some more combustible material upon which the soil has been thrown. We have used this manure with great benefit, and do not think its value can be successfully questioned. We had made and used it long before Kapnophite was heard of, as hundreds of other farmers had done before us. The introducers of the new fertilizers have done the agricultural public a service by calling more general attention to the value of ashes and burnt soil, but, with due respect to the Patent Office, we must say that we cannot see on what grounds a patent could be granted for an old and well-known process, and farmers made to pay a royalty for making use of it, any more than for making compost heaps or using marsh mud.—Rural Carolinian.

THE brain of a horse seems to entertain but one thought at a time; for this reason continued whipping is out of the question, and only confirms his stubborn resolve. But if you can by any means change the direction of his mind, give him a new subject to think of, nine times out of ten you will have no further trouble in starting him. As simple a trick as a little pepper, aloes or the like, thrown back on his tongue, will often succeed in turning attention to the taste in his mouth.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Massachusetts Plowman gives the following as his method of preventing the onion maggot from destroying the onion: "When the onion is up three to five inches make a strong solution of salt water, and apply with common garden water-pot, nearly scalding hot; repeat in ten days. With this application I have saved my onions, and had good crops when my neighbors had theirs all destroyed by the maggot."

WHATEVER plan is pursued, the surface of the barnyard should receive no water save that which falls directly upon it from the clouds. Surface gutters should protect it against the flow of water from other ground, and the roof should be supplied with eave troughs, discharging into cisterns or outside of the yards.

ASA BALDWIN, Chatauqua county, New York, says that fifty years ago a very lousy cow of his ate ten or twelve onions, and in fifteen hours afterward the lice had disappeared. He has tried the same remedy many times since, with the same result in each case.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

WORTH KNOWING.—Our lady readers, says the Southern Farmer, will thank us for the insertion of the following useful article: "To Remove the Skin from Peaches.—Every one knows there is a great loss of pulp in paring peaches with a knife, to obviate which the following has been suggested for treating them: Make lye as strong as possible of wood ashes and soft water. Fill a kettle with the lye, and when boiling rapidly drop in twelve or fifteen peaches, and take out immediately and immerse them in a pail of cold water. Take one in your hand, and the rind will slip off entirely, leaving a round, beautiful yellow ball; throw it immediately into another pail of water, and so proceed until all are done. This process will not injure the flavor of the finest peach, and once tried, the old-fashioned way of peeling with a knife will not be again adopted. If the lye is not strong enough, put into the kettle two dippers full of clean wood ashes. This is an excellent way of ridding small onions of their jackets preparatory to pickling them; also for peeling tomatoes."

We ourself, having done this thing to peaches year after year, know it is true. We used a coarse flax towel, after dropping in cold water, to rub all the furze off; then drop in clear water.

POLISHING SHIRTS.—The Scientific American says: Put a little common wax in the starch, say two ounces to the pound; then if you use any thin patent starch, be sure you use it warm, otherwise the wax will get cold and gritty and spot your linen, giving it the appearance of being stained with grease. Starch the fronts and wristbands as stiff as you can. Always starch twice—that is, starch and dry, then starch again. Iron your shirt in the usual way, making the linen nice and firm, but without any attempt at a good finish; don't lift the plaits; your shirt is now ready for polishing, but you ought to have a board the same size as a common shirt board, made of hard wood, and covered with only one ply of plain cotton cloth. Put this board into the breast of your shirt, then take a polishing iron, which is flat and beveled a little at one end—polish gently with the beveled part, taking care not to drive the linen up into wave-like blisters; of course this requires a little practice, but if you are careful and persevere, in a short time you will be able to give that enamel-like finish which seems to be so much wanted.

REV. GEO. M. EVERHART, D. D., Rector, formerly president of the Huntsville (Alabama) Female College.

RT. REV. WM. E. ARMITAGE, D. D., Visitor.

Kemper Hall, a first-class institution for Girls and Young Ladies, elegantly equipped and appointed, offers, in every department, superior advantages. The buildings and grounds are everything that could be desired. The location, overlooking Lake Michigan, affords a view unusually picturesque. The climate, summer and winter, is equally good. Girls from the South may here have their health permanently established.

THE CONDITIONS.—There are no extra charges. The rates published include the entire expense. Ten dollars entrance fee paid but once, to secure the place. For board, laundry, ordinary tuition, music, modern languages, Latin, drawing, and the use of piano, models, and text books, $450 per scholastic year—$300 payable September 11, the beginning of the scholastic year, and $150 April 1, the beginning of the spring term. For little girls under eleven years old, $300—$200 payable September 11, and $100 payable April 1.

Pupils from the South can be accommodated during the summer vacation at $7 a week. mh21 3m

SCIENTIFIC.

A METEORIC STONE.—A large aerolite, weighing some hundred pounds or more, fell a few days since on the prairie, about a hundred miles west of Atchison, presenting all the peculiarities of these singular visitors to our earth. The favorite theory is that these meteoric stones, composed of silex, magnesia, sulphur, iron, nickel, and some traces of chrome, are thrown off from the moon by volcanic action, and, by being projected beyond the sphere of the planet's attraction, may be brought within the influence of the earth, and thus drawn toward it. Their lunar origin is by no means a violent presumption; for the degree of force required to eject a body beyond the limit of the moon's attraction would not be greater than four times that of gunpowder; whereas we know that volcanic force, as exhibited by terrestrial volcanoes, is often much greater than this.

A WONDERFUL BRIDGE.—The bridge now in process of erection across the Mississippi, at St. Louis, is one of the wonders of the age. It is to be a tubular, cast steel, arch bridge, supported by the abutments and two piers; the latter are 515 feet apart, and 499 feet each from its nearest abutment, making three spans of about 500 feet each. Its greatest span is the same as that of the Kuhlenberg bridge over the Leck, an arm of the Rhine, in Holland. Telford's suspension bridge across the Menai Straits has a span of 570 feet. The Victoria tubular iron bridge of Montreal exceeds this greatly in length, being 5,600 feet, (one mile and a quarter,) but it rests upon twenty-four piers, and its spans are mainly only 275 feet. The suspension bridge at Niagara spans 821 feet, and is 245 feet above the water. The East river bridge will span 1,600 feet, at a height midway of 130 feet.—Cincinnati Gazette.

A GRAND OLD HYMN.

Few hymns for the last hundred years have been more frequently sung at times of special spiritual refreshing than that beginning:

"Come, ye sinners, poor and needy."

It was written under the inspiration of a very remarkable religious experience. Its author was Joseph Hart. He was born in London in 1712. He was liberally educated, and commenced life as a teacher. At times, in early manhood, he was deeply interested in the subject of religion, and led a restrained and prayerful life. But he fell a victim to temptation, engaged in many evil practices, and gained an unenviable notoriety for his disregard of decency and religious truth. "I was," he said, "in an abominable state—a loose backslider, and an audacious apostate." He published heathen translations of a pernicious tendency, and a wild, speculative work entitled "The Unreasonableness of Religion."

His conscious errors and lapses were followed by terrible compunctions of conscience, and these inward tortures, which gave him no peace, led at last to his reformation. He now began to seek the Savior he had professed to despise. After a period of great mental distress he met with a change of heart, and experienced an abiding sense of the pardoning love of God. This happy change was wrought by his receiving a profound impression of the sufferings of Christ. He says: "The week before Easter, 1757, I had such an amazing view of the agony of Christ in the garden as I know not how well to describe. I was lost in wonder and adoration, and the impression was too deep, I believe, ever to be obliterated. I shall say no more of this, but only remark that, notwithstanding all that is talked about the sufferings of Jesus, none can know anything of them but by the Holy Ghost. It was then I composed the first part of the hymn beginning:

Come, all ye chosen saints of God,
That long to feel the cleansing blood."

This experience he has indirectly, but very vividly, impressed upon his well-known hymn:

View him prostrate in the garden:
On the ground your Maker lies:
On the bloody tree behold him.
Hear him cry before he dies.
"It is finished!"
Sinner, will not this suffice?

In 1759 he commenced preaching and composing devotional poetry. This year he published a volume entitled "Hymns Composed on Various Subjects." It was popular in its day, and passed through many editions. Mr. Hart died May 24, 1768.—Congregationalist.

HAVE you not often wondered at the human utterances of the divine word? It thunders like God, and yet weeps like man. It seems impossible that anything should be too little for the word of God to notice, or too bitter, or even too sinful for that book to overlook. It touches humanity at all points. Everywhere it is a personal, familiar acquaintance, and seems to say to itself: "Shall I hide this thing from Abraham; my friend?"—Spurgeon.

"TO-MORROW is the road that thousands travel to the bottomless gulf of never."

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND
ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of Text-School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well-known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS
COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DE VERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy
FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as
G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,
and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

Caution to the Public.—Be sure to get the right article.
Among the references are Hon. S. Belden, Attorney General; Hon. C. O. Dugue, Ex-Judge District Court; General Thomas M. Scott, of J. Pinckney Smith & Co.; Rev. L. P. Hentz, Lutheran Church; Captain J. d. Rivera, foreman of the Bulletin office, and many others. no30 6m

MISCELLANEOUS.

SWINTON'S CONDENSED
SCHOOL HISTORY.
(From the Virginia Educational Journal.)
Mr. Swinton's reputation led us to examine this book. What is of most importance in the work is its extreme fairness. It is vastly superior, in this respect, to any history issued at the North that we have seen. Where accuracy seems almost impossible, he comes nearer to the truth than the others.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.
ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."
All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.
You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.
Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.).

We have again to notice only a moderate degree of animation in the general market. We hear complaints of increasing dullness from several branches of the wholesale trade, but a moderate business has been done in sales to country merchants and city dealers. The business of the past season has been of fair extent, but at light profits, the prices asked by importers and others being so low as to make this the best purchasing market for country merchants.

The weather has been clear and warm, and highly favorable to the growing crops. We now hear of few or no complaints from the country, except that in some districts showers are much needed for the soil baked by the hot sun. The favorable change has no doubt been used to the best advantage, in order that cotton may, if possible, recover from its previous backwardness. The accounts relative to sugar are still discouraging.

The river is 3 feet 4 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-sixth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales	3,050
Lake		8
Florida		2
Mobile		569
Texas		24
Total		3,653

On Saturday the movement exhibited but little spirit and the sales did not exceed 1,400 bales, but factors adhered with unabated stringency to their previous pretensions, and it was difficult to buy either good ordinary or low middling at the inside rates for those grades. There was no material change on Monday, although an advance of ⅛c. at New York in the morning and a further ⅛c. subsequently were calculated to stiffen prices. The sales were confined to 1,300 bales. On Tuesday the demand continued moderate, but factors evinced no disposition to stimulate it by concessions, and 1,250 bales changed hands at full prices for the medium and higher grades. The poorer qualities were dull and drooping, but no sales transpired indicative of any change in quotations.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 908,973 bales; against 1,284,585 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 1,007,039 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 115,021 to France, and a decrease of 699,426 to Great Britain, and of 264,516 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	19½ @ 21
Good ordinary	21¼ @ 21¾
Low middling	22¼ @ 22¾
Middling	23 @ 23¼
Strict middling	23¼ @ 23½
Good middling	23½ @ —

SUGAR.—Supplies from plantation have come in more freely since our last review. They have met with a pretty good demand, and were sold at 3¾@5c. for inferior, 7⅛c. for common, 8¼c. for fair, 8¾@9¼c. for good fair, 9¼@9½c. for fully fair, 9¾c. for strictly fully fair, 10¼@10⅜c. for strictly prime, and 10¾@11¼c. for yellow clarified. Some prime, in the sheds, sold at 10c., and choice at 10¾c. ℔ lb.

MOLASSES.—The small lots coming in from plantation are disposed of as received. They were sold on Saturday and Monday at 25@38c. for good to common fermenting, 40c. for fair fermenting, 48c. for prime fermenting, and 50c. for reboiled.

CORN.—On Tuesday 6,000 sacks sold at 70c. for yellow mixed, some white on private terms, and 72@73c. for white.

OATS.—We note a scarcity, with a good demand and an advance of 4c. ℔ bushel since our last review. On Saturday 1,000 sacks sold at 58c. ℔ bushel. On Monday 200 sacks sold at 60c., and on Tuesday 600 sacks at 62c.

BRAN.—On Monday 300 sacks sold at $1.50 ℔ 100 lbs., and on Tuesday 500 sacks at $1.45@$1.60 ℔ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Monday 50 bbls. M. O. sold at $13.50, and 100 and 500 bbls. mess, on the landing, at $13.75 ℔ bbl. On Tuesday the market was very firm but quiet, and mess was held strongly at $14 ℔ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday there was an active inquiry at advancing prices, and some 80 casks sold, mostly in small lots, at 5⅝c. for shoulders, 7⅝c. for clear rib sides, and 8¼c. for clear sides. Shoulders were quoted at 5¾c., clear rib sides 7⅞c., and clear sides 8¼c.

HAMS.—On Monday 35 tierces sold at 11⅛c., and 10 tierces at 11½c. ℔ lb. On Tuesday 50 tierces sugar-cured sold at 11¾c.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Monday 16 casks and 24 boxes shoulders sold at 5c., and 20 boxes and 22 casks clear rib sides at 6¼c. ℔ lb. On Tuesday shoulders were held at 5½c., and were jobbing at that price.

LARD.—On Tuesday 200 tierces refined sold at 9¼c., and 55 do. at 9⅜c. Packers' in tierces is now quoted at 9¼c., refined 9¾c. ℔ lb. Kegs are quoted at 10¼c.

BREAKFAST BACON.—On Saturday 10 boxes choice Western sold at 10c. ℔ lb. Northern is quoted at 10½@11c.

BEEF.—Texas commands $11@$12, Western $16.50 ℔ bbl.

BUTTER.—Choice continues scarce and in demand.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 112⅝@112⅝, (against 112⅝ at New York,) and closed at 112¼@112½, (against 112⅝ at New York.)

The sales of silver enhanced $500 in American half dollars on Saturday at 109, and $400 on Monday at the same.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE UTICA STEAM ENGINE CO.,

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN, Agent, NO. 9 UNION STREET, New Orleans.

Formerly WOOD & MANN.

These Engines are so well and favorably known that a description of them here is not deemed necessary.

They are EQUALED by FEW, SURPASSED by NONE, perfect in workmanship, complete in appointments, safe, simple and substantial. Every boiler is practically tested before leaving the factory. By the use of a CIRCULATING WATER BOTTOM around and underneath the furnace, which lessens the

RISK FROM FIRE,

they are particularly adapted for GINNING COTTON. Engines of all sizes, at prices which challenge comparison for equal size of steam cylinder and measurements of boiler. A full stock of these Engines will be kept constantly on hand by the undersigned, who has been appointed general agent.
